A Life That Rivalled
The One-Hoss Shay

There is something very humanly and touchingly apt about the fact that the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes was the son of the man who wrote the poem about the wonderful one-hoss shay.

If you remember that famous old poem, you will recall that Poet Holmes wrote of a New England deacon who swore that he would build a shay—or chaise, if you prefer—always developed a weak spot, sooner or later. The deacon's was going to be different.

So he got the strongest oak obtainable anywhere for spokes and floor and sills; the straightest and toughest ashwood, the finest elm, the best iron and steel for tires, springs, and so on. And when he had built it the old deacon allowed that here, at last, was a shay without a weak spot.

And so it was. The years rolled by, and the shay rolled over the roads without a hitch—never a breakdown, never a repair. Finally it rounded out a solid century of service; and then, still so stout that it couldn't break one place sooner than another, it simply gave way altogether . . . died of old age, as you might say.

Now Oliver Wendell Holmes, doctor, essayist, and poet, managed to get a pretty good exposition of the solid, substantial, unyielding old New England character into this poem; and few Americans have ever exemplified that character as well as did this poet's own son, Justice Holmes.

What a life the man had, when you stop to think about it! Soldier and statesman, man of letters and jurist, rising to his greatest heights at the age when most men are past their best powers—he seemed to grow younger with the years, to develop a resilient indestructibility like that of the one-hoss shay itself.

And his end, too, was in character. No long, painful decline, no bed-ridden and hazy-minded years for him; there simply wasn't anything about him that could break down.

He came to the end of a long and surpassingly useful life, and, having taken a little leisure to glance back over it, he departed from it, quietly, easily, and swiftly.

America has seen few lives quite as admirable, as well-rounded, and self-sufficient and complete, as that of Justice Holmes.

Income, Not Wealth, Needs Redistribution

When Gov. Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board told the House Banking Committee that a redistribution of income is in order in the United States, he helped to clarify a situation which has grown pretty confused.

Governor Eccles was careful to point out that it is income, and not capital, which needs re-dealing.

It is a point which ought to be kept in mind by all people who are casting wistful glances at any of the current share-the-wealth movements.

At the height of the post-war boom, Governor Eccles says, one-tenth of one per cent of the families at the top of the income list got as much money as 42 per cent of the families at the bottom.

They couldn't possibly spend all their money. Most of it had to be invested.

But investing it simply meant that the money was used to stimulate production. The country's capacity to produce was pushed ahead of its capacity to buy.

Eventually we found ourselves floundering about in a depression featurede by that astounding contradiction, want in the midst of plenty.

Governor Eccles sees the remedy as a more equitable distribution of incomes. This, he says, can be accomplished most effectively through income taxes.

Now contrast this view with the rising demand for a redistribution of capital wealth.

Capital wealth consists largely of intangibles—stocks, bonds, and the like. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the claims of the most vocal share-the-wealth group are true, and that this wealth if divided would give each family $5000. What would happen then?

The family would not get $5000 of income. It would get a $5000 stake in the country's mass of securities. If these gave an average return of 4 per cent, the family would draw exactly $200 a year—which is a long way from being enough to support a family in this day and age.

In other words, we are asked to put through a scheme which would rock capitalism to its foundations to give each family an income far below even the subsistence wage in the pending public works bill.

Mr. Eccles' plan would create infinitely less disturbance in the world of business and finance—and, at the same time, it would be far more lucrativ for the people who need increased incomes.

Some of State's Oldest Oil Wells
Still Producing

By United Press

CORSICANA, Tex.—Some of the first oil wells in the state's oldest field are still producing after almost 40 years of pumping. They are located in the old Corsicana field.

The predecessor of the Magnolia Petroleum company, which recently sold its property in the area to C. L. Brown, Corsicana, brought in the first commercial well to open the gates to Texas' largest industry.

Oil was found in the Taylor formation, from 900 to 1,000 feet. During the first year, 1,450 barrels of crude had been taken from the area. That was in 1896.

After that the industry in the Corsicana field sky-rocketed to 65,975 barrels in 1897 to more than 500,000 barrels the following year. By 1901, the year oil was discovered in the Spindletop area near Beaumont, the field had produced 2,900,000 barrels.

In the 40 years of its existence, this small field has produced more than 8,500,000 barrels of crude from the shallow sands alone.

The rotary drilling principle was first applied in the field and laid the foundation for well depths of more than a mile and a half.

'OUT OUR WAY' - - - - - By Williams

The DARK BLOND by CARLETON KENDRAKE

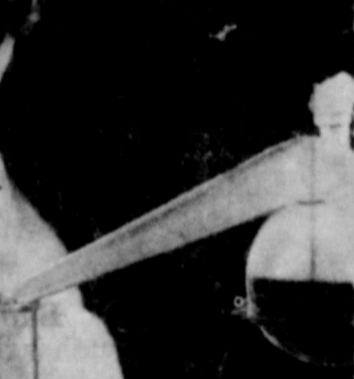

Millicent Graves' employer, Dringgold, tells her he has a confession to make and warns against a woman in a black coat. She takes her home, introducing her as his secretary. Millicent is also in the room when a man who has never been seen before enters. He says, "What did you do with the notebook in which you wrote Dringgold's confession?"

BECKLES and HIS FRIENDS - By Blosser

stously appraising head into the corridor, turned and grinned at her. "Coast's clear," he reported. "Your good name is still intact. I'll be formally introduced to you later. See that you don't let on you've seen me before. A revolver." He slipped out into the corridor, closed the door. The door clicked shut. Millicent faced it with a sinking sensation in her stomach, a feeling of perspiration oozing from every pore of her skin. Good heavens! What did the man know? What was she getting into? And, come to think of it, what had she done with that notebook? She remembered taking it from Dringgold's office. She must have had it with her when she went to the hotel. She remembered that she must put it in a safe place... yes, she had it now... she'd slid it back of a shelf in the closet, then when she'd gone out in the morning she'd forgotten to take it with her. And now, what would happen? Would they find it? Millicent Graves dropped into a chair, crossed her knees and started thinking the situation out. She concluded that the notebook was safely hidden. It would be almost impossible for anyone to find it, unless they were making a careful search. Certain it was that the hotel employes, in cleaning up the room, would never stumble upon it. A knock sounded on the door of the room. Millicent clenched her hands. "Who is it?" she asked. The door opened. Millicent saw the butler and the chauffeur laden with boxes. Standing slightly to one side was a woman dressed in black, who surveyed Millicent with black, lack-luster eyes and said, "I'm Mrs. Eaton, the housekeeper. There are clothes for you."

The men deposited the boxes on the bed and withdrew. Mrs. Eaton stayed behind, helping Millicent open the boxes, listening to her exclamations of delight as she saw the complete wardrobe which had been provided for her. "How wonderfully complete," Millicent said. "There are dresses, gowns, lingerie—everything." "Mr. Hupp," Mrs. Eaton said in a tired, expressionless voice "never forgets anything." "But these evening gowns..." Millicent's rapturous exclamations were interrupted by the tired voice of the housekeeper. "You will need them. You will dress for dinner. It's at 8. I was instructed to tell you that you will eat with the family, except when guests are present. When there are guests, you can either have your meals served in your room, or eat with the servants." She surveyed Millicent and said, "I presume you'll have your meals in your room. And, if you want some advice from me, don't let

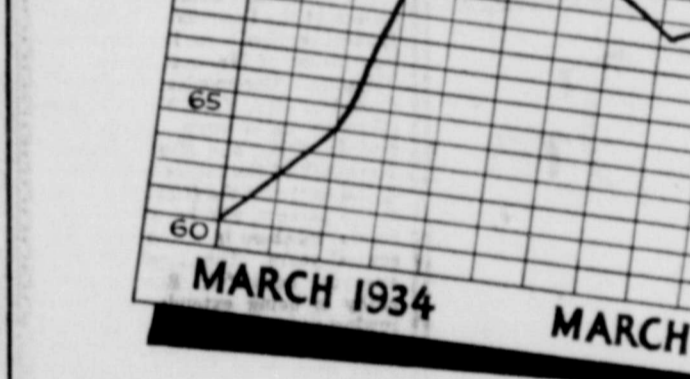

Behind the scenes with the TELEPHONE LICENSE CONTRACT

How the staff services we get under it have helped us give good telephone service at fair cost to you. Last year we spent almost a million dollars to find better methods of giving you good telephone service. We paid it to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., parent company of the Bell System. For it we received, as one of the 24 associated companies of that System, the services of A. T. & T.'s great staff of telephone experts and engineers. Staff Services... at Cost The A. T. & T. has provided substantially at cost the many services this staff performs. In fact, in the last few years it has taken an actual loss on the work it has done for the operating companies. The yearly fee we pay is equivalent to about 3/10 of one per cent of our investment in telephone plant. Stated another way... less than a cent and a half of every dollar we receive from telephone customers. Yet without it, telephone service as fast, as clear and as low in cost as you now receive would be quite unlikely. We have passed on to the telephone user in the Southwest the benefits and savings of this staff work, in the belief that in an undertaking planned for the long run, like the telephone service, such a policy will in the end bring us the sounder, more enduring success.

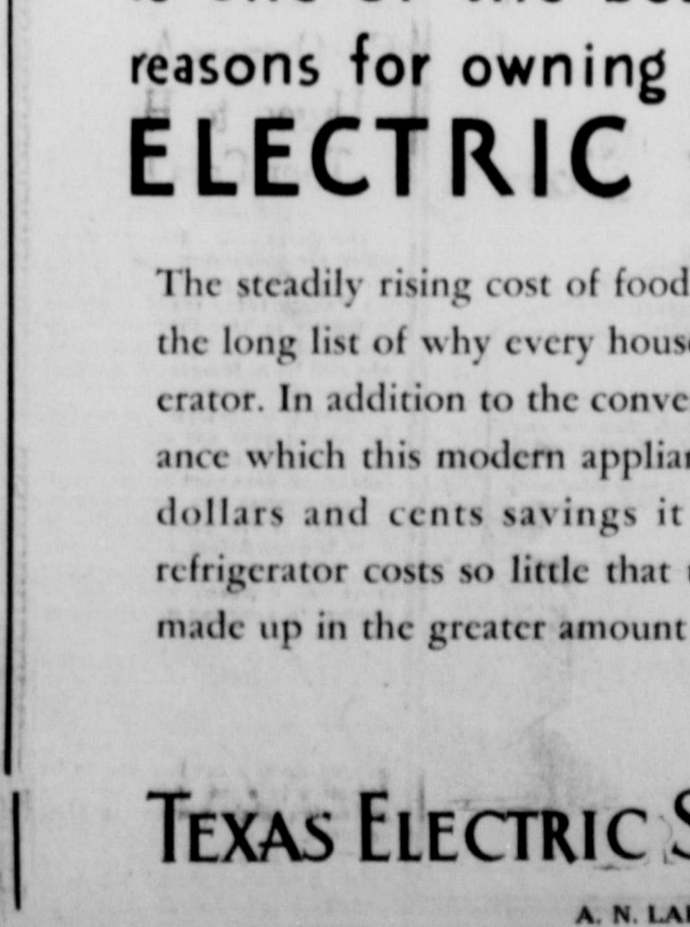

SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY

When the meal was finished, Cynthia Hupp tucked Millicent's arm through hers, and said, "Wouldn't you like to see the house?" Without waiting for an answer, she piloted Millicent through a series of rooms. Her manner was graciousness personified. She paused to comment on a tapestry here, a painting there, or, perhaps, an antique or some curio. When they returned to the library she said, "And now I suppose Jarvis will want to tell you something about your duties but, in the meantime, I want to tell you something about myself." Millicent looked at her in perplexity. "About yourself?" she asked. "Yes," Mrs. Hupp said, smiling. "If you listen to the gossip that runs around the servants' halls you will find that I'm a thoroughly selfish, unscrupulous, spoiled woman. Please remember that you're not to be treated here as a servant. You will be more like one of the family. And remember that it will be just as well for you to form your own conclusions about things rather than to listen to servants' gossip. You know one can only maintain discipline by keeping a certain underlying enmity alive. After all, you know, familiarity breeds contempt." Millicent nodded. "And now," she said, "I'm going to turn you over to Jarvis. I see that he wants to talk business with you and he has Dick Gentry with him."

Millicent turned to meet the smiling eyes of Jarvis Hupp. Walking at his side was a man of approximately 45 years of age—a man who seemed faultlessly groomed. His hair was streaked with gray at the temples. He had a close-cropped mustache, quick, alert eyes, nose glasses with a prominent bridge. Mr. Hupp performed the introductions. "Mr. Gentry," he explained to Millicent, "is a business partner of mine. We have been carrying on joint operations together. They started as a side line and I've been letting Dick keep the books and attend to most of the details and correspondence. Now the business is getting too big to be treated as a side issue, so we're going to turn the books over to you. If you wouldn't mind going up to my study we'll follow you in a few moments and make some preliminary explanations—I believe my wife showed you the study." "Oh, yes," she said. "You wish me to go now?" He nodded. She turned and left the room, conscious of the eyes of Dick Gentry focused upon her figure, taking in every motion of her lithe body. She entered the study and had barely closed the door when Robert Caise flung it open and rushed into the room, his eyes glittering with triumph. "Now," he said, "I've got it." "Got what?" she asked, irritation in her voice. He whipped a photograph from his pocket. "This," he said, "is a photograph of the Murder Girl." Millicent Graves schooled herself to hold her face without expression as she stared at her own picture. "Well, what about it?" she said. "Blood, you see," said Caise. "But all that we have to do is touch up the hair and the complexion a little and we have this."

He whipped another photograph from his pocket, in which the hair had been colored with photographic oil paints, and the complexion of the skin had been made slightly darker. Millicent Graves glanced up from the photograph, knowing that apprehension showed in her eyes. She met the young man's triumphant grin. "I might have known," he said, "that Jarvis would pull a fast one on Mom. I figured it out for myself and figured out just about what he'd do." "I don't understand you," Millicent said, her voice strained. "Oh, yes you do," he grinned. "Miss Millicent Graves—the Murder Girl." (To Be Continued) Gen. Hugh Johnson warns the U. WATCH KIDNEYS SAME AS BOWELS

Your bowels contain only 27 feet of intestines, yet the kidneys contain nearly 10 million tiny tubes or filters which would measure 79,200 feet if laid end to end. Therefore, it is just as important to watch the kidneys as the bowels. Kidneys are working all the time and are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Healthy persons pass through the bladder 2 pints a day and get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter. If you pass less than this, your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes may be clogged with poisonous waste. This is a danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pain, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness. Kidneys should be watched closely and need cleaning out the same as bowels. Ask your DRUGGIST for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription which has been used by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to wash out your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills at your DRUGGIST. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

Car Owners Are Urged to Have Their Cars Tested

The Lions and Rotary clubs, which are sponsoring the safety campaign to be conducted in Ranger Friday, today urged everyone in Ranger to have their car examined by the state highway officers who will be in Ranger all day Friday for that purpose.

There is no charge or no fee for having your car examined by those experts, and there is no obligation on your part to have your car go through the testing lane. However, it was pointed out, if there is some defect, of which you are not aware, and which might cause an accident and serious damage to your car or injuries to you or your family, it will be pointed out to you so you can have it corrected.

The average car is safe for driving on the highways, these tests prove, however there are occasions when a car is found to be defective in some part, and its correction might prevent a fatal accident.

John Tarleton to Have Contests In Judging April 6

STEPHENVILLE.—John Tarleton Agricultural College has announced the 11th annual Tarleton Pure Farmer judging contest to be held on the campus Saturday, April 6, beginning at 8:30 o'clock. The college is cooperating with the Texas association of the Pure Farmers of America, and the event is sponsored by the Stephenville Lions Club. Awards will be given to winners in judging livestock, poultry, cattle, poultry, soil conservation, crops, horticulture, and shop. Certain rules will be followed in the contest; every student of vocational agriculture who enters the contest must conform to certain standards; the 1935 A. and M. best rules regarding eligibility, rules and materials, will be followed; members of part-time classes—not part-time classes—which are in good standing with the Texas association may enter the contest; all entries must be in the hands of Neal Gearreald, director of the School of Agriculture, by Friday night, April 5. Accommodations for Friday and Saturday nights will be given the contestants in the city park, and they can get lunch at the Varsity at the main college entrance.

Typhoid Lessened By Long Drouth

By United Press. ALLAS.—Drouth conditions in this area have caused a marked increase in the prevalence of typhoid fever, according to charts published by the department of health. In 1928 there were only 527 cases of typhoid fever in the state, and 461 deaths reported as a result of the disease. In 1934 there were 1,954 cases and the death list has not yet been closed. Health activities throughout the state which have been directed toward eradication of the disease, resulted in an expenditure of $6,000 during the past four years. This is exclusive of expenditures spent by the state health department. The increase, according to health officials, is due to better living conditions by county health officers but much of it is due to contaminated water supplies which were forced to use when drouth shut up their regular supply.

PWA GRANTS CIA FOUR NEW BUILDINGS

DENTON.—Word has been received from Washington that final requirements of the PWA concerning the loan and grant agreement of Texas State College for Women (C. I. A.) have been met and funds are now available as needed for the new college building program. President L. H. Hubbard stated today that he will issue work orders on the first two buildings immediately. The first requisition for $100,000 has been honored, and the money has been sent to the Federal Reserve bank in Dallas. The transfer of this money to the Federal Reserve marks the completion of negotiations. Under the completed agreement the government will provide $589,500, of which $450,000 will be a loan and the remaining $139,500 an outright grant by the government. The buildings to be erected include the new infirmary at an approximate cost of $35,000, Stoddard hall, $220,000, a science building $165,000, and a fine arts building $165,000. These figures include the furnishings. All four building projects have been combined under PWA docket No. 5679, and the completion of the negotiations means that the money for all four buildings is now available. The first two buildings to be constructed for which contracts have already been let are the infirmary and Stoddard hall. The corrected plans of the fine arts building have been re-submitted to the Fort Worth office of the PWA for final approval, and the plans of the science building are now being corrected and will be re-submitted probably by the end of this week. It is probable that bids will be advertised on these two buildings by March 15 and that these bids will be received by the board of regents about April 5. If low bids are accepted at this meeting of the board and contracts awarded, it is probable that actual construction on the last two buildings will get under way about the first of May. The dormitory, a four-story fire-proof building, concrete frame and face brick, housing approximately 200 students, will replace the old Stoddard hall. The architectural design of the late colonial or Georgian style, and decoration and furnishing of the interior is to be carried out in the true style of the period. Hyezia hall, a concrete and brick structure of colonial architecture will provide for 15 beds with increased possibilities of 28 beds. Nurses quarters, reception rooms, examination room, laboratory, and X-ray room are also included in the general plans. The science building will be three stories of fire-proof material with the first floor given over to physics and photography classrooms, second floor, chemistry and the third floor will be used by the biological science department. An auditorium to accommodate approximately 450 people will occupy one wing of the building. This will be equipped with a stage, motion picture apparatus, and will be used for lectures, music and speech recitals. The fine arts building is of modern Georgian style, three stories high, and will house the department of fine and applied arts. Two wings will provide hall for casts and a hall for both student and visiting exhibits. This building will be equipped throughout with the most approved lighting equipment for use of classes in this work.

"Dusting the Covers of Texas History" For the Texas Centennial Celebrations of 1936

Louisiana was not the only state that sent volunteers to the aid of the Texans during their fight for freedom. Adventurous young men left their homes for Texas when the struggle first began. Some of them were heard of again; some were lost to their families forever. A pathetic letter published in The Texas Telegraph and Register from Cornelia Vaneleve Barnes of New Haven asked for news of her brother. His family thought he had been mercilessly murdered by Indians, but she had seen his name posted with those of the Alamo dead, and she appealed for any news of him. Texas seemed three times as far away to anxious relatives. A regiment of men was raised in Georgia partly through the efforts of Joanna Troutman, inspired with the fight the Texans were making, and willing to do something at once to help them. She made a flag of white silk, with a five-pointed star of azure tint in the center, for the regiment to take with them. On one side was written "Give me liberty or give me death." On the other, were the Latin words which meant, "Where liberty dwells, there is my country." Her flag was unfurled at Velasco when the troops arrived in 1835, and they carried it with them to the fateful battle of Goliad. A statue of Joanna Troutman, tall, stately, beautiful, stands in the State cemetery at Austin. In one hand she has a threaded needle to represent an implement of labor, and in the other she carries the Texas flag she made. The war was not won without cooperation of Texans as well as others. The general sentiment of the people was expressed by the Texas Telegraph: "We hear some complain—we exhort everyone not to shrink from duty, because he may not present be either rewarded or remembered; for we trust that the time will come when services will be acknowledged, and merit duly appreciated."

Putting On Pants Caused an Arrest

By United Press. FORT WORTH.—There are times when having your pants on can be more embarrassing than having them off. Officers recently raided a hotel room here and awakened three men suspected of passing counterfeit money. A pair of trousers hanging on a chair yielded $170 bogus money. Their owner lost his last chance at immunity when he inadvertently put them on instead of leaving them hang.
