CHAIRMAN FAHEY AND HOME OWNERS LOAN CORPORATION

John H. Fahey of Massachusetts is chairman of the home owners loan corporation setup. Chairman Fahey succeeded a South Carolinian who had been named as chairman after the creation of the corporation by the congress. Chairman Fahey is a leading newspaper publisher of New England. He is a life-long democrat. He is said to be an outstanding business man. Now he has issued orders that criminal charges be placed against an unnamed group in unnamed states "in both high and low places." Authoritative sources, according to the Associated Press correspondents, "revealed that the accusations include forcing political contributions, misuse of offices for drinking and dancing parties, assessment of fees for approving mortgages, over appraisals to make large loans possible and a series of claim by borrowers under alleged tutelage of officials that they were in need when in reality they were not."

Additional charges also have been made to Chairman Fahey that untrained men were placed in technical positions under political pressure. A reminder that since the Massachusetts leader took the post of chairman of the corporation "that have been six resignations of state corporation managers and several more are imminent." This corporation was created by the congress for the purpose of saving the mortgaged homes of distressed owners.

Gov. William Langer, a non-partisan republican of North Dakota, is under fire. Many of his close associates are under fire. It is alleged that they violated laws and rules and usages in the distribution of federal relief funds. Well, an indictment is not complete evidence. Accusation of guilt is not conclusive evidence. A citizen has his constitutional rights. He is entitled to his day in court. He is entitled to a fair trial by a jury of his peers. Uncle Sam is the most generous and the greatest benefactor mankind has known. He is the angel of all the people. He should be given a square deal by those in the public service who have sworn to uphold the laws of the country and to account for every dollar of the money of the taxpayer appropriated and then distributed for the aid of those who need financial assistance. There should be no favoritism, and practical politicians should be taught the lesson as well as the slogan "created years ago by Grover Cleveland, "a public office is a sacred trust."

Self preservation is the first law of nature. Think of your home city first and spend your money there.

This is not the time to think of the past, but to help plan for a glorious future.

Police Calls to Be Heard on Program Of Ford Motor Co.

The operations of New York's police radio system, from the time of a telephone call for help to the arrival of radio patrolmen, will be put on the air during the Ford dealer program over a nation-wide WABC-Columbia network Thursday, April 26, from 9:30 to 10 p. m., EST (8:30 to 9 p. m. CST). The music and entertainment features of the program will, as usual, be by Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians. With Police Commissioner John

F. O'Ryban supervising the demonstration and explaining the procedure, a call for police cars will be made by telephone from the stage of the Columbia Playhouse on 44th street. The scene then will then be shifted immediately to the radio control room at headquarters and the listeners-in will hear the call for cars to proceed to the playhouse. Inspector William Allen will be in charge of the headquarters part of the broadcast. Back to the Playhouse, the arrival of the radio police will be awaited and Commissioner O'Ryban will time the response to the second. The patrolmen will come in pairs and report their location when the radio call was received and how they proceeded to the theatre. The purpose of Commissioner O'Ryban's appearance on the Ford program is in line with the police department's desire to disseminate as widely as possible detailed information on the methods of the radio patrol and how the radio and the automobile have become such effective agencies in the detection and prevention of crime. It has been estimated by police officials that if the victims of robbery or an assault would immediately telephone headquarters the building or scene of a crime could be surrounded by police in less than two minutes. Many criminals escape, it is said, because the people do not know how to use the radio police. An actual demonstration, it is believed, will show how simple and easy it is for the public to co-operate.

CHAPTER XLVIII

SIR AUBREY had told Pablito the whole story and now sat waiting for the young man to speak. Pablito seemed too quiet, too contained. His manner made Sir Aubrey remember the pitiable twisting of Mary's hands. He could not guess whether his confession and his promise to do everything possible to make amends would count or not.

He saw Estelle in the twilight which had thickened swiftly. She was standing against a wall and she was trembling as she waited. When he had reached her he found that he could not speak. Pablito dropped to his knees and felt her hand on his hair. "Oh, please!" she whispered. "Please!" And he knew that she meant, "Get up! Kiss me!" He struggled to his feet; to hold her close and kiss her frantically. To murmur things he had not said, for so long—those exaggerations that are but a part of the truth when one is in love.

Aubrey opened the door. Pablito stepped into the room—not a Pablito Sir Aubrey had ever seen before but a new version, strong and smiling. Sir Aubrey regarded the youth with wonder, forgetting the tears on his cheeks. Pablito saw them, remembering suddenly that there were tears in the world and reasons for them. "I came back," he said, laying a hand on Sir Aubrey's arm, "because I know that I was brutal. I'm not—feeling brutal any more."

He had told his wife and daughters the same story, promising them the inheritance that was rightfully theirs but declaring that the house and enough to run it must be his son's. His son's! And now that son sat before him, so strangely quiet.

"Don't ever leave me again!" "Dearest, I never will," he answered. "I love you more than ever, Pablito!" "My dearest! My darling!" "I can't live—now—without you!" Her hands, as she spoke, moved over his arms and shoulders, clinging, reassuring him that she was really there. In a moment he thought—trembling and breathless as he looked down at her—in a moment he would wake again. "Is it true?" he managed to whisper.

Then he had to wipe away the tears because they were rolling down his cheeks again. "Oh, dear!" he murmured, wholly ashamed. Then he had to sit down in a wicker chair that squeaked as he sat in it. For when a great deal of joy or pain came to him Sir Aubrey realized that the years were creeping up on him and that those years were numbered.

Suddenly Pablito spoke a little metallically. "I suppose she had a rotten time of it," he said. "It killed her," Sir Aubrey admitted.

He heard, "Oh, Pablito, dearest!" and then a sob. "Of course it's true."

"Father!" Pablito repeated. "I'm going to be married. The girl who has promised to marry me has lost her father. So if you'll dress you can come to our wedding and give her away—to me. You'll be gaining a daughter. It's all very sudden—and rather amazing, isn't it?" He laughed a little unsteadily as he finished speaking.

Pablito pulled up a sleeve to show on his upper arm a jagged, deep white scar. "My foster mother did that," he said. "She did it one day when her mood was no worse than usual. I saw her in Key West a month ago. Noyes had been supporting her, not knowing, of course, who she was. She recognized me and her worn-out heart stopped of fright. She knew I had too much to remember. But I didn't really blame her. It's you I blame! You and men like you who desert children and leave them to fend for themselves! Norris Noyes is my father—"

"That—is your answer?" Sir Aubrey asked. Pablito nodded. "I will take nothing from you!" he said. "It is too late."

"Then some day at Lower Girtings—" Sir Aubrey began, but Pablito could not let him go on with his dream. "I'm sorry to rush you," he said. "But we really must go right away. Estelle is waiting for me. She is waiting for me!"

Standing stiffly, he watched Sir Aubrey make his way rather slowly toward the stairway, realizing as he did so (and trying to ignore the thought) that Sir Aubrey was an old man—a very old man. But Pablito could not forget the woman who had been his mother—the woman whose name, Sir Aubrey had said, was Mary Marriage.

As he stood thus, rigid from the moment that had passed, Noyes came hurrying up the stairs. Noyes' eyes were bright, his thin cheeks flushed. "Pablito—" he said breathlessly. "I have a message for you. Estelle Field wants to see you."

Then after a deep, indrawn breath Pablito's teeth set on his lower lip, his hands clenched and for a moment he closed his eyes. Influence with the authorities had made it possible to arrange the marriage ceremony hastily. Within half an hour Estelle would be his wife. His wife!

He realized he had hoped a great deal as he lay, trembling, under the mosquito netting. And he knew he had loved Pablito by the hurt that Pablito had wrought him. Suddenly tears gathered in his eyes and rolled down his cheeks. He let them come, unchecked by the handkerchief in the pocket of his Bond street pyjamas.

Then there was a tap on the door. For a moment Sir Aubrey was minded to ignore it. He could hardly see anyone now, but something made him struggle free of the mosquito netting and move unsteadily toward the door. There he called out, "What is it?" in a voice that he tried to make crisp.

"It is I—Pablito," he heard. Sir

IN an amazingly short time (considering the distance he had to cover) Pablito was tipping a shabby little boy who opened the gate of the Field estate for him. Then he went to the garden behind the house, the garden that faced the sea.

Prices For "Gate Crashing" Vary

By HENRY T. RUSSELL
 United Press Staff Correspondent
 LONDON.—There is an unwritten price list for gate-crashing with chaperons in Britain. Just as anyone looking for a meal in a restaurant or hotel, is given a menu which indicates the cost of the meal, so those who want to meet London's "400" are tactfully told that the higher the title, or the more famous the name, the higher will be the bill.

The cost of chaperoned "gate-crashing" throughout Britain varies. Poor people pay less . . . and get less. Rich people are made to pay large sums with a smile: from $20,000 to $100,000. Part of the monies expended for being "introduced" to those who ordinarily would not want to meet you is in fees. The rest of the money, usually the overwhelmingly large part of it, is in direct or indirect expenses. Take for instance Mr. M. Bishous, of no-town-in-particular. He is a wealthy dealer in anything convenient. He wants his daughter to meet all and sundry in "high society." He is willing to pay any price for the accommodation. He approaches a friend. After a certain amount of entertaining at M. Bishous' expense, the friend introduces him to someone else who for a consideration arranges that Lady Downenot shall chaperon the daughter. First there is the fee for chaperoning. This ranges from $2,500 to $10,000 for the season. Then the lady advises that in order to start the ball rolling it is necessary for Mr. Bishous to take the house of some noble for the season. This will cost according to the location and size of the real estate to be hired, and the fame or importance of the owner. It is not impossible to hire a good class of London residence, including the servants, for between $500 and $1,000 monthly. The chaperon usually recommends the house of somebody she knows. She, naturally, receives a commission of between five and twenty per cent. Then the business of entertaining London's smart set commences. The cost can be measured in thousands of dollars for a season. This depends largely upon the bawiness of the social climber. Add to this what the chaperon makes him spend in clothes with which to equip his society-thirsty debutante. The bill mounts to in the neighborhood of $100,000 rapidly.

 By United Press
 CLEVELAND—The question of whether Cleveland public schools which bear supposedly meaningless names shall be re-christened is holding the attention of school board members.
 Names such as Beehive, Hicks and Waring have come under the spotlight. Alfred A. Mensch, board president, ventured the opinion at a board session that he was certain "some people think Waring school was named after Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians."

Reputation Is a Big Factor In Beer Sales

The success of Budweiser Beer proves that the public is prompt in accepting products of outstanding merit backed by an established reputation.

For the past 75 years Anheuser-Busch, Inc., of St. Louis has been known the world over as producers of quality products exclusively. The world-wide acceptance enjoyed by this famous St. Louis institution for over three-quarters of a century has been achieved solely on the rigid policy of the maintenance of superior quality.

This brewery, which is the largest in the world, never closed its doors or ceased operations during the 14 year period of prohibition. The equipment was continually kept up to the minute and beer, which was converted into legalized beverage, was brewed under government license all through the prohibition period.

Anheuser-Busch have consistently, year in and year out, supported their dealers with localized advertising through the newspapers. This year, as always, they are blanketing the country with newspaper advertising to run continuously through the height of the beer selling season. This advertising is hammering home the fact that the quality of Budweiser has set the standard measure for all bottled beers.

Anheuser-Busch officials report that they have orders for Budweiser beer from every nation on the face of the globe. Such popularity could never be won with anything short of Budweiser quality. This quality combined with the support of newspaper advertising shows just what can be accomplished when a product of outstanding merit is backed by consistent newspaper advertising.

Soviet Bishops On A Visit To Rome

VATICAN CITY, Rome.—The Pontifical Commission for Russia has just received two refugee Russian prelates who have spent several years in Bolshevik prisons. These two heroes of the faith are Monsignor Theophylus Matulanis, auxiliary bishop of Leningrad, and Monsignor Julian Grouski, Apostolic Administrator of Cisbaikalian Siberia.

The Pope received the two bishops in a lengthy private audience, and was particularly interested in their adventurous story. The two bishops, after spending some years in Soviet prisons, were eventually exchanged for some Lithuanian prisoners, and so were allowed to regain their freedom. They made their report to the Pontifical Commission after their visit to the Pope. The Pontifical Commission, formed by the present Pope to keep alive the spark of Christianity in paganism, Russia, continues its secret work despite alleged persecution inflicted on its members by the Bolsheviks. Bishops and priests continue to be persecuted and ordained, and every attempt is maintained to keep a kind of skeleton hierarchy alive.

It is understood in the Vatican that the reports of the escaped Russian bishops go to show that religion has ceased to exist in Russia, especially in the cities except as a memory. Yet the members of the Pontifical Commission say they are not discouraged.

Collector Urges A Stamp Pedigree

PHILADELPHIA.—A plan to pedigree postage stamps is urged by a Philadelphia collector. H. L. Lindquist, who has one of the best collections of rare postage stamps in the United States, made the proposal at the first annual dinner of the Record Stamp Club.

"Collectors constantly are being duped by stamp counterfeiters," he said. "It is increasingly difficult for even experts to tell a good imitation from a genuine rare stamp."

"A solution would be to have every stamp of great rarity supplied with a complete pedigree, showing its past history and ownership, and carrying a photographic reproduction. The pedigree would be sold with the stamp."

Texas Legion Will Take a Part In An Air Roundup

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Aerial routes are set, and Texas will participate in the nation-wide aerial roundup of membership cards and dues of the American Legion on May 1, H. L. Plummer, assistant national adjutant at national headquarters of the Legion announced here today.

It is estimated that 50 planes will converge on Indianapolis about 2 o'clock the afternoon of May 1. This is two days in advance of the scheduled May meeting of the National Executive committee on May 3 and 4. This allows a day in which to have the membership cards counted in order that a report may be made to this governing body of the Legion. Last year when the first nation-wide aerial roundup was held, 50,000 cards and dues were collected. It is estimated that 100,000 will be added to the rolls in this second event.

The package of cards and dues from the department of Texas will be brought to Indianapolis through regular air mail service, scheduled to arrive in Indianapolis on the afternoon of May 1.

There will be four main, or arterial, flights covering the United States in addition to the individual ones. The main ones are:

- 1. Plane leaving Los Angeles, passing through Winslow, Ariz., Albuquerque, N. M., Kansas City to Indianapolis.
2. Plane leaving New York, contacting New Jersey at Newark, through Philadelphia and Columbus, Ohio, to Indianapolis.
3. Plane leaving New Orleans, through Jackson, Miss.; Memphis and Louisville to Indianapolis.
4. Plane leaving Portland, Ore., through Boise, Salt Lake City, Cheyenne, Omaha and Des Moines to Indianapolis.

In each of these main flights there will be a Legion messenger in charge of the cards and dues that will be picked up from various departments along the line of flight.

The evening of May 1 the pilots, messengers, other Legion officials and prominent figures in the world of aviation, will assemble at a banquet to be held in celebration of the roundup, and to be addressed by Edward A. Hayes, national commander. He will reveal, according to Mr. Plummer, important progress that is being made by aviation companies in contributions to the national defense of America.

Policeman Will Enter Ministry

MANSFIELD, O.—A policeman here is studying to be a minister. Lieut. Leroy Coffey, regular member of the police department, has that ambition.

Professors at Ashland college, where he attends morning classes, know him as a student and address him as "Mr. Coffey."

On evenings off duty he is a frequent speaker before clubs on sociological problems.

Back in 1926 Coffey completed theological studies in a New York seminary. But he believed he was not properly prepared to enter the pulpit. He wanted to "see more of life." So he turned salesman for a while.

In 1927, he joined the police department. "The ministry, generally, is failing to accomplish its aims. I thought the reason was that most ministers know life only as it should be and not as it is," Coffey explained. Policing gives him the "taste of life" he sought for ministerial preparation.

He plans to major in sociology at Ashland college, then enter the Ashland Theological school.

Coffey is rated as a "regular fellow" among other members of the force, who say he is no "goody-good." He is married and has a family.

Great Britain hasn't provided for paying on the war debt to the U. S. in her next budget. But Uncle Sam still can figure it's coming to him.

ALTHOUGH ancient men, many thousands of years ago, hammered meteoric iron into tools and weapons, it was only a little over one hundred years ago that scientists gave it and admitted that there was such a thing as a meteorite. Americans were among the last to admit it.

SPRING is the time to experiment. Have you ever tried avocados on the family? If not, get a few. In salad or fruit cup, they will add a note of grateful novelty when everybody is tired of all the old things.

In Florida the avocado is known as alligator pear or midshipman's butter. In California some call it calavo. By any name, it will still be rich in fat and vitamins A, B, D, E and G, not to speak of calcium, iron, phosphorus and assorted minerals.

They cook the avocado in Florida, but most people like it better raw. When the thick-skinned flesh yields to a slight pressure, such as an apple does when we test for "mellowness," avocados are ready to eat. The flesh then is as smooth and tender as baked custard.

Tasty First Course
A zesty first course for a luncheon or dinner uses tomatoes and avocados in combination with crab flakes. Choose small, perfectly ripe and unblemished tomatoes—one for each person to be served. Scald, dip in cold water and peel. Scoop out the seeds and chill in a well seasoned French dressing for an hour. Drain and fill with equal parts of finely diced avocado and crab flakes generously sprinkled with lemon juice. Lime juice can be substituted for lemon if convenient.

The alligator pear combines well with any citrus fruit and forms the base of many pleasant cocktails. An acid is used to bring out the rich flavor. A very simple and decidedly up-to-date way to serve an avocado cocktail is to dice the fruit, sprinkle with salt and a few grains of white pepper and pour over a sauce made of tomato catsup and lime juice. It must, of course, be very cold. Prepared for Salad

Avocado and grape fruit pulp is delicious either as an appetizer or salad. When used as a salad, the grape fruit is preferred in whole carapels carefully freed from all skin and marinated in French dressing for an hour. The avocado is cut in slices the same size and shape as the grape fruit carapels and sprinkled with salt and lemon or lime juice. They are arranged rounded side up in a leaf of lettuce, alternating the fruits. A thread of green pepper can be laid across each salad if a vivid green garnish is wanted. Three slices of avocado and two sections of grape fruit make a nice serving for a dinner salad. If the salad is wanted as a main course luncheon salad to be served with sandwiches, larger portions should be provided.

Another delicious way to serve avocados is to cut them in halves—large ones in quarters—and to move the seed without touching the lettuce, alternating the sliced avocado before cutting as it discolors on standing. Eat with a spoon.

Teachers Criticize Accrediting Body

FORT WORTH.—Many classroom teacher organizations throughout the state charge the Committee on Classified and Accredited High Schools with failure to maintain higher standards. This is revealed in a study just completed by Dr. Lewis B. Cooper, Director of Research Department, State Teachers Association. Regardless of the fact that 89 per cent of the officers of classroom teacher organizations and 90 per cent of the superintendents expressed their approval of the ruling of the Accrediting Committee in setting up higher professional standards, many of the teacher organizations severely criticize the Committee for its inactivity and weakness in maintaining former standards.

They alleged that the committee failed to serve the needs of the children and the teachers of Texas by permitting larger classes to be organized and by allowing teachers to be assigned additional class work. All of this additional work has been placed on the teacher in the face of reduced salaries and the rapidly rising costs of commodities brought on by the depression and the New Deal they maintain. The Committee should take firm action they maintain, in reinstating former standards of instruction prior to the enforcement of the higher professional standards which involve further expense and require more of the teachers' time.

Another criticism that is made by classroom teachers is that their organization does not have fair and adequate representation on the Committee. It is pointed out that three-fifths of the teaching force of he school systems reported are employed on the elementary school level. Taking the state as a whole, this large group of 13,431 elementary school teachers is without direct representation on the Accrediting Committee. They want to know if this is a fair democratic deal. Although few teacher organizations were opposed to the requirements for higher professional attainments, there was considerable criticism of the action of the Committee in lowering former standards and thus reducing instructional efficiency by overloading the teacher.

The type of training program offered by the colleges of elementary school teachers comes in for a share of the constructive criticism. They suggest that a more nearly uniform professional degree on the elementary school level be recognized and hat all higher institutions training teachers be compelled to conform to certain requirements under professional supervision.
