Glamour of Football Deceives Its Critics

Along about this time every year, earnest and well-intentioned people are apt to become worried about the status of college football.

Week after week come the reports of gigantic crowds at college football games. The total figures on gate receipts look like payments on the international debts.

All of this, lumped together, comes under the heading of "overemphasis," as it is called. A game devised for the recreation of college students draws so much attention that in the minds of many people it completely overshadows the regular classroom activities.

Yet there is a great deal of loose talk about this. Critics of big-time football grow just about as mixed in their consideration of values as do the unthinking boosters. For it is not the fact that college football draws big crowds and creates black headlines that is wrong; it is the fact that in some institutions the responsible authorities are carried off their feet by enthusiasm for the sport.

It needs to be emphasized that youngsters in college, for all their effervescence and high spirits, are a pretty level-headed lot. They are seldom really deceived by the glamour of football.

They enjoy the game, as participants or as spectators; they enjoy the excitement, the thrills and the publicity. But if they get anything approaching the right kind of leadership from their faculty, they aren't apt to be deluded by it all.

It is often true that the football coach draws a higher salary than any professor. But that only parallels the situation in other walks of life. Prize fighters make more money than clergymen, movie actors make more money than scientists, stock promoters outearn doctors.

Our whole system of rewards is askew; football simply gives the college student an object lesson in the fact before he leaves the campus.

College football is overemphasized, to be sure. But its very overemphasis is typical of American life. The youngster at Notre Dame, Michigan, Stanford, or Alabama is not nearly so apt to be fooled by it all as we outsiders sometimes suppose.

Wheat Pasture Cuts Need of Dry Feed By 75 Per Cent

WASHINGTON—Good wheat pasture reduces the dry feed required to carry livestock in the late fall, winter and early spring by 75 to 85 per cent, except during weather when the pasture cannot be used. However, the best results from wheat pasture are obtained when livestock have access to dry feeds.

VALERIA BENNETT had known Peter Kendall since childhood. It had always been understood they would marry. But Valeria lost Peter to pretty Ann Hollister because she couldn't bear to give up certain liberties while engaged. Her love for parties proves fatal and a poor little librarian runs off with her fiancé.

Experiments by the U. S. Department of Agriculture at Hays, Kans., in cooperation with the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station, and records from 62 wheat farmers show further that, in the Great Plains States, wheat that is growing vigorously is not injured, but may even be benefited, by seasonal grazing which is not excessive. When growth is slow or the wheat is pastured too heavily, too early in the fall, or especially, too late in the spring, yields may be reduced from 2 to 10 bushels an acre. Even then, in years when winter feed is scarce, the value of the pasturage may offset the loss in yield.

Wheat pasture usually begins in the fall, from Oct. 15 to Nov. 15, after the plants are so rooted that they will not be pulled up by livestock, and may continue through the winter when weather permits until about April 1, but seldom later than April 15. Grazing sometimes is deferred until about March 1 when wheat emerges from winter dormancy. Yields, however, may be reduced materially if heavy grazing is allowed for the full period from October to April. Pastured wheat ripens from 1 to 4 days later than wheat not pastured, but is not so likely to lodge if rainfall has been heavy as grazing prevents excessive growth. Length of the average grazing season, as reported by the 62 farmers, was 84 days with a range of 45 to 150 days. Length of the grazing period and number of animals pastured depends on how much growth the wheat makes and on the need for pasture. Lack of moisture is the greatest hindrance to growth. Judgment and experience are the best guides as to when, how long, and how heavily wheat should be pastured.

The Clew of the Forgotten Murder

BEGIN HERE TODAY When CHARLES MORDEN, reporter for the Blade, is found dead in the corridor on the fifth floor of the Monadnock building in front of an office marked "Edward Shillingby—Investigator." Griff opened the door and entered the room. A young woman, some 22 years of age, with alert brown eyes and quick nervous mannerisms, looked up from a book of accounts which lay open on a "secretary desk." "Mr. Shillingby's Griff asked. "Mr. Shillingby is dead. I am his secretary. I am winding up his affairs, trying to collect some of his back accounts." Griff nodded. "Permit me," he said, "to introduce myself. I am Sidney C. Griff, a criminologist." "The information that I want," Griff said, "relates to a murder which occurred in this building." Griff asked, "Very much so," she said. "I hope," she told him, "you can do something about it. The police are getting ready to turn Lampton loose. There was only one witness—a man named Decker—and Lampton bribed Decker to fall down on the sidewalk. I think you represented Decker, didn't you?" "Let's pass that for the moment," Griff said. "Tell me precisely what happened, please." She stared steadily at him for a moment, then said, "Mr. Shillingby was supposed to get some information concerning Lampton. He shadowed Lampton. On the night of the murder a gray Cadillac car with the left rear fender dented drove up to the sidewalk and parked. A gangster got out, approached Mr. Shillingby, fired several shots into his body, jumped in the car and drove away. "And the witness—Decker?" Griff asked. "You should know all about Decker," she said. "He was walking along the street a hundred yards or so behind Mr. Shillingby. The man in the gray Cadillac thought at first Decker was the man he wanted. He slowed the car and poked out a gun. Then he realized his mistake and drove on." "He didn't get out of the machine?" "No." "But he did get out of the machine when he killed Mr. Shillingby?" "Yes, I believe that's right." "Then," Griff said slowly, "the man who did the killing was several yards or so behind Mr. Shillingby and he had confidence." "Why do you say that?" she asked. "Because," he said, "Mr. Shillingby knew that he was in a position of danger. Yet, when this man stopped the car by the curb and approached Mr. Shillingby, Shillingby made no effort whatever to draw his gun or to protect himself." "Yes," she said slowly, "I guess that's right, although that hadn't occurred to me before." "Now then," Griff said, "can you tell me about a Mrs. Blanche Malone?" "It was," she said, "The Second Security Trust of El Paso, Texas." "And just what did they want?" he asked. "They said that Mrs. Malone was connected with an embezzler. They wanted to make certain that certain moneys which she had received did not come from an embezzler." "And Mr. Shillingby made the investigation and reported to the bank?" "Yes." "What did he report?" "He reported that, apparently, her money came to her as the result of investments which she had made from her savings—very fortunate investments in certain oil stocks." "Just one more point," Griff said. "Tell me about the work that Shillingby was doing when he was killed. He was getting information about Lampton?" "He was getting it for some other gangster?" "I didn't think so at the time, but that seems to have been the case." "Abruptly her face lit up. "Now," she said, "I remember where I saw that photograph you showed me." "The photograph of the man—Morden?" "Yes," she said. "Tell us about it," Griff invited. "He was in here," she said, "a day or two after Mr. Shillingby's death. He was very much interested in the identity of the man who had employed Mr. Shillingby. He wanted me to describe the man to him." "And you described him?" asked Griff. "Did you see him?" "Oh, yes," she said. "I saw him and can describe him. He was... " "Perhaps," he said, "I can save a little time here." "Is that," he asked, "the person who employed Mr. Shillingby?" "Good heavens, yes!" she exclaimed. "How did you know? Who is it? Tell me, can we get in touch with him?" "Bleeker crowded forward, and then gave a sudden exclamation. The photograph was that of Frank B. Cathay." (To Be Continued)

they should be about equal to the Bulldogs.

Which may not sound exactly like what he meant. What he was apparently striving to say, as we understood it at the Cisco-Ranger game when he first mentioned it to us, is that the Buckaroos have proved to be a second-half team. They have started out poorly in practically every game and have been trailing at the half, only to come back and win.

The Brownwood Lions crossed up the Buckaroos' plans, however, when they failed to score, and the Buckaroos had to go ahead and win without overcoming a lead on the part of their opponents.

As we remember it, and without going to the trouble of checking up, Cisco led at the half by a score of 13 to 0, only to lose 14 to 13; Eastland scored a touchdown in the first few minutes of play, with apparent ease, and went down against the vicious second-half attack by a score of 20 to 7; and Abilene was leading 7 to 0 at the half and lost by a seven-point margin when the final touchdown was counted and tabulated.

We did some snooping around Saturday, with our first assistant snooper, and found P. E. Shotwell, P. B. Bittle, superintendent of Eastland schools, and a couple of other men we didn't know, in a huddle around a table in an Eastland drug store. We rushed back and notified Prof. Holloway and he checked up and found there was apparently nothing to be excited over. Shotwell was just trying to find out if everything was a-oke in the Bulldog camp. We understand that he admitted to Red Moore later that he had found nothing. This explanation is made to stall off further telephone calls. We have had dozens from fans who had heard the Buckaroos had entered a protest and claimed they had the "goods" on various Bulldogs.
