DIVERSIFY TO PROSPER.

There's a story about grasshopper who sang and played all summer while an ant worked. The ant spent the summer months laying in food for the winter. The grasshopper didn't. He greeted with a sneer the advice of the ant to store up food.

In the winter the ant was snug and well fed in the home he had worked all summer to prepare. The cold winds came and the snow covered the ground. The grasshopper curled up and died from hunger and cold.

There are some farmers like the grasshopper and there're some like the ant. Some farmers diversify their crops, raise feed for their stock, food for their own table, and livestock. These farmers are like the ant. Then there's the farmer who raises little, if anything, besides cotton. He has no cows in his pasture. He has no hogs in his lot. He doesn't raise the feed for the horses that plow his cotton. He doesn't have a garden and doesn't raise food for his family. This farmer is like the grasshopper.

A bright spot in farming was revealed recently by the exhibits at the Williamson county fair in Georgetown. Farm exhibits showed that there are many progressive farmers in the district. There were displays of fine corn, oats, wheat, maize and other well known grain sorghums. There was hay and fodder, cut and cured and ready for feed.

Big Bermuda onions, cured for winter, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, a variety of green vegetables and fruits were displayed by farmers who grew them on Central Texas land.

There was a magnificent exhibit of canned vegetables—peas, beans, cabbage, tomatoes, pickles, okra and many others. To these the progressive farmers of Williamson county and their wives who are disciples of the "live-at-home program" will add canned beef, pork, chicken and mutton.

There were dairy cattle, beef cattle, hogs, poultry, sheep and goats shown at the fair.

The cotton exhibit was meager compared to the other crops.

Thanks to County Agents J. C. Patterson and Miss Ruth Ramey of Eastland county and Vocational Agents E. H. Varnell, Ben Whitehouse and F. A. Lloyd, of Cisco, Ranger and Rising Star, Eastland county farmers and their wives are developing and exhibiting a very definite sense of self-dependence. More pronounced than ever in the history of the county has been the present movement toward living at home. Diversification from a theory of salvation has become a reality. As an instance, look at the enormous amount of home-canning that has taken place. For years community clubs have been demonstrating in canning processes under the direction of the agents. Vegetables, fruits and meats have been preserved in comparatively small lots each year. Now these farmers and their wives have realized the value of the knowledge they have gained. They have found in it a certain course to provide for their families against famine, to make their land yield values that were hitherto dissipated while they eked out a precarious living through the medium of the grocery store sack with the result that buying power, so important to themselves and the communities where they traded, was exhausted.

Last winter the farmer, in this county, generally speaking, was without both larder and money. Many of them, thousands to judge from the records of the Red Cross which came to their aid with an appropriation of $15,000, were on the edge of starvation. It was a splendid opportunity for the agricultural extension workers to show their value. That they have done so is amply evidenced by the difference in conditions that confront the Eastland county farmer for the coming winter. The price of cotton, wheat, hogs, sheep, wool, cattle, and other commodities may be low, but the Eastland county farmer will not be caught with the sack this winter. No, indeed. He has raised a living at home, and his good wife has followed the example of the ant and stocked the larder shelves against winter days until his family will be assured of a hospitable table throughout the bleak months of the non-growing season. There are chickens and turkeys in the yard, cows in the lot and hogs in the pen.

The Eastland county farmer may not have plenty of money this year but he will have a living, thanks to the lesson he has learned and the energy of those who have sought to guide him to a more rational plan of farming; and the price he gets for his crops won't be so serious a matter as when his very food and health depend upon it. Since he will not have to depend upon a "money" crop to the extent that he once did he will have more money and an infinitely better attitude.

Smiling Lieutenant Now At Arcadia

Two of the screen's comeliest actresses, Claudette Colbert and Miriam Hopkins, are cast as leading ladies to Maurice Chevalier in the Ernst Lubitsch-Paramount production, "The Smiling Lieutenant," which opens today at the Arcadia Theatre, Ranger. Both Miss Colbert and Miss Hopkins are established luminaries of the New York stage who add to their laurels with each succeeding picture.

"The Smiling Lieutenant" Miss Colbert plays the role of Chevalier's sweetheart who gives up her claims to his affections when he becomes entangled with a witness of royal blood. And Miss Hopkins plays the part of the girl who sees her man when she sees him and makes no bones about getting him. However, it is Claudette Colbert who whispers words of wisdom to Miriam Hopkins, enabling the latter to forego sed flannels and dowdy frocks for more endearing and flattering garments. And Miriam being a sensible young lady listens to these words of wisdom and has comely little trouble convincing Chevalier that she is worth cherishing forever and forever.

There's Something in the Air—And How!

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
 NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—Automobiles, so important in the American economic system and recognized by the average citizen in his conception of proper living standards, are a big factor in the prevalence of unrepented crime.

Not only because criminals of all types—even including "gamblers, prostitutes, bootleggers and narcotic peddlers"—use them in their business, but also because the Wickesham commission asserts in its report on police, that traffic problems and duties have increased so rapidly that there is a general lack of adequate patrol service in cities throughout the country.

Traffic difficulties are becoming more serious and automobile accidents more frequent, according to the commission experts, who cite a National Safety Council record to compare 10,000 homicides last year with 32,000 deaths on the public highways, and approximately 1,000,000 injuries in automobile accidents.

"That this number will increase in proportion to the number of vehicles in use on the highways and the number of miles traveled can not be doubted by any person who has studied traffic statistics," it is declared. "From present indications there is reason to believe that there will be greater use of streets in the future with a constant increase in the death curve."

THE police will find it increasingly necessary to approach the problem, first, through engineering principles, then education, and finally, "without too much emphasis," through appropriate enforcement methods. But meanwhile,

"Traffic problems have increased so rapidly that most of the executive's time and all of the time of a very large proportion of the force is used to keep the traffic moving and without too much congestion along the city streets."

"As a result, large sections of a community are without police patrol, and in three of the large cities surveys have shown that there were no policemen on sections outside of the business districts between the hours of 3 a. m. and 4 p. m. To some extent this condition prevails throughout the United States."

But hundreds of scientific men have been studying traffic for years and disagree as to the solution of the perplexing problem, the report says. Traffic rule enforcement is ineffective unless it is accompanied by both engineering and education. It is pointed out that the Hoover Conference on Traffic, composed of experts from every activity touching the automotive and transportation field, "is still struggling along hoping to find an answer for some of the many difficulties presented by increased congestion on streets and highways, due to the increasing use of automobiles."

Motor cars present still another problem to many police forces, for although larger cities usually supply automobiles to their police in "rental numbers," and the most of one to 10 men, in sheriff's offices and many of the small state police units the policeman must supply his own.

Forced to buy this and other equipment, a policeman borrows money, often $500 or $600 and often from politicians, and "he must do his job with a halter around his neck of which he may never clear himself." The Wickesham experts say this initial debt frequently leads an officer into graft.

Each and every town, it is concluded, should furnish all its police equipment.

CRACKS IN THE DOME

Governors win or lose their platform efforts in every regular session and win or lose on the matters submitted to every special session. . . . Few governors have ever won a clear cut victory than Governor Sterling on the administrative oil conservation bill.

The house had half a dozen cross currents; opposition, semi-opposition, indifference, neutrality, partial support, questioning and uncertain support, and outright support.

These elements sifted themselves largely into the two elements whose spokesmen were Rep. McGregor and Reps. Petch and Wagstaff. . . . Only 19 of the 150 house members voted against the administration Wagstaff bill when the test finally was precipitated and the muddled waters cleared. . . . Final passage in the house quickly followed with more than enough votes cast for it to make the bill effective as soon as signed.

"It's all over now," the members cheered. . . . And then the house proceeded to its final passage and was ready for enactment of the new-conservation commission bill on the same day the senate was passing a bill almost identical, sponsored by Senator Wood, to accomplish oil conservation.

Pecos a Mecca For Cow Hands

PECOS.—Slaughter of the fat calf and preparations for the feeding of hundreds of devout pilgrims was under way here as opening of the 42nd annual session of the famous Bloys or Cowboys camp meeting grew near.

When the camp started more than two-score years ago, a half beef, one preacher, and drinking water from springs in the side of the mountains were sufficient for the pioneers who journeyed to the shady groves of liveoaks among the green hills of the Davis mountains near Pecos.

Pilgrims to the camp meeting this year, however, will attend services in a tabernacle seating hundreds of persons, sleep in cottages with modern conveniences such as waterworks and electricity. Instead of the half-beef, dozens of the animals will be slaughtered to feed the masses.

Four ministers of the gospel, representing as many denominations, and all with degrees of doctor of divinity, will direct the services and will be assisted by more than a score of other pastors from cities over the country.

The camp was started by the Rev. W. B. Binyon, D. D., who was a pioneer preacher out in a cowboy land and among the soldiers of the old frontier Fort Davis.

Before his death he saw his camp incorporated organization, owning a square mile of land, and equipped with a tabernacle and modern conveniences.

The camp this year will get under way Aug. 18 and continue seven days. Four denominations participate. Their representative pastors will be: Rev. L. D. Anderson, Disciple, Fort Worth; Rev. John H. Burma, Presbyterian, Waxahachie; Rev. B. S. O'berdonk, Methodist, San Antonio; Rev. S. J. Porter, Baptist, Washington, D. C.

Testers of Milk And Cream Urged To Get License

AUSTIN.—Testers of milk and cream have been advised by M. S. Frazee, chief of weights and measures in the department of agriculture, that the new state law requiring the licensing of testers goes into effect Aug. 23.

To obtain a license, Frazee said, it is necessary for the applicant to be familiar with the Babcock test, adopted as the standard for the state, and present references regarding his character.

Licenses will be revoked when any tester is found failing to abide by the law governing the testing of milk and cream.

Frazee estimates there are several thousand testers in the state. He hopes to have applications from a majority of these when the law becomes effective. Application blanks may be obtained from the department.

Dramatic demonstration of Frigidaire conveniences

SPECIAL JUBILEE PROGRAM

Make it a point to pay us a visit during the next few days. For we are celebrating Frigidaire's fifteenth anniversary and have arranged a special program that you won't want to miss.

We are giving a dramatic demonstration of the enduring qualities of Frigidaire Porcelain. We are showing how the Cold Control speeds the freezing of ice and deserts—how the Hydrator makes even wilted vegetables fresh—how the Quickube Ice Tray releases ice cubes with fingertip pressure—one at a time or a whole trayful. How one-way, steel-rail shelves make it easy to put food into Frigidaire and take it out without danger of spilling.

And during the Jubilee any household Frigidaire may be had for a few dollars down and the balance on terms to suit the purchaser.

Dowling Sticks To His Code In Films

Success as a movie star came to Eddie Dowling with the release, about two years ago, of his very first picture, "The Rainbow Man."

According to preview critics he doubles the measure of that success in "Honeycomb Lane," his second picture, which comes to the Lyric theatre today.

Dowling is a firm believer in the theory that the charm that goes with carefully devised simplicity in theatrical or film presentations is the most effective method of keeping audiences in a rosy glow of happiness.

It is not an easy production course to follow—what with the film capital abounding in story material of a spy, or a thriller, or a blood-and-thunder nature. But Dowling holds to it rigidly. In more than a score of years as an actor and playwright he has never wavered from his purpose and as a result he has never been associated, in any way, with what is known in critical circles and along "heartbreak lane" as a "flop" production.

"Honeycomb Lane" played a long run to thousands of people in New York and then played to thousands more on tour. The picture contains all the essentially charming ingredients of the original hit with those ingredients revamped for the technique of the films.

Dalhart's school enrollment increased 12 per cent in 1931 over 1930.

CIGAR BOX PRODUCTION UP

By United Press.

YORK, Pa.—Cigar box production increased sufficiently in 1931, according to industrial reports, to provide a rival for York's record annual production of false teeth.

During the year 16,169,118 cigar boxes were produced in factories in York county, sufficient to provide one box for every person in Pennsylvania and to have enough remaining for every person in New York City.

Heart of Liane

By MABEL McELLIOTT

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Liane Barrett, 18 and beautiful, tries in vain to forget Vivian Robard, wealthy polo player, when his engagement is announced to Muriel Ladd, popular debutante. Liane's mother, Cass Barrett, is an actress and it is during Cass's engagement to a fashionable Long Island summer colony that the Barretts meet Mrs. Cleespaugh, wealthy widow. When Cass goes on tour in the fall Liane becomes Mrs. Cleespaugh's secretary. Clive Cleespaugh, the widow's only son, asks Liane to marry him. Clive cannot inherit his father's fortune unless he marries before he is 25. Liane accepts, agreeing the marriage is to be a matter of form only.

Tressa Lord and her sister, Mrs. Amberton, come to visit the Cleespaughs and Tressa, who wants to marry Clive, begins to make trouble for Liane. Tressa convives unsuccessfully with a gang of blackmailers, later Liane and Clive spend their honeymoon in the south, then return north. Muriel slopes with Chuck Desmond, newspaper reporter. Clive devotes himself to business and Liane tries not to be moved by social duties. On a shopping trip she encounters Robard. He begs her to go abroad with him. After a quarrel with Clive, Liane goes to see Cass and tells her she is going away with Robard. Cass reveals Liane is not her child but the daughter of her sister, Luisa, and Robard's stepfather whose first wife Luisa was. The girl is shaken by this news. She starts home and hears news-brooding extras. Robard has been killed in an accident. Weeks pass in which Liane is miserable, overwhelmed by a sense of guilt. Then she disappears, going to a city in New Jersey and finding in a store...

Today and Tomorrow at Arcadia by those who loved her. She had to in order to save her very soul.

That Clive had not announced her disappearance to the newspapers she felt sure. She had been watching for this day by day.

When she had been working for Steinway and Lipschutz for nearly six weeks she was summoned to the manager's office one morning. The thin, harassed looking man glanced at her and glanced away, as she came in. "Miss Crane," he began stiffly. "We have been getting some inquiries about you from a private detective agency. We don't like it."

At her white-faced protest the manager put up a deprecatory hand. "Now, now! I don't know what you're done or why," he said. "But it's bad for the morale. Get the girls whispering and I don't know what. Sorry, but we'll have to let you go."

There was no use to say anything. Liane departed, light headed with hunger and terror, with an envelope containing two days' pay. It was all the money she had in the world.

She thought, trembling, that the unkind fate which had dogged her before her marriage to Clive must be at her heels. Her unknown enemies must have found her out again. As she went to the rooming house she called home her steps lagged and her heart seemed to skip beats.

She managed to drag herself upstairs without letting the sharp-eyed landlady see her. She lighted the little spirit kettle she used to boil water for tea. Before she had had time to blow out the flame a knock sounded and the knob turned softly.

Liane put her hand to her throat. A dark mist danced before her eyes and the room began to recede. She had no sensation of falling. Only as in a dream, she heard a man's voice saying peremptorily, "Catch her! She's going, sure."

Liane had heard that voice before. She was too tired just then to remember whom it belonged to.

After a long, long while she awoke. She was in a white room and there was a spot of sun on the ceiling. A dizzy spot of sun. It wavered back and forth. Liane felt the coverlet tentatively with her fingers. It did not feel in the least like the thin, gray, anti-spy smelling blanket at Mrs. Kerschl's boarding house. If she weren't so awfully tired she would open her eyes again and see what it was like. Later, perhaps she would do that.

There was something else in her mind, something she would put her attention on when that foggy feeling left her. She had heard a man say, "Catch her. She's going."

Going where? That was what she wanted to know.

Somewhere far off a clock struck seven. Liane tried to struggle up. He late for work. That would never do.

A voice was murmuring very low, "case of malnutrition." She heard another voice answer. Ah! That was the one she'd wanted to remember. Whose? It was she could almost see the face of the man to whom the voice belonged. Almost, but not quite. Queer, how memory failed when you needed it most!

The low voice came very close to her ear now, and said, "Open your mouth now, like a good girl, and drink this." Obediently Liane did as she was told. She felt something that must be a small glass tube. The liquid trickling into her parched throat tasted like warm milk. She sipped it gently. After a minute she choked and gasped, "Tired."

Then the clear voice said, sympathetically: "I know. I'll take it away for a bit. Then you'll try again like a good girl won't you?" She tried to nod, but you couldn't nod when you were lying down.

The owner of the clear voice seemed to know what she meant. "That's right," the voice said. "That's splendid."

When next she woke there was orange juice slipping down the glass tube. Heavenly, it tasted. She'd heard of nectar and ambrosia. It could be no more delightful than the cool orange juice trickling down her throat.

This time when the hand took the tube away Liane managed to say three words. She wanted more, actually to say them. They seemed at the moment frightfully important.

ant. She said, "God is good."

To her surprise two great tears rolled from under her lids and began softly to run down her cheeks. The hand wiped them away. The voice said, "Don't worry about anything. You're coming along splendidly." Then Liane drifted off again. She was so very tired.

In the corridor of St. Elizabeth's hospital a haggard young man paced up and down. When the doctor appeared, a brisk, plump doctor in his early forties, and smiling with spurious brightness, the young man approached him and spoke in a low, anxious tone.

The doctor waved him aside with cool, imperious manner which comes naturally to the followers of Aesculapius. Now, Mrs. Cleespaugh, I'll talk to you later," he said. He vanished. The door of the secretive-looking room closed after him.

The young man continued to pace up and down. He had the air of one distraught. "Occasion- ally he struck his palms together. At times he argues softly to himself when he reached the deserted turn of the corridor.

"How was I to know she was starving to death?" he demanded of no one at all. And "why didn't I come sooner? The detectives had known where she was for almost a week. I was afraid of frightening her away again."

He paced up and down, up and down, a cage tormented man.

After a while the lock clicked and the physician emerged. His air was still brisk, his smile more pleased. He deigned now to speak to the young man at length. "Well, well, sir, she's getting along splendidly. I'm happy to say. Sixteen ounces of nourishment this morning, 32 during the night. Miss Bunce has her orders. Pulse is stronger. I'm glad to tell you. I am very hopeful."

Clive spoke, with difficulty. "You're sure she's out of danger now?"

"Well, you mustn't ask such leading questions, young man. She's so very frail there doesn't seem to be much fight there. D'you see what I mean?"

Clive saw. Instantly he was in the depths again.

The doctor thumped him benignly on the shoulder. "Mustn't give up like that. I said she was getting along and I mean it. Only we mustn't be too cocksure. Wait, and see."

On this cold comfort he bustled away. Clive wanted to know where they let him come in for five minutes. Liane lay as one quietly asleep, her lashes resting lightly on cheeks which seemed to him terrifyingly wan. She did not know he was there or, if she did, she gave no sign. Cass came after his telephone message and talked in low tones to the nurse. Her eyes looked strained when she emerged from her conference, but she patted Clive on the arm and tried to cheer him.

He kept saying over and over again, "I never should have let this go on for so long. I was afraid to break in on her too soon. I thought she was all right. How was I to know?"

Cass told him not to reproach himself but he scarcely heard her, so absorbed was he in his own bitter reflections.

"The doctor says it's a case of real starvation," he went on prodding the wound. "Starvation! Did you ever hear anything so horrible?"

Cass shivered. "Don't think of it. It does no good."

Clive paced the floor. He tortured himself. Cass whirled to see the nurse at the door, finger on lip.

"She's conscious. She's asking for her mother. Quick as lightning Cass was in the room, at the bedside. The girl on the pillow stirred as one waking from a long sleep. She spoke. "How did you get here, mother?" She asked in a faint, perfectly natural voice. "Aren't you playing today?"

Cass strove for control. She was not an actress for nothing. "Silly child, it's Monday! Who ever heard of a matinee on Monday?"

"I forgot." The girl sighed a little and shifting ever so slightly under the tautened bed clothes, cushioned her cheek in her palm.

"TOASTING" expels SHEEP-DIP BASE naturally
(Black, biting, harsh irritant chemicals)
present in every tobacco leaf

"They're out - so they can't be in!"

Every LUCKY STRIKE is made of the finest tobacco leaves the world can offer - the finest from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, Georgia and the Carolinas - the Cream of many Crops throughout the world. But all tobacco leaves, regardless of price and kind, as nature produces them, contain harsh irritants. LUCKY STRIKE'S exclusive "TOASTING" Process - a process that mellows, that purifies, that includes the use of the modern Ultra Violet Ray - expels certain harsh irritants naturally present in every tobacco leaf. We sell these expelled irritants to manufacturers of chemical compounds, who use them as a base in making sheep-dip, as well as a powerful spraying solution for fruits, flowers and shrubs - enough to permit the daily dipping of over 50,000 sheep or the daily spraying of many thousands of trees. Thus, you are sure these irritants, naturally present in all tobacco leaves, are not in your LUCKY STRIKE. "They're out - so they can't be in!" No wonder LUCKIES are always kind to your throat.
