Our Ideas Reflected By College Youth

Flaming youth may have built a pretty hot fire on our college campuses during the frenzied post-war decade, but the fire has gone out now and the ashes are cold and forgotten.

So, at any rate, says Dr. Charles W. Gilkey, dean of the University of Chicago. The present collection of undergraduates, Dr. Gilkey says, is "the best generation of college students I have seen in 30 years of contact with students."

The Chicago dean finds the improvement manifest in several ways.

For one thing, there is a greater attendance at chapel services, and a wider expression of interest in religious discussions. For another, students are serious-minded and realistic in their attitude toward current events. They are at last awake to the fact that something must be wrong with a social scheme which offers them so little.

"Students are not at all convinced about the solution of our situation, but they are convinced that something is wrong," says Dr. Gilkey. Yet they are not turning red on us.

Communism, the dean reports, attracts the smallest of all campus groups, "because it is a dogma, and if there is one thing a college student can't stand, it is a dogma."

All in all, then, this college generation seems to be in much better health mentally and spiritually than any of recent years; and that, when you stop to think about it, is simply a reflection of a corresponding improvement on the part of the older generation.

For young people in college are not a race apart, born in some cloudy vacancy beyond the stars and transported suddenly to earth to perplex the graybeards. They are, in the main, what we have made them.

They have grown up in a world for which we older folk are responsible, and the things they do and think and say simply mirror conditions which we have created.

If they acted in a distressing way during the great boom years, so that higher education became more or less of a mockery on some campuses, they were just doing as we might have expected them to do—for we older ones likewise acted in a distressing way, and we're still paying for it.

If flaming youth became a by-word, the fault really lay with flaming youth's elders.

So if college youth has grown quieter, more serious, and more thoughtful of late, it is a sign that a similar change has been coming over the nation as a whole.

The depression has been a hard school, but we all have learned something in it; one of the surest and most hope-

It is said that a pessimist is one who finds a difficulty in every opportunity, and an optimist is one who finds an opportunity in every difficulty.

We hear much about the right and left way. There is an old Chinese saying, "In the middle way lies safety."

LIES HURT HALF HOUR

CLEVELAND.—Mrs. Tena Callahan, 67, lay with a browned arm 30 minutes on an icy sidewalk in stream of automobiles passed within a few feet on a busy boulevard. For half an hour Mrs. Callahan waved her injured arm and called vainly for help until a pedestrian, hearing her, took a few seconds of time to call police, though he was en route to take a train.

Income Tax
In A Nutshell

Who Is the Head of a Family?
A taxpayer, though single, who supports and maintains in one household one or more individuals who are closely connected with him by blood relationship, by marriage, or by adoption, and whose right to exercise family control and provide for these dependent individuals is based upon some moral or legal obligation, is the head of a family, and entitled to the same exemption allowed a married person—$2,500. Also he may claim a $400 credit for each dependent. For example, a widower who supports in one household an aged mother and a daughter 17 years old is entitled to an exemption of $2,500 as the head of a family plus a credit of $400 for each dependent, a total of $3,300. The $400 credit, however, does not apply to the wife or husband of a taxpayer, though one may be totally dependent upon the other.

Several factors are involved in determining whether a person who files a return as the head of a family is to be thus classified. The element of either legal or financial dependency must exist. A taxpayer who supports in his home minor children over whom he exercises family control is classified as the head of a family, even though the children may have an income of their own sufficient for their maintenance. If he does not support them, but by reason of their own income, but does exercise family control, he cannot be classified as the head of a family. If an individual supported is an adult and there rests upon the taxpayer a moral or legal obligation to provide a home and care for such individual, the exemption as the head of a family is allowed, provided the individual is financially dependent. If the individual is not financially dependent, the exemption, even though the taxpayer maintains the common home and furnishes the chief support, does not apply.

For income-tax purposes there can be only one head of a family and the exemption cannot be divided. Not infrequently claims for the $2,500 exemption are received from two or more members of a family.

It should be remembered that a single person, whether or not the head of a family, is required to file a return if his or her net income for 1934 was $1,000 or more, regardless of whether the return is nontaxable by reason of the $2,500 exemption.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON.—Crowded off the front page by Mr. Hauptmann and many new varieties of local excitement, the Senate munitions committee nevertheless resumed its hearings with some of its most important revelations.

Its new disclosures were designed to discredit in advance the ineffective, half-way measures for "taking the profit out of war" which it felt would be advocated by B. M. Baruch and Gen. Hugh Johnson, key members of the presidential war profits committee.

And when time comes to propose legislation, this groundwork will be used in argument for more radical legislation than Baruch or Johnson would agree to.

What the committee showed, with almost no publicity, was that war profits taxes were an unsafe and uncertain means of reducing war profits.

The New York Shipbuilding Company, one of the "Big Three" which has made large profits in its business with the navy in both war and peace, reported taxes for the 1918-21 period at only $2,841,527.

Bureau of Internal Revenue agents claimed the company owed the government $14,561,091. The final settlement came in 1925—$5,705,308.

STICKEN SPINDLES

By Lewis Lu Brockman © 1935 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Gale Henderson, pretty and 23, works in a silk mill. She and her 19-year-old brother, Phil, support their invalid father.

Steve Meyers who also works at the mill asks Gale to marry him. She promises to give him an answer in a few days.

Gale goes skating, breaks thru the ice and is rescued by Brian Westmore whose father, now dead, built the mill. Brian has come home after two years in Paris to enter the mill. Gale disappears before he learns her name.

Vicky Thatcher, daughter of Robert Thatcher, general manager of the mill, schemes to captivate Brian.

Leota Boller, another employee, tells Gale the mill workers are planning to organize secretly and demand their rights. She asks Gale to come to a meeting and Gale agrees. Later she learns that Leota is a company spy.

Now Go On With The Story CHAPTER XIX

Gale stood still and said, "Why, Josie—"

"It's the truth," the other insisted stoutly. "Wait till we get out of here—I'll tell you more about it."

They followed the hurrying, pushing crowd along the corridor. Gale had heard there were spies in the mill, that the company paid certain men and women for keeping them informed about what was going on among the employees, but these rumors had never seemed quite real. Could Josie be right about it? Was Leota Boller really a spy?

As they turned into the wash room Josie looked back and said in a low voice, "Wait for me outside."

Gale put on her coat and hat and hurried out of the building. It was only a few minutes before Josie reappeared. Another girl was with her and the three of them went down the walk and through the big gate together. There the third girl set off in one direction and Josie and Gale looked another.

Gale glanced over her shoulder and saw that no one was near enough to overhear. She said, "What makes you think what you said—?"

"About Leota? Because I know it's true. I got a friend who works in the business office and he's seen her in there reportin' what she's picked up snoopin' around. She gets paid for it. Can you imagine that? Gettin' paid for bein' a tattletale. She's not the only one, either. There's lots more. Ed Vogel, the gate-keeper, is the worst of the lot. The low-down, snoopin' tattletale! Believe me, when I see him or that Leota I keep my distance. A person's got to be careful, I tell you. Say—I hope you didn't tell her anything!"

"Why, no," Gale said doubtfully. "I don't believe I did—"

Had she? Had she told Leota Boller anything which, repeated, could make trouble for Gale? She tried to remember what each of them had said. It was Leota who had been outspoken against the company, against the way employees were treated. If Leota was a spy—yes, she might have said those very things, hoping to get Gale to commit herself. All at once Gale remembered about the meeting she had promised to go to.

"I'll tell Leota I can't go," she decided. "I'll tell her there's something else I have to do."

Josie went on speaking. "Gee, if you let anything slip you'll be sorry for it!" she prophesied.

"I'm sure I didn't," Gale told her. She thought it was better not to tell Josie any more about the conversation with Leota. There was still a possibility that Josie might be wrong about the other girl. "Whether she is or not," Gale assured herself, "I won't take chances. I won't go to the meeting with her."

Thus she dismissed the whole affair. It never occurred to Gale that the incident might have more serious consequences.

She had no time to think about Leota Boller when she reached home. Her father lay back against the pillows and Gale noticed with a stab how old he looked. Old and worn and very tired.

He greeted her cheerfully. Yes, Mrs. O'Connor had come in and brought him some food at noon and she'd been in twice since. There wasn't anything he wanted now. He'd slept a part of the day.

"Here's your medicine," Gale told him. "You're to take it three times a day after meals. And here's the evening paper. I'll turn the light on and you can read it while I'm in the kitchen—"

But Tom Henderson said he'd rather not have the light on. And anyhow he didn't feel like reading.

Gale glanced at him anxiously but the glance told her nothing. It was queer he didn't want to read the news. Usually the newspaper was the first thing he called for every evening.

She went to her own room and changed the mill uniform for a house dress. In the kitchen, in place of soiled breakfast dishes she expected to find, there was a pile of clean cups and saucers, plates and knives and forks. Everything had been washed and was waiting to be put away in the cupboard.

"Mrs. O'Connor!" Gale thought. "Bless her! I'll have to find some way to make up for all this—"

She busied herself scraping carrots and chopping cabbage and cutting slices of mush to fry. Phil liked fried mush and it didn't cost much. She set the table as soon as the vegetables were on the stove. Then she made toast and poured steaming hot milk over it. She set a bowl of the milk toast on a tray with a cup of tea and was just ready to take it to her father when Phil came in.

"I'll take it," he offered. "Oh, thanks, Phil!"

Gale went about getting the meal on the table and when Phil returned it was ready. They sat down, facing each other, each aware of the vacant place at the foot of the table.

Phil said, "He seems better tonight. Don't you think so?"

"Yes. Only he looks so tired." "I noticed that," Phil agreed, "but he told me he didn't feel tired."

"You know he never admits anything is wrong."

"Yes, that's true," Phil talked of other things then. Presently he said, "You must be all in, Gale, after being up most of last night. I'll wash the dishes."

"There's something I'd rather you do," she told him. "Go in and stay with Father. Talk to him or read to him. He's been alone all day, you know. I'm sure he gets lonesome, though he never says anything."

Phil said, "Sure." He said it gruffly and a little awkwardly, as though he was anxious that no one should guess the current of emotion behind the single word.

A little later he arose and went into the front of the house. Gale gathered up the dishes and put on water in the kettle to heat. She was on her way to her father's room when there was a knock at the door.

Gale hurried forward and opened the door. She said, "Good evening—" and then stopped.

Steve Meyers stood on the threshold. He said, "I heard your father was sick. How is he tonight?"

"Better," Gale told him, "but the doctor said he should stay in bed for a few days."

"Could I see him?" Steve asked.

"Why yes, of course." He came into the house then. Gale turned and Steve put out a hand, as though to stop her. He said, "Wait a minute, Gale. There's something I want to talk to you about."

She hesitated, waiting for him to go on.

"I didn't mean what I said the other night," Steve's voice was self-conscious. "I shouldn't have said it. You've got a right to talk to anyone you want to. All the right in the world. I—just wanted you to know that's the way I feel about it."

Gale's eyes were lowered. "I said things I shouldn't have, too," she told him. "Steve—I wish you could go on being friends again."

"Do you mean that?"

"Of course I do."

"Then it's all over," Steve said eagerly. "I mean about these last few days. I've been nearly crazy. Gale. It's the first time we've ever quarreled and it'll be the last. I won't be such a fool again. Look—I brought you something—"

He held out a package, a long white box. Gale took it, looking up in surprise. She untied the cord and drew off the cover. There were six pink rosebuds inside the box, lying on a bed of green.

"Oh, Steve," she exclaimed, "you shouldn't—"

"I thought you'd like them."

"I do like them—they're lovely, Steve! But you shouldn't have done it; you shouldn't have been so extravagant!"

She lifted the roses and held them in her arms. The perfume of the flowers filled the room and their warm color seemed to bring a flush to the girl's cheeks. "They're not much," Steve said. "Not as pretty as you are, Gale. Not nearly. You ought to have flowers all the time. I wish I could buy them for you."

She was smiling and yet, just for a moment, he thought there were tears in her eyes. "Why, Gale," he said, "what's the matter?"

"Nothing. There's nothing the matter, Steve." The dark lashes were lowered so that he could not see her eyes.

He went on then, "You said we could be friends again, Gale. Does that mean I still have a chance? That maybe some day—"

She raised her eyes and met his over the roses. "Let's leave things as they have been for a while, Steve," she said. "Let's just be friends—at least for a while."

There was a moment's pause and then she went quickly on. "Oh, but I must find something to put these flowers in. They ought to be in water!"

She turned away to find a vase. Later Gale Henderson was never to see pink roses without a tightening about her heart. But that was much later after a great many things had happened.

Miss Helen Jacobs, presided at the registration table smartly appointed with a bouquet of snapdragons and spider arabis. The dining table lace covered had as its center a lovely white cake embossed in the chosen color tints and aglow with candles.

The handsome tea service was presided over by Mrs. Edwin George, and Mrs. Saule Perlestein pouring. The board was made complete with crystal glassware. "Merry-Go-Round" Is A Grand Treat

A huge audience forgot its woes and embarked on a pleasure cruise of mirth and melody at the Arcadia Theatre last night, when Reliance's "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round" got under way with just about every screen and radio star producer Harry M. Goetz and Edward Small could think of strutting his or her stuff to the rhythm of the wild, wild waves.

Jack Benny heads the great cast as a genial master of ceremonies, broadcasting his radio programs from a palatial ocean liner plying between New York and Europe, aboard which the entire action of the story takes place.

Nancy Carroll is delightful as the star of Benny's troupe, and handsome, blonde Gene Raymond scores as a young Raffles between Nancy and whom a charming romance develops.

All our favorite radio entertainers contribute their specialties to Benny's programs. Mita Green, returning to the screen a grown-up, sings and does her inimitable imitations of screen stars; Frank Parker and Jean Sargent sing. The Boswell Sisters harmonize as only they can, Patsy Kelly cuts up and Jimmy Grier and his orchestra play in the tone of four smash song hits, "Sweet of You," "Rock and Roll," "Oh, Leo!" and "If I Had a Million Dollars." Benny's famous satire "Grind Hotel," and a number of striking dance ensembles starred by Larry Caballo and Sammy Lee are other highlights of the ship's entertainment.

The passenger list and crew have their pranks, too. There's Sydney Howard, England's favorite comedian, who makes his American debut as a harmless drunk and clown hilariously with Sid Silvers, one-time "stogie" to Phil Baker, playing a phony steward who is actually Raymond's confederate.

As neat a murder mystery as you ever thrilled to is woven into the Leon Gordon story, which Benjamin Stollhoff expertly directed for release through United Artists, when Sidney Blackmer, playing a suave Broadway racketeer who has been making unbecomingly advances to Nancy, is found shot to death

FENCE ATTRACTS VISITORS

DOYLESTOWN, Wis.—A novel fence, 110 feet long made of cement arches studded with bits of broken glass, shiny metal, cracked teacups and other glittering gadgets, attracts scores of motorists to the home of Fred Buschdorf, Doylestown stonemason. The Buschdorf family, when unoccupied with other duties, solicits colored bottles and broken glass from neighbors and continually adds to the heterogeneous fence.

SAUCK CITY, Wis.—Theodore Deoot, former blacksmith and automobile repairman, manufacturer and sells fire sirens known the world over for their shrillness. Deoot who also is an inventor, perfected an ordinary siren and secured a patent for it. His siren incorporates the use of a high tone drum and a low tone drum, giving it acoustical perfection. SAFEGUARD HIS FOOD THE YEAR 'ROUND with ELECTRIC REFRIGERATION

BABY'S food needs the protection of Electric Refrigeration in winter as well as in summer, for Nature is a poor substitute for an electric refrigerator in this part of Texas. Milk, the main item on Baby's menu, spoils quickly unless refrigeration is used, and one warm day or keeping food in a warm kitchen without refrigeration may cause trouble and illness. Electric refrigeration costs less in winter than in summer, for during cool nights the refrigerator has less work to do, and is always protecting food with a 50-degree temperature or less on those days when the temperature in the kitchen or on the porch climbs above this safety mark. Be safe and let your electric refrigerator give you year-round food protection.
