UNEMPLOYED HOLD KEY TO INDUSTRIAL JAM
 "An administration that came into office to the tune of a nation-wide banking collapse and the almost complete stagnation of trade and industry, is being forced by the irresistible logic of circumstances to discover in unemployment the key log of the entire jam."

The banks have been put on their feet, and trade and industry are being stimulated; but 8,000,000 unemployed men can cast a longer shadow than closed banks and unbalanced profit ledgers, and if their condition cannot be improved the improvements that are made in other quarters are not likely to be permanent.

It is this factor in the situation which is more and more coming to occupy the center of the administration's attention. It is reflected in the president's recent assertion that he "will not accept as a necessary condition of our future a permanent army of unemployed"; and it bids fair to give the administration an extraordinarily complex problem.

It is interesting to analyze the unemployment army. A few months ago Isador Lubin, U. S. commissioner of labor statistics, made such an analysis. He found that factories making consumers' goods—food, clothing, luxuries, shoes, and so on—are now employing only 100,000 fewer persons than they employed in 1929. The durable goods industries—those which produce things used in the making of other things—are, on the other hand, now employing 1,500,000 fewer persons than they employed in 1929.

Employment in the railroad, mining and "service" industries is about 2,000,000 below the 1929 level.

Thus, in these great industrial and business groups, a complete return to the 1929 level would result in re-employment of only 4,000,000 men. And more than twice that number, by the most conservative figures, are now idle!

Where do we turn, then? Most of the remaining jobless, says Mr. Lubin, originally worked in building construction, on the farms, and in professional and domestic service. The new housing program may restore jobs to those in the first group; improvement in the farm situation is the key to the second group; and only a general, all-around business revival will take care of the third.

Analyzed in this way, it is obvious that the unemployment problem is far from simple. No one program, by itself, will come close to solving it. There must be a broad

It is good for a merchant to look back, after years of service to his community, and say, "All is well," to take stock not only in the merchandise world, but of the confidence of the people—a confidence built on the solid foundation of their belief in his honesty of purpose and judgment of values.

Any further reduction of America's defenses will not achieve the end desired by the pacifists any more than would the disbandment of the police force of New York City stop crime in that city.

BUTTERFLIES WING SOUTHWARD

CLEVELAND, O.—A large swarm of monarch butterflies, unusual in northern Ohio, passed over the downtown area recently, headed south. Harold Madison, director of the Cleveland Museum of Natural History, said they probably would fly until they got south of the Gulf Stream. He said south-bound monarch butterflies seldom were seen in a large city. The monarch species is orange, marked with black stripings.

The Clew of the Forgotten Murder

BEGIN HERE TODAY
 When DAN BLEEKER, junior publisher of The Blade, learned that CHARLES MORDEN, police reporter, had been mysteriously killed by a woman, he determined to employ SNEYD GRIFF, famous criminal investigator, to solve the murder. Morden had been assigned to investigate the case of FRANK B. CATHAY, wealthy and prominent man, who had threatened to sue The Blade because the newspaper reported Cathay had been arrested. Later it was proven that the man arrested, giving the name of Cathay, and accompanied by a girl called MARY BLEEKER, was an impostor. MORDEN'S WIFE, a woman Bleeker's husband will drop the charges if The Blade publishes a retraction, and this is done.

A day later Morden is found dead. Shortly after that comes the news that Cathay is dead—possibly of poison. Bleeker goes to see Sidney GRIFF.

CHAPTER IX
 BLEEKER spoke slowly. "You understand," he said, "that Morden was investigating Cathay's life. Cathay isn't what he cracked up to be."
 "How do you know that?" Griff asked.
 "Because," said Bleeker, "I've been in the newspaper business long enough to accept any small town celebrity at his face value."
 "Riverview isn't exactly a small town," Griff pointed out.
 "The same principle applies," Bleeker said. "It's a suburb, and as far as that's concerned I won't accept any man at his face value. Not unless he's a gangster, or a crook. That's one thing you find out from being in the newspaper business. You're a criminologist, Griff. You know crooks. I am a newspaper man, I know people, and this man Cathay is simply too good to be true. The president of the luncheon club, the president of the chamber of commerce, director of the bank, candidate for city councilman on a reform ticket. And his wife had fear in her eyes."
 "Fear?" asked Griff.
 "Fear," repeated Bleeker. "She was afraid of something."
 "Afraid of the newspaper?" asked Griff.
 "Perhaps," Bleeker said. "But I looked to me as though she was too adept at covering up the fear to have recently acquired it. I would say it was something she had been living with for weeks or months."
 "And there was some talk about Cathay's death being due to poison?"
 "Apparently there was," Bleeker said. "But it's being hushed up. Cathay was an influential man in Riverview. The family have influential friends. There were two doctors on the case. One of the doctors thought there were circumstances surrounding the death that made it resemble poisoning. The other doctor attributed it to natural causes. He's signing a death certificate."
 "There'll be no autopsy?" asked Griff.
 "There's going to be an autopsy," Bleeker said grimly. "I'm going up to interview Beckley, the editor of the Riverview Chronicle. That was the newspaper that was on the opposite side of the political fence from the Cathay side. Beckley and I have exchanged favors in the past. He started investigating the Cathay death and then telephoned me that he was

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SERVICES

"Are Sin, Disease and Death Real?" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, October 14.

The Golden Text is: "The Lord is our judge, and the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king; he will save us" (Isaiah 33:22).

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Whether it is easier to say to the sick of palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?" (Mark 2:9).

The Lesson-Sermon includes also the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Sickness, sin, and death, being inharmonious, do not originate in God nor belong to His government. His law, rightly understood, destroys them. Jesus furnished proofs of these statements" (page 427).

Mechanical Cotton Picker Proved In Exhaustive Tests

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 13.—A cotton picking machine that can pick 100 acres an hour and do the work of 100 laborers was assured today by John and Mack Rust, Memphis inventors, who claim their long experimenting has proved a success. It would be the first mechanical cotton picker on the market. More than 700 patent applications on cotton picking devices are on file in Washington. The Rust brothers' machine has a rapidly rotating smooth steel spindle that is moistened as it enters the open boll. The moistened spindle has no hooks or claws; it twists the cotton out of the boll. John Rust said he got the idea while watching an old negro woman spin a thread of cotton on a Louisiana spinning wheel. The Rusts sought to convince the public by exhibiting a letter from W. E. Ayres, assistant director in charge of the Delta Experiment station at Stoneville, Miss. The letter read in part: '... I am glad to repeat to you that in my judgment your machine should be placed on the market without delay. ... There is no question but that it works and works well. The fact that you picked five bales in less than a day in cotton ranging from 36 to 71 inches tall is enough to convince the most skeptical.' The machine is being demonstrated near Burdette, Ark., in Mississippi county.
