GEN. MITCHELL AGAIN GIVES US THOUGHT

You can always count on Gen. William E. Mitchell to say something that will start an argument. His most recent outburst—in which he told the Federal Aviation Commission, among other things, that the United States should proceed to build at least 50 dirigibles along the lines of the Macon—ought to provoke discussion that will last for many days.

Laying aside the general's fondness for saying startling things just to rattle the tempers of military bigwigs, it ought to be added that where aviation is concerned he has a pretty good knowledge of what he is talking about.

That is to say that, if General Mitchell still believes in the dirigible as a military weapon, it might be worth our while to re-examine the question thoroughly—in spite of the disillusionment which the loss of the Akron brought to us.

For General Mitchell goes on to say that the loss of the Akron reflects on the competence of the navy's lighter-than-air experts rather than on the capabilities of the dirigible itself. Given proper handling, he says, the Akron should not have been lost; its loss, in other words, is not prima facie evidence that giant dirigibles are too fragile for military use.

It is General Mitchell's idea that aircraft have completely revolutionized strategy. Navies and armies take a back seat, as he sees the military art; the side that can strike the hardest blow in the air will win, because it will demoralize its foe before the fleets and the troops can swing into action.

Given this viewpoint, it is not hard to see why the general urges a fleet of 50 dirigibles. Get such a fleet, he says in effect, and you can strike at a distance of six or eight thousand miles. You can send your air fleet clear across either ocean; even if you lose half of it, you deal such a devastating blow that you win the war.

Now it is precisely such an attitude that is designed to provide an argument. Orthodox military men will dispute every sentence of it. It is extremely difficult for the ordinary citizen to figure out just which side has the right of it.

But General Mitchell's remarks do indicate that we may be a trifle hasty in condemning the dirigible. One does not need to go all the way with him to feel that these frail but ingenious ships may yet prove decidedly useful in the national defense.

Large Text Given Through Program

That the Ranger people are devoted patrons of the fine art of music was evidenced Sunday afternoon by the enthusiastic reception given Mrs. Mildred Moorman, when she was presented at the first Baptist church in "junior certificate" program by her teacher, Mrs. M. R. Newham.

The church was beautifully decorated by admiring friends and the floral arrangement, on grand piano and window recesses, together with the stined glass art memorials, "mellow" coloring, with idyllic accents composed a pleasing background for Mildred as she stepped before her audience.

She was greeted in dainty white gowns, which harmonized so perfectly with her graceful charming manner that an exquisite picture was presented reminding one of some Dresden figure or portrait from the old masters, come to life.

Mildred demonstrated an unusual grasp of technique, for one so young, rendering a most sympathetic interpretation of the ever difficult Bach, Mozart, Schubert and others, classic composers from whom her program of 10 numbers was chosen.

The program:

- Invention No. 8, Bach
- Solfeggietto, Bach
- Sonata in C Major, Mozart
- Consolation, Mendelssohn
- Hark, Hark, the Lark! Schubert
- Fur Elise, Beethoven
- Prelude, Op. 81, Heller
- The Mountain Stream, Smith
- Fas des Amphores, Chaminade
- Argonaute, Massenet

These selections, played from memory, indicated a talented achievement of high degree, which reflected credit on instructor as well as student.

Mrs. M. R. Newham graciously presented Mrs. Harriet Bacon MacDonald of Dallas, who has been Mrs. Newham's house guest and under whom Mrs. Newham has been taking post-graduate work on the Dunning system of improved music study.

Mrs. Harriet Bacon MacDonald, who is a most efficient normal teacher and member of the faculty of the Dunning system of improved music study, gave Miss Moorman her examination in her theoretical and playing program, stating that her grades exceeded any she had ever known in her long years of experience as a teacher.

Mrs. MacDonald, who proved herself a charming speaker, in referring to teacher and student, congratulated Ranger on having a teacher as advanced and efficient as Mrs. Newham. For Mildred Moorman she predicted a brilliant future in music, announcing that the winning of her "junior certificate" would merit recognition by music centers throughout the United States.

Spanish Revolt Is Near End Today

By United Press
MADRID, Spain, Oct. 9.—Troops captured the rebel stronghold at Trubia, in the outskirts of Oviedo, today, without firing a shot as 1,800 prisoners were taken.

At the same time, government airplanes bombed three rebel centers near Oviedo. Two of the centers were reported to have been destroyed.

Members of parliament gathered for a session expected to bring stern measures to suppress the revolt.

A thousand members of the Spanish foreign legion arrived today and it was believed 3,000 more would arrive soon.

Sammy Ruth Matthews and Camilla Hunt will entertain with a tap dance. Those on the college program committee were Anne Marie Kelly and Marie Galloway.

High School Chapel

High school chapel will be entertained today by a talk from Mr. Holloway.

Half Commotion

Two pupils, one a sophomore, and the other a senior, were discussing facts in general while they did justice to a big bar of candy.

The sophomore stopped in the middle of the sentence, drew a deep breath and made an awful face. "There! That's what I received in the hall today!" she said in a disgusted tone as she displayed a skinned shin. "It looks as though those freshmen will never learn to go down the hall and steps without endangering the lives of innocent bystanders! One nearly killed me today."

"As I walked briskly down the hall one freshman decided that I was not moving fast enough for her, so she started to dodge around me. Since she was giving me a dirty look and not watching where she was going, she ran into George. As for me, I would rather run into a brick wall. Before she could stop, she dropped all her books, knocked mine out of my arms, and kicked my poor, poor leg. It's simply disgusting, but what can be done?"

The senior laughed and then said, "Yes, I saw it all. Seriously, if only everyone would keep to the extreme right while going down the hall or up the steps, nothing like that would ever happen again." In order that this should be done, patrols should be appointed by the principal to be stationed at points on the steps and in the hall. By everyone's keeping to the right of the patrols, all confusion would be eliminated. — By Inez Baker.

Simmons, Barron Win Bouts at the Elks Monday Night

Coke Simmons, Oregon school teacher, beat the good Irish name, Jimmie Murphy, last night at the Elks arena in the first two falls of a three-fall scheduled two-hour match. The Irishman was no match for the school teacher, Simmons being much faster and using trick holds that kept Jimmie on the defensive most of the time.

Dutch Barron, pinch-hitting for Benny Wilson, beat Charles Heard in two falls out of three, Heard winning the second fall in 30 seconds.

It was announced from the ring last night that Simmons and Heard will be matched for next Monday night.

This was one of the best matches seen in some time at the arena and next Monday's card promises to be good, as Heard and Simmons are fast and will give the fans a run for their money.

It isn't hardly fair—of course boys don't actually wear smoked glasses when they read but they might as well in the average home because the lighting arrangement is such that most reading, studying or playing is done in dim, poorly arranged lighting that certainly gives a smoked glass effect.

If your boy started school this year, his chances of being nearsighted increase with every school year until at the end of his college days he has only a 60-40 chance of escaping wearing glasses. Research proves that proper lighting goes a long way toward keeping vision normal. It is most important to have good lamp bulbs and correct lighting fixtures and portable lamps. Look yours over before the day goes by—you'll see many ways that you can improve your home lighting and give your children a better than average chance.
