Popular Young Lady Weds Former Vocational Teacher

One of the prettiest weddings ever held in Sudan was solemnized Tuesday evening at the home of J. M. Carruth when Miss Carrie Lee Carruth was united in marriage to Mr. John G. Bishop of Olney, Texas. The Carruth home was festive with Shasta daisies and ferns and the ceremony was read by Rev. Saffle, of Plainview, in a bower of the green and white which made a fitting background for the bridal party.

Preceding the ceremony Mrs. John Dean sang "I love you truly", accompanied at the piano by Miss Claudia Lee Ledger. At the first strains of the Wedding march, played by Miss Ledger, the bridal party entered the living room led by Miss Walter Marie Carruth, sister of the bride, who wore pink and carried a silver basket filled with sweet peas and daisies. Miss Lillie Mae Carruth, the honored maid, was dressed in pale green and entered next followed by little Paulette Hay who carried the ring on a tiny white and pink pillow. Next came the bride, lovely in a gown of palest pink tulle over pink taffeta with silver slippers and flesh colored hose. The bridal party was met by the groom and Rev. Saffle in-the-living-room and a most impressive ceremony was performed.

After the ceremony punch was served to about twenty guests, and the young couple left immediately for Colorado, where they will spend a honeymoon.

Mr. Bishop, now of Olney, Texas, was agricultural advisor in the Sudan Schools two years and was well known throughout the community. It was with regret that Sudan lost him when he accepted his present position.

Mrs. Bishop is one of Sudan's most popular young ladies and was a member of the first graduating class of the Sudan High School. She attended the Texas Tech for a year and a half and taught at the Fairview school last year.

After their vacation in Colorado Mr. and Mrs. Bishop will be at home in Olney, Texas.—Contributed.

Quilting At The Home Of Mrs. McNeely

Last Friday afternoon Mrs. W.N. McNeely entertained with a quilting at her home in honor of Miss Carrie Lee Carruth whose marriage to Mr. J. G. Bishop was on July 24th.

The crowd was entertained by readings given by the children. At the close Mrs. Hay gave a reading announcing the date for the wedding and then told a story a quilt which was to be given to the one finishing first.

Miss Carruth won the quilt not knowing it was a surprise for her.

Ice cream and waffles were served to the following guests: Mesdames S. D. Hay, F. Z. Payne, W. A. Peachey, Joe Covington, W. V. Terry, J. R. Dean, and Misses Carrie Lee and Lillie Mae Carruth, Margaret and Katherine Dean, Paulette and Sherrill Hay, Helen Payne, and Vivien Covington, and Master Jr. Payne and Billy Joe Covington.—Contributed.

America Menaced By Immigration

Cincinnati, Ohio--"In fifty years from now, with little or no immigration, continental United States will have 200,000,000 of Souls," said George W. Bopem, of Columbus, formerly chairman of the Immigration Board at Washington and Ellis Island and an expert authority on the subject, in pointing out the danger that exists in the immigration of foreigners to this country even in the present restricted state. When this number is reached, he said further, "then the contest and struggle for existence here will be on in earnest. When that time comes 'America First' will call for more thoughtful consideration."

"Of our 16,000,000 of foreign-born, 8,000,000 are not naturalized," he said. "Seven millions are rated by the Public Health Service as having the mentality of children of eleven years or under--morons. Thirteen in every 100 are illiterate."

"We would do well to padlock the gates until we have Americanized and citizenized, such as we can, and then deport the 'slag.'"

Heavy Rains Fall Over This Section

Rain, varying from 2 1/2 inches to six inches, has fallen over this section since Saturday night. Crops were needing it badly, but considering the continued dry weather, were standing up well. The rains during the past week have insured a bumper crop of feed, and were received in time to get cotton up in good shape.

Miss Mabel Holt Becomes The Bride of Clint McGee

Miss Mabel Holt and Clint McGee both of Sudan, were married at the brides home Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. McGee is the daughter of A. M. Holt who has been a resident of Sudan for the past few years.

Mr McGee is a barber and has lived here for sometime.

Both of these young people have many friends here.

The bride was given a shower Monday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Earnest.

Olton--Substantial wheat crops are being harvested by farmers in this section.

Business Men's Meeting

Meeting of the Business Men's Association was held at the City Hall Tuesday night. After considering matters of general interest it was decided to hold a Trades Day for Sudan on August 20 at which time a special program with a list of prizes will be given. Program and Finance Committees were appointed and were instructed to get busy in preparing a program and premium list for the day.

Mr. and Mrs. I. G. Morrow, and Mr. Morrow's sister, Miss Nell Morrow, of Oklahoma, returned from a tour through Oklahoma, New Mexico and Colorado. They leave today for Corpus Christi, San Angelo and other points, where they will visit relatives and friends.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Carl Kirby 5 miles northwest of Sudan a girl on the 20th. The young lady weighed 15 1-2 lbs. Both mother and baby are reported to be getting along nicely.

Thalia--Numerous improvements are being made in the Farmers Gin of Thalia.

To The Voters of Justice Precinct No. 5 Lamb County Texas.

I take this method of calling the attention of the voters of Justice Precinct No. 5, to the fact that I am a candidate, for re-election to the office of Justice of the Peace.

I thoughtlessly neglected to report to the county Democratic executive committee in time to get my name printed on the ticket, therefore it will not be printed thereon; But, since I took this office, at the solicitation of friends when there was practically nothing in it, in the way of fees; And, now, since the country has developed, and become more densely populated, thereby making the office of Justice of the Peace more remunerative, I feel that it is only right, and fair to me, that I should be permitted to retain said office for at least another term.

If you feel as I do, and re-elect me, I assure you that I will appreciate it, and will try to prove my appreciation by rendering the very best service that I am capable of rendering, without prejudice or partiality in favor of, or against any one.

Of course, if you vote for me, you will have to scratch the name of my opponent and write my name on the ticket.

Permit me to state, if you are not already aware, that the boundary lines of this Justice precinct (No 5) has been changed so that now it embraces all of voting precincts No's Five and Seven, and the two precincts in which the people vote in Sudan.

Thanking you in advance for your support, I am,

Yours very truly
J. M. STTLESWORTH.

The Colfax Bookplate

By Agnes Miller

WNU SERVICE.

SYNOPSIS

On a certain Monday morning Miss Constance Fuller, seller of rare books at Darrow's Bookshop, New York, notices that the first customer is a dignified old gentleman. They examine the alcove placarded "Medical Works." Peter Burton, one of the employees, amazes Constance by telling her he paid $516 at auction for an old law book containing a Colfax bookplate. Suddenly a girl's shriek of "Murder!" rings out. The elderly customer is on the floor unconscious, with his right wrist slashed. Just before the shrieking girl falls in a faint, she calls out to Peter: "Keep it! Keep it for me!" Peter's sister, Nancy, begins that morning working at Darrow's. Nancy tells Constance of her elopement with Brandon Tower, an elopement which was cut short when Tower attempted to make off with Nancy's suitcase. Constance explains Darrow's card-index system to Captain Ashland, a nephew of Mr. Darrow's. They examine the book Peter paid $516 for and find the bookplate to be a forgery. Constance is asked to assist Detective Almy in his investigation of the murder of the elderly gentleman. The girl who fainted, Julia Grosvenor, turns out to be his granddaughter. She can throw no light on the mystery. Constance calls on Julia, who seems relieved when told her cry, "Keep it for me!" was unheeded. Darrow orders Constance to remove the bookplate from the book. Working late at night Constance is startled by stealthy footsteps and discovers Mr. Case, the shop manager.

"I really have the responsibility of the catalogue," I objected. "or at least, I took Mr. Roberts' remarks that way, so I didn't want to lose any time. There's always likely to be a hitch when you're in a hurry, you know."

Mr. Case assented but without his usual warmth, and went out. I reflected that Nancy and I had scarcely spoken or used our typewriters during our last half-hour's work, which had been spent in revision of copy, and so Mr. Case might not have heard us, especially as his door likely was shut. I finished my dinner, the staff returned and we all went promptly into action on the catalogue.

The work was equitably divided, and Mr. Case, Daisy Abbott, Emily James and Mr. Dibdin bore off their assignments to their desks in the rear. I remained at mine in front, a brilliant spot in a sea of darkness. For a while revision still occupied me; then I pulled my chair into position under the desk, all ready to shatter the silence again with music from the universal keyboard.

And as I did so I heard the time-clock ring!

For a moment I feared some mishap was depriving us of one of the workers at 7:20, to quote my wrist-watch; but nobody came out, and then I remembered that on the rare occasions when overtime work was done, the department head made a special report for the record-sheet, instead of having the clock rung. Moreover, not a whisper came from the rear, where four people were sitting near the time clock; so I decided, without full conviction, that I must have heard some other noise.

A breathless evening flowed by until ten o'clock; we all found working under pressure rather exciting, especially as we had an unusually fine lot of books to sell.

Then I remembered a copy of a college edition of the Rubaiyat. There was a footnote in it I wanted to crib for the catalogue.

This college edition was kept on a shelf up in the right-hand gallery. I walked up the balcony steps, into darkness that got blacker and blacker each step above the level of the lighted desks below. When I reached the head of the staircase I turned on a swinging light, and could then see my way sufficiently well to the other end of the gallery, where was the shelf on which the book by my hand belonged. On I walked in the dim shadowy stillness, past the tops of the shelves, my feet making no noise on the cork flooring. I stretched up my hand to turn on the light in front of this foremost section of shelves, and—

I heard the time-clock ring!

This time I felt badly startled, almost enough to cry out. I had just sense enough not to turn on the light right above my own head. There must be something the matter; it was absurd that the clock should register at this time of night, a quarter past ten! Resolutely I withdrew around to leave the balcony and investigate what had happened, when immediately all my ears vanished. Below Mr. Case walked slowly out of the shadows of the central aisle up toward my desk, and halted an instant as if looking for me. I was rather glad I had not screamed.

I was just about to speak, telling him where I was, when something closed my parted lips. He stooped down on the left-hand side of my desk, and got into the shadow behind it where I could not distinguish him clearly. I heard a faint sliding sound, and then—

A stranger stood up between my own chair and my desk!

It was a man, presumably young from his figure, though I could not see his face, up above him on the balcony, as he had on a visored cap. He did not make a movement or sound. His head was bent. From the shadows where I had seen Mr. Case stoop, I heard the very faintest sort of fumbling noise; otherwise the silence was suffocating. Then the stranger moved; noiselessly, slowly, but purposefully, he stepped clear of the chair, a few inches over to the left.

Mr. Case sprang to his feet. Over the corner of the brightly lighted desk, the two men gazed at each other without a sound. They may have stood there motionless for ten seconds; it seemed longer than eternity. Finally the stranger, with the utmost self-possession and without a backward glance, walked around Mr. Case, past the front of the desk to the door, out into the night. Mr. Case turned quietly around, and disappeared into the main aisle.

As soon as I heard him speaking to Mr. Dibdin, I made for his office.

"Excuse me for interrupting! I've been looking at Miss Abbott's work, and it's getting along fast—"

"Good! We'll soon be through here, too," Mr. Case spoke exactly as usual. He looked rather white, but working overtime plus glare from a green-shaded lamp does not improve the complexion.

"Then tomorrow morning ought to be plenty of time for the to finish," I said. "So do you mind if I get the ten-thirty five train?"

"Go, by all means," agreed Mr. Case.

So I put on my things and went back to my desk and closed it, with the exception of the lowest left-hand drawer, which I opened for one instant. If it was the style to want to steal Claribel's "Notes," nobody could truthfully say I was out of fashion. With a consuming passion I wanted to steal it.

And furthermore I did so.

I caught the 10:35 easily, with several seconds to spare, and the stroke of eleven found me bolting the Colonial front door of our Elizabethan villa. Having next reviewed the contents of the refrigerator and decided on a glass of milk, sliced chicken and a roll, I extinguished the hall light, and tiptoed upstairs through the stillness, punctured at this door and that by a gentle snore, to my own room.

I took Claribel's "Notes on Medical Statutes in the Virginia Code" from my underarm bag, resolving to discover its mysterious attraction if the process took all night. I first examined it meticulously page by page. Fortunately it was a thin volume. There was not a stain or a soil-mark inside it. Several pages had never been cut. Aside from ordinary wear natural to a binding a century and more old, the only damages appeared to be a small number of faint parallel scratches on the back, and a few rather deep little gashes in the card-board inside the back cover. These injuries were negligible; the book was in remarkably good condition. Finding nothing that could give a clue to the interest it had held for so many per-

Centuries Count for Little in Archeology

For an archeologist, B. C. 1000 is positively a recent date, and an object 3,000 years old is almost new.

In B. C. 1000 the degenerate Cretan civilization was just coming to an end; it had lasted for 2,000 years, and now it was being destroyed by barbarians. In B. C. 1000 the Chinese had already had several centuries' experience of the examination system for civil service candidates. The Mayas, at about the same date, were invading the territories of the so-called Archaic peoples of Central America (whose civilization was from 4,000 to 5,000 years old) and had begun to drink cocoa—an early example of temperance on the American continent. What had once been sions, I decided that the only thing left to do was to obey my orders and take off the bookplate.

I laid a hot wet blotter on the plate, and sat waiting patiently several minutes for the paste to soften. But though I applied an inquiring finger-nail several times to the edge of the drawing, and renewed the blotter more than once, the bookplate stuck fast except at one lower corner which had always been a bit loose. Only after a long time did it even begin to come away from the board, and then with an unusual slowness that tried my patience.

Finally I resolved to assist the hard-worked blotter; and getting a pen-knife, opened the dullest blade and inserted it cautiously a little deeper under the edge of the bookplate than my finger-nail had done. I found that at last the soaking was taking effect; the picture was looser. I tried the corners in turn, found that loose lower right-hand one now yielded readily to the blade, got it free of the cover, and then with my fingers began, very gently, to peel off the bookplate. It had to be coaxed now and then, but little by little it came away clean and untorn. Then, as I got more bold on the looser part, I pulled it more evenly and rapidly, and at last off it came, with a single swift motion. And then the sight before me caused me to drop the bookplate in complete consternation, and forget all about it.

In the center of the space from which I had just peeled it, sunk into the thick cat-skin cover of the old law book so that no hint of it protruded above the surface of the board, was—a key.

It was black, about two inches in length; the shank was long and narrow, the bit elaborately fashioned, the head a solid piece of metal about half an inch across. I stared at it intently; but dazedly.

Curiosity, however, a vulgar trait but often a life-preserver, came rapidly to my aid. I snatched up the pen-knife again, and very slowly and cautiously pried out the key from its resting-place. The underside was identical with the upper; at its thickest point the little implement was less than an eighth of an inch in diameter. I examined the depression in the book cover wherein this strange old-fashioned object had been lying. This depression had evidently been cut out in the thick board with the very greatest care. No hint of the operation could be either seen or felt in the binding. I replaced the key in the depression and ran my hand across the inside cover. So carefully was the key fitted that even with my bare palm I could hardly feel anything but a plain surface.

I left it in its resting place and gazed at it a moment. Was the bookplate—the forged bookplate—after all not the object of the extraordinary efforts put forth by so many persons? Was it the key under the bookplate? This new discovery seemed to eclipse the mystery of the counterfeit print, curious as the latter still was. A key presupposed that something valuable was hidden under lock; a hidden key presupposed some wish to keep the hiding place secret; the widespread search for the old book which had a key concealed in it suggested strongly a determination on the part of the searchers to open the hiding place. My already overburdened bosom had become the recipient of another secret.

After hearing Peter's tragic adventures and Nancy's remarkable escapades and Julia Grosvenor's strange story; after seeing Julia's black satin bedroom slippers and learning that Peter, too, knew some mysterious secret concerning her presence in the shop that Monday, I had found a key in the cover of the law book to which our hoodoo of a bookplate had been attached—this after witnessing that blood-freezing encounter between Mr. Case and the unknown stranger, late at night, in Darrow's!

Now that I had a chance to think about that view of Mr. Case, I could scarcely do so coherently. Mr. Case, the Chesterfield of Darrow's, prying into another person's desk! I had distinctly heard him pull open a drawer. There was not one thing in that desk that could possibly have interested anyone, except Claribel's "Notes," and he had seemed to take little more than a polite interest in it. And yet—was it an odd story to him. Why didn't he speak to that stranger, or give any alarm about him? Who was that second man? What was he after? and did all those people—except Peter, of course—who were pursuing that book, know about the key? And to what was it the key?

I could answer none of these absorbing questions. But my immediate concern, after all, was with the practical aspect of this discovery. Suppose Mr. Darrow should ask if the bookplate had been removed, and then desire to see it and the book again before they were sold. He might well do so, he took such an interest in them both. Suppose Mr. Case should ask to see the book; who had more right to do so than the head of the shop? Suppose Captain Ashland should bow enthusiastically along with some learned observations about counterfeits which had been omitted from his lecture and required illustration. Suppose Nancy—but I did not feel imaginative.

One thing was clear. I could not likely long keep this discovery to myself, even had I any right to do so. So I decided to impart my discovery to Mr. Roberts. He would not now be so likely to spurn my conjectures about that law book.

Having made this decision, I again picked up the bookplate, which now lay twisted tightly up in a damp roll beside the book, and ironed it out between two dry bits of blotting paper. I gazed at it intently. A bright idea suddenly popped into my mind, an idea not to be carried out in the shop. As I looked at the foreground of the picture, I noticed the marvelous attention to details in the laboratory interior. If I could see something in these details which would have to be pointed out to other people, I could write a blurb about the fine execution of the drawing.

Beneath the lamp on my desk, I slid the bookplate under a magnifying glass, and proceeded to study the foreground eagerly. But soon my eagerness felt as chilled as the fingers that vainly screwed the lens up and down seeking to magnify the contents of the table in the foreground into something that might be quaint or interesting or unique in the annals of bookplates. "Small instruments of scientific appearance" were what had appeared to me the first time I saw the plate; now they were enlarged, but I saw nothing new about them. Some were long and narrow, some short and round; one was a cube with a pattern of slots across one base. Their use or symbolism was Greek to me still.

At last, though completely disgusted that all my effort should be able to produce nothing better than "Quaint and interesting interior showing small instruments of scientific appearance," I decided that that description was the best I could do on such short notice. It was like Mr. Darrow to change his mind at the last instant, and he could just take the consequences. With more time, I could have found out what the instruments were, but not by noon that day. I gloomily plunged my cold hands into my sweater pockets, reflecting that my employer's pockets would be equally empty so far as the profits from that bookplate were concerned.

And then I realized that the left-hand pocket of my sweater was not empty. My hand encountered something crackling, scratchy . . . I pulled it out. My yellow note . . . Professor Harrington's book-list, my identification of which Daisy had corroborated before Mr. Almy.

And now, perhaps because it had been such an uneventful evening, and the morning was still young—our clock had just boomed out half-past two—it seemed to me that there was no time like the present to look over that yellow note, as I had planned to do when I found it two days before on the floor in the history alcove at Darrow's. As I glanced again at the three rows of slits in the paper, which I had casually noticed when I picked it up first, I remembered having seen three rows of slots, very tiny, but arranged in an identical pattern with that on the yellow slip, somewhere else, that very evening.

CHAPTER VIII

Morning Watch

When in the cold gray dawn I arose, from my chair, stiff with fatigue after the most exciting night in my experience, I was tingling to go to Darrow's. I planned to go directly upstairs on Mr. Roberts' heels, with Claribel's "Notes" under my arm, to tell him a few observations I had made which had indeed taken a certain amount of intelligence. The book I would then leave with him, so that if it were asked for or anybody tried to steal it, it would be unavailable. Next I would complete the rare-book catalogue with lightning speed, and Mr. Darrow would inform me over the telephone that I had his entire confidence. And, not least agreeable, I could expect a pleasant evening in town, with early bedtime hours. Dropping the bookplate, now flat and dry, between the first page of the old law book and the cover still holding the key, I hastened to town to carry out my plans.

The only hindrance proved to be that none was any good. I reached Darrow's at a quarter of nine as usual, and with Claribel's "Notes" inconspicuously ready at hand among the other books on my desk, I awaited Mr. Roberts with confidence.

But, alas, to quote the elegant female in the poem widely approved of by philologists, who had no more shame than to wait for "him" when he was late to his date. "He came not—no, he came not." Nancy breezed past, Daisy Abbott arrived, Mr. Case, who, I was not displeased to note, looked quite worn out, asked if I were tired. I said, "Not so much as I might be; I got that early train."

TURTLES RAISED ON FARM BY DOUGHBOY

Got Idea to Breed Snappers in Monte Carlo

Fertile, Iowa.—Some 20,000 snapping turtles now lie buried beneath the boggy acreage of the hill country of north Iowa, enjoying their long winter sleep, because the World war broke out in Europe in 1914.

Europe is a long way from Fertile, but it is where Hans Johnson, youthful soldier, got his idea for the establishment of a turtle farm that supplies a large per cent of the turtle flesh that eventually finds its way to the dining rooms of America's foremost hotels.

Johnson was a doughboy in the Eighty-eighth division of the A. E. F. In September of 1917 he obtained a leave of absence and wandered down to Monte Carlo, of gambling fame. One night a wealthy American, a steel manufacturer, invited Johnson and a number of companions to dine with him at the Grande cafe near the Casino. Chelonia mydas broth, a soup made from the flesh of a species of West Indian turtle, was served. The check for it was large.

Sees Business Chance.

Johnson reasoned that if wealthy men paid without protest such high prices for mydas broth, it would pay to go into the business of supplying the market. This was born the idea of Fertile's turtle farm, the plans for which Johnson put into effect after he came home. Five years ago Johnson began his work by leasing ten acres of river bottom land, making a success of the venture from the start.

Mr. Johnson derives his chief revenue from the sale of eggs and choice breeding stock. He also has a good income from the sale of turtle oil, supplying many large hospitals. During the winter months he supplies a great many eastern hotels with choice table stock, fed and fattened throughout August and September on sweet potatoes and buttermilk.

Bettered by Cross Breeding.

The first 500 turtles were placed on the farm in 1920. They were a species known as the "snapping turtles," a reptile despised by fishermen. They were taken from the streams and lakes of north Iowa. Placed on the farm, they have been greatly improved by crossing with a species of chicken tortoise somewhat resembling the

SNAPS FISH AT HOME IN OCEAN

Bartsch Tells Experience Off Florida Coast.

Washington.—The ocean floor, the world's last great unexplored region, will soon have its secrets revealed by motion pictures, according to Dr. Paul Bartsch of the United States national museum, who has made an underwater cinema hunt for fishes among the coral grottoes off the coast of Florida.

With his specially constructed waterproof camera he secured hundreds of feet of record of submarine life and spent as much as five and a half hours at a time walking about the sea bottom, 20 feet below the surface.

It is at this comparatively shallow depth, he says, that life is most varied and abundant, since the corals and other sea animals build in the teeth of the breakers, where the backward and forward flow of the water brings fresh supplies of the microscopic plants and animals which form their food. However, next season he plans to descend to greater depths with another camera better adapted to catch the slowly moving fish as they silently glide out of the blue haze which fills the coral-columned aisles of their submarine retreats.

The camera man, in his diving helmet, has little to fear, Doctor Bartsch records, in invading these underwater regions. Sharks are sometimes seen, he admits, but adds that "sharks are always gentlemen." In taking his recent film, however, when he first saw that terror of the coast, the barracuda, instead of leveling his camera, he instinctively snatched up his tripod and prepared to battle for his life as the big fish swam around him, mildly curious at the silvery bubbles rising from his diving helmet. The next day Doctor Bartsch so far conquered his instinctive fear of this fish as to secure a good picture of two barracudas as they circled around him.

Parsnip Has Double Growth.

A parsnip which extended its growth through the neck of a bottle, is among the garden freaks of the year. This unusual growth is reported from Ryda, Isle of Wight, and it was a healthy specimen when displayed. It resembles a double parsnip in that from the surface down the parsnip grew to good proportions, then pointed a course through the neck of a broken bottle and again grew to fair proportions on the other side of the temporary obstruction.

REAL CHINA DRAGON AMERICA WOULD KILL

Toll on Goods in Transit Is Cause of Trouble.

Washington.—American representatives have laid before the great powers and China a proposal to free China from foreign restrictions on tariff levies in return for abolition of the "likin."

The real dragon of modern China, is the "likin," in the opinion of foreign traders and many Chinese," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society from its headquarters in Washington, D. C. "The abolition of a similar tax by the Constitution of the United States helped save the Union. The Americans at Peking may be doing for China what George Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Franklin and others did for the colonies at Philadelphia in 1787. It was not until 1870 that the 'likin' was abolished within the German Union.

Taxes Levied in Transit.

The nearest equivalent which English has for the Chinese word "likin" is "per cent." The Chinese term means "per mille," that is, a tax apportioned according to thousands. It has taken on a different meaning in the course of years until now a "likin" station is known as a "squeeze" station. Likin stations are toll posts where taxes are levied on goods in transit. While some of the collections made at the "squeeze" stations go to the central government, most of the revenue falls into the hands of the provincial governors or the district mandarins. "From Shanghai to Soochow it is 84 miles and goods going from one city to the other have to pass eight likin stations. At the first and last stations all goods are dutiable; at the rest all goods must be examined, and there is scarcely a single article that does not in that transit pay at least three taxes.

If a parallel system were set up on the New York-Philadelphia highway, all the motor trucks would be compelled to stop at customs stations in New York, Hoboken, Newark, Elizabeth, New Brunswick, Princeton, Trenton and Philadelphia. At each station the entire contents of the truck would be ransacked and the drivers would be compelled to pay a certain sum. Obviously the road run of a few hours would lengthen into a day or two. The expense of tax and time would put a burden on business which would be shifted to the consumer. In the end commerce by truck would be smothered. This cycle is complete in China where foreign goods commonly penetrate only a brief distance from the free treaty ports, and even domestic trade dribbles along in anemic fashion.

Likin Is Not Old.

"Unlike most Chinese creations, the likin is not old. It was invented about 1850 to raise money for the support of the army suppressing the Taiping rebellion. Its success as a source of cash soon recommended it to governors of various towns and provinces. These officials are always pushed to acquire personal and civic finances. They knew as well as anyone that in the past money which went to Peking stayed in Peking. Likin offered a satisfactory answer.

"Continued existence of likin recognizes that China is a collection of semi-independent states such as the United States and Germany were when in embryo.

"The problem of the likin has been up before international councils before. Agreements have been made that foreign traders could purchase through transit tickets for their goods at the point of departure which would free shipments from likin toll. But even in the recent meetings of the conference there have been reports that provincial war lords have ignored these pacts. They were charged with levying double and triple likin to support their armies."

Indians Break Rule;

Ute Tribe Mourns

Durango, Colo.—Attorney Barry Sullivan, a Harvard law graduate, was killed along with his wife, when their automobile, driven by their daughter, skidded from a mountain roadway near Durango, in southwestern Colorado. Mr. Sullivan had been legal counselor and an adopted member of the five confederated Ute tribes of Utah and Colorado for more than twenty-five years, sitting in many of their important councils and guiding them both as a lawyer and friend.

Sullivan's tragic death was a severe blow to the Indians and they broke all tribal customs and traditions by attending his funeral in full war regalia and in participating in the services at the graves of Mr. Sullivan and his wife. So far as can be learned this is the first public funeral of a white man in which the Ute tribes have taken part.

True, Brother, True!

Alarmists in both political parties tell us that if their respective candidates are not elected the country is going to the dogs. We don't believe it. So long as the United States spends more for education than is spent for a like purpose by the balance of the world this country isn't going to the dogs. We will face recurring crises from time to time but we will meet and solve our problems as we have always done.--Clarendon News.

Tomb Used as Billiard Parlor.

It is unusual for a tomb to be used for any purpose other than that for which it was erected. An exception may be found in Allahabad, India, where a magnificent mausoleum, built to contain the remains of an Indian prince who was murdered by his father, has become in recent years a billiard parlor.

Simon D. Hay Candidate For County Judge Sets Forth Facts Regarding Lamb County Proven by Court Records

In asking your support in this election for the office of County Judge I do so solely on my record as a citizen, an ex-soldier and an official in your Commissioners' Court.

As a citizen I have always tried to be useful to my country and honest with my fellow men. My record as a soldier speaks for itself: I was wounded, decorated by General Pershing for bravery on the battlefield and promoted from the ranks to First Lieutenant for distinguished service in action. As a Commissioner I have always worked for the welfare of the County as a whole. My vote on any subject is a matter of record in the minutes of the Commissioners' Court. I absolutely believe in the will of the people and always endeavor to vote accordingly, for it is not our personal affairs but the people's business that we are conducting.

Since my honorable opponent, Judge Burrus, seems to have adopted W. B. [Bart] Denton, of Littlefield, as his campaign manager, I find that misrepresentation has characterized the campaign made against me, and I feel justified in warning the people against last minute and eleventh hour charges and recriminations. Probably I should not take Mr. Denton's charges seriously, for it appears to be a case of "Judge, Old Boy, I will help you get the office this time and you help me get it two years from now;" so I really have two candidates to beat, one now and one electioneering for himself two years hence.

One of the charges brought against me is that I am for high taxes. In this connection I beg to state that the only reduction in our County taxes made in the last four years (Judge Burrus' two terms) was made by my motion. I refer you to page 317 of the minutes of the Commissioners Court for verification. I absolutely do not stand for high taxes.

They say that I have spent all my road money and they will refer you to the Treasurer's last quarterly report, which shows two overdrafts, one in Precinct 1 funds, and one in Precinct 4 (my precinct) fund. This in reality, is not an overdraft, for each Commissioner is due his pro rata part of the "Automobile Funds and any other transfers. This overdraft that they are wont to make so much noise over was wiped out at the last Commissioners' Court meeting, and my fund is due 40 per cent of any transfers made. Right here I beg to call your attention to the fact that the County Warrant indebtedness is $97,000.00; less than $4,000.00 of this amount has been issued in my Precinct, although the tax valuation of Precinct 4 is 40 per cent of the total county valuation. I refer you to the County Auditor's report on file in the Court House.

It is reported that I am for hard surface roads I am, if the state pays for them; I am not if the county would have to pay for them, and never will be as long as this county pays in the neighborhood of $125,000.00 to the State of Texas every year in taxes.

They say that I do not attend Commissioners' Court regularly. I have missed one regular meeting in five and one-half years, and that was when I got married. It hardly looks like they would resent a fellow taking a day off for that.

I regret that I did not build the first house in Lamb County. I never realized that was a cardinal qualification for the office of County Judge. My honorable opponent tells you that he is just a poor old farmer. He does not tell you that he owns a half section of good land three miles from Olton. Nor has he told you that the tax-payers of Lamb County have paid him, in the neighborhood of $20,000.00: four years as assessor, and three and one-half years as Judge. True, I have been on the county payroll five and one-half years (he has told you that), but where I was paid $50 he was paid $150.

The Judge's office now pays $175 per month, besides several hundred dollars per year in fees.

In return for this salary what has Judge Burrus ever done for his county?

Consider the County Court, for instance; there are over 300 cases now pending that should have been disposed of before January first, 1928. In proof of this statement I refer you to the County Court docket. Such inaction is very expensive to the County.

Also, the Amherst-Earth Road which was intended to be a section of a proposed state designation, touching such points as Vega, Hereford, Earth, Amherst Littlefield, Levelland and Brownfield, a road that would mean much in commercial convenience to Lamb County and general travel, but also in that the state would maintain over thirty more miles of road through Lamb County.

Judge Burrus' lack of co-operation with the adjoining counties has absolutely held up this proposal for three years. For confirmation of this statement I refer you to the Commissioners' Courts of these counties and especially County Judge Wilson of Deaf Smith County. In fact, Judge Burrus fails to show where he has ever given any service. Instead, he is trying to ride into the office for a third term on misrepresentations against me, after promising the people two years ago that he would never ask for the Judgeship again.

I had hoped to see every voter before the election, but I find that will be impossible. However, I assure you that anything you may do or say in my behalf will be greatly appreciated and I promise to give my county real service.

Very truly yours,
SIMON D. Hay.
Candidate for County Judge.

X-Ray Photographs of Mummies on Display

X-ray pictures of Egyptian mummies, showing the skeletons arrayed in the remains of once beautiful clothing and jewelry, are being displayed beside the mysteriously swathed mummies themselves in a new exhibit at the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago. For some time scientists have been using X-rays to penetrate the thick cloth wrappings of the ancient Egyptians in order to study diseases of the bones from which these people suffered. This is the first time, however, that X-ray photographs of the Egyptian dead have been put on public exhibition. The mummies are being shown in connection with the opening of six new halls in the Field museum.

FARM POULTRY

GROWING PULLETS NEED EVERY CARE

The young growing pullets need every advantage because the profits from them this fall will depend largely on their growth and maturity.

"There are four essentials in developing young pullets," says C. F. Parrish, extension poultryman at the North Carolina State college. "First give them a good range on ground not occupied by the hens nor where mature stock has been kept, supply plenty of fresh air in the poultry house, give them sufficient growing mash and scratch feed and see that shade and green feed is available. From the green feed, the pullets get certain food elements and iron which is essential. If natural shade is not available an artificial shade may be made by driving four stakes in the ground and covering them with sacks. Sunflowers or corn may also be planted to supply this necessity."

For those young pullets still in the brooder house, the heat should be decreased as fast as possible and the house ventilated. The stove should remain in the house for at least two weeks after the fire is out to use in case of cold rains. Feed the scratch grain farther away from the house each day so the birds will go out and eat more green feed.

For roosting, Mr. Parrish advises the placing of temporary perch poles in the brooder house when the chicks are about seven to nine weeks old and do not need heat. These poles should be about fifteen inches from the floor and slanting at an angle of 45 degrees. One-inch mesh wire might be used in front of the poles to make the birds climb up.

Egg That Has Life Very Essential for Success

Whether breeding chickens, ducks, geese or turkeys, the first essential for success is to get an egg that has life. Strong, vigorous parents that are well fed and well cared for produce such eggs. The general principles of breeding apply to all poultry, says a writer in Wallace's Farmer. Well fed, but not overfat, is the ideal condition. Enough feed to keep the flock active during the day; a liberal feed at night. Green feed and animal feed, clean water, no lice or mites; fresh air without draft at night, together with plenty of room, are conditions that favor eggs with life in any locality. There are no rules for growing poultry that must be followed absolutely. There are the general principles of clean food in abundance with work on the part of the fowl to get it; clean houses, clean yards and fresh air, but success comes with about as many different systems as there are breeders. Bone meal, meat scraps and buttermilk furnish bone and muscle building material; corn, wheat and oats add the necessary fat and energy; green feeds give life and health. Upon the character of the seed depends the harvest.

Light Brahmas Good for the Small-Patch Farmer

The lower your fences are, the heavier may be your breeds of poultry. One of the best breeds for the small-patch farmer, or the business man or wage earner living in the suburbs—the man who cannot afford to put much money into expensive wire netting—is the Light Brahmas. They stand confinement in narrow quarters, and they also stand cold weather. They are less subject to disease than some of the other breeds; they make good layers, and average in weight, when fully grown, about 11 pounds; so when you market your surplus stock you have something to sell. But if you have plenty of space for your chickens the cheapest breeds are the nervous, restless ones, which means that they are good foragers for food, and will not need much feeding. The Brown or White Leghorn and the Black Spanish are among the best foragers. Other breed which do well in the small patch or acre lot are the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds.

Chickens Eat Feathers

Chickens eat their own feathers because of the lack of the following feeds: 1, meat; 2, green food or bulk; 3, salt. One-half pound of fine table salt should be put in the dry mash, and this should be kept before the hens at all times. They should get plenty of green food. In the winter time, cabbage, mangels and root crops answer fairly well. They should have plenty of animal food such as beef scraps, fish scraps, skim milk or buttermilk.

Alfalfa Is Favored

If time is lacking to prepare green feed for chicks, it pays to buy high grade commercial alfalfa leaf meal. A few hundred pounds will furnish green feed for a lot of chicks. Many of the best chick starting mash contain a little alfalfa meal. These mashes should be used according to the directions of the manufacturers, but chicks on a starting mash containing alfalfa meal often seem to thrive without the other source of green feed. The cost is comparatively small.

Going Back to Early Day of Printer's Art

Germany's oldest newspaper, dating back to the early part of the Seventeenth century, will be reproduced at the Pressa exhibition soon by the same crude presses, molds and carved types as were in vogue in the best print shops then.

When the organizers of the exhibition issued a call for antiques which would illustrate the history of printing, old galleys and cellars in southern Germany were searched, with the result that a complete printing establishment was collected.

Only a few numbers of Augsburg's Aviso, printed periodically during the latter part of 1600, are extant, but the reprint will be made under Seventeenth-century conditions. Probably a dozen copies on hand-made paper will leave the press hourly.—New York Times.

A Monopoly

"Every passing motorist is a potential customer of that farmer."

"How's that?"
"He has a filling station on the corner; sells hot dogs, soft drinks, ice cream, etc., in an adjoining shack. He also has a stand for fruit, vegetables, eggs and milk, and his house has been turned into an inn."

"But suppose one does not want gas, a light lunch, farm products, a dinner or a night's lodging. What is there?"
"A public golf course in the pasture."—Life.

No ugly, grimy streaks on the clothes when Red Cross Ball Blue is used. Good bluing gets good results. All grocers carry it.—Adv.

for Gingham or Organdies USE FAULTLESS STARCH

NO better evidence that FAULTLESS STARCH is the perfect starch—that it needs nothing added—could be required than it gives perfect results with either gingham or organdies.

Like a prepared cake or pancake flour FAULTLESS STARCH is a complete product. To add anything to FAULTLESS STARCH would spoil it.

It has exactly the right consistency, is free from lumps, is velvety and has no "specks". It is a clean starch. Your irons won't stick. There will be no freezes or blowouts. Your clothes will be soft and pliable and have a beautiful gloss.

Clothes starched the FAULTLESS WAY look better and wear longer as Faultless Starch penetrates every thread and fibre of the fabrics.

For 40 years in more than a million homes, housewives have found that the "Faultless way is the easiest way". One trial will prove to you that it is.
