Europe Again Dances With 'Red Death'

The society folk of gay Vienna have found machine guns and target practice a diversion just too ducky for words, according to recent news dispatches.

One cable has it that such sideshow diversions as shooting galleries, introduced to the best Viennese circles recently by young Fascists, have made a tremendous hit; and finally, at a great ball in the former Imperial Palace, ladies in evening gowns deserted the dance floor to let fly with machine gun bullets at cardboard targets representing enemy soldiers.

Everyone, apparently, had the best of good times, and the home of the Strauss Waltzes found machine-gunning much more fun than dancing.

This sort of thing, of course, is nothing but the froth which any spirited society is apt to throw off every now and then, and there is no sense in taking it too seriously. But to read about it, against the background of the war threat which is steadily rising higher and higher over Europe, is to get a creepy and uncomfortable feeling.

Edgar Allan Poe once wrote a story entitled "The Masque of the Red Death." It told about a land ravaged by a horrible plague known as the red death. Sundry titled folk locked themselves in a remote castle and with feasting and dancing tried their best to forget about the plague outside.

But it couldn't be kept out. At the height of the merry-making, the dreaded infection suddenly appeared in their midst, and the revel abruptly dissolved in a frantic scramble as ladies and courtiers fled vainly from the destroyer.

There is something about this story from Vienna that reminds one of that tale of Poe's.

No red death menaces Vienna. The threat is infinitely graver. Unless every thoughtful student of modern affairs is mistaken, war in Europe today would bring in a new dark age. Famine, revolution, massacre, the collapse of government, and the decline of all those graces which made modern society worth while—these are the prices that Europe would inevitably have to pay.

Each month sees the war clouds mount higher on the European horizon. And well-to-do, cultured, intelligent folk, who ought to be moving heaven and earth to avert the danger, find it amusing and "chic" to play with machine guns . . . dancing the masque of the red death, while the fatal infection draws nearer and nearer the castle.

Rep. Sam Hanna Makes His Bow

Rep. Sam Hanna of Dallas is the successor of Judge Sarah T. Hughes. Sarah T. Hughes as a lawmaker, elected for three successive terms, won more than statewide recognition. She is a very remarkable woman. Governor Allred made her a district judge. She won her spurs as a lawmaker. As a debater she was the equal of all representatives of the sterner sex who hold down legislative posts. Now it is for Representative Hanna to win his spurs as a lawmaker and a loyal servant of the people. Incidentally, Sarah T. Hughes defeated Hanna in the runoff last year. Those who are close to him say that he is for parimutuel betting at racetracks, against the rule of foreign bookmakers in Texas and committed all the time to a Centennial celebration that will be the pride of Texans as well as the amazement of millions of tourists who come from other states or countries.

An ounce of action beats a ton of promises.

Dust Storms Over State Are Settled

Dense dust, which yesterday plagued all of Texas, had either settled to the earth or risen to the upper air today, the weather bureau reported. West of Big Spring some surface dust was reported today but it was of slight intensity and was expected to clear later in the day. Aloft, however, a thick pall extended over nearly all the state, partially obscuring the sun and hampering air travel.

Clean Out Kidney Poisons

Wash Out Your 5 Miles of Kidney Tubes. If kidneys don't pass 3 pints a day and get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter, the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters may become clogged with poisonous waste and the danger of acid poisoning is greatly increased. Bladder passages are difficult, which often smart and burn like scalding water and cause discomfort. This acid condition, brought by poor kidney functions is a danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backaches, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness. Most people watch their bowels which contain only 27 feet of intestines but neglect the kidneys which contain 15 miles of tiny tubes and filters. If these tubes or filters become clogged with poisons, it may knock you out and lay you up for many months. Don't run any risk. Make sure your kidneys empty 3 pints a day. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription, which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. Copyright 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

Republicans of Nation Uniting to Present New Front

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Conservative and liberal republicans appeared today to be making progress toward consolidation of party forces scattered in the 1932 presidential campaign. More promising than proclamations by former President Herbert Hoover or individual efforts by other republicans was the plan of mid-west party regulars to convene farm belt politicians in convention next May. Republicans who have disagreed on almost everything else since the 1932 campaign have found common ground in the plan to shift the G. O. P. center of leadership toward the Mississippi river. The projected preliminary republican convention—time and

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Millicent Graves, secretary to George Dringold, finds her employer in his office dead. In panic she rushes away and registers at a hotel under an assumed name. Jarvis Happ, distinguished looking stranger, recognizes Millicent and offers to help her. He sends her to a beauty parlor where she is transformed into a brunette. Happ takes her home, introducing her as his secretary. His son, Norman Happ, warns Millicent against his stepbrother, Robert Caise, and tells her a mysterious woman in black ermine has some power over his stepmother.

Millicent falls asleep. A noise awakens her and she finds a note under her door reading, "The woman in black ermine is here." Millicent dresses, sees the woman in black drive away in a sedan. Millicent, in the garage, hears a noise and the electric lights flash on.

Now Go On With the Story CHAPTER XIII
Millicent, holding herself flat against the floor boards of the automobile, trying to make herself as nearly invisible as possible, held her breath and listened.

She heard someone moving about, heard the sound of a starting motor whirring into throbbing life. Then a car swept out in a streak of flash motion. She heard the clash of gears as someone shifted hurriedly from reverse to low, then the roar of the motor and the car swept on down the driveway.

Lights were still on in the garage, but Millicent took a chance on discovery to find out who had taken out that car.

She jumped to the cement floor of the garage, ran to the door and looked down the driveway. A cabriolet, very fancy and stylish, which had been in the garage and which she had intuitively placed as belonging to Norman Happ, was gliding smoothly down the driveway. As it turned into the street Millicent noticed that it was running without lights.

Evidently someone else had determined to follow the woman in the black ermine coat.

Millicent ran to the two remaining cars—a big sedan and a coupe. There were ignition keys in the coupe, and she jumped behind the wheel, turned the switch and pressed the starter. The motor throbbed to life.

So nervous with excitement that her hands were trembling, Millicent backed the car out of the garage, put it in gear and raced out of the driveway.

After she hit the street she ran for several blocks without lights, trying to keep the cabriolet ahead of her in view, but she was unable to do so and finally switched on the lights.

With the headlights she was able to pick up the speeding cabriolet. Occasionally the tail light reflected a red gleam, or her headlights glittered back in dazzling brilliance from the windshield. Once or twice she glimpsed the big sedan ahead, which the cabriolet was undoubtedly following.

The cars were traveling at high speed and Millicent was forced to use all of her skill as a driver to keep in the procession. She wondered if the driver of the cabriolet suspected that she was following him, wondered if that driver were, perhaps, Norman Happ. With the thought she felt once more that strange pounding of the pulse in her temple, a sudden surge of emotion which seemed to choke up her blood stream.

Whether he knew he was being pursued or not, the driver of the cabriolet did not deviate from his course.

Suddenly Millicent caught her breath with a gasp of apprehension. The motor coughed, spluttered, died, coughed to life again, ran smoothly, then missed and stopped.

She depressed the throttle and got no results. She pulled out the choke and, for a moment, the car responded. Then once more it died. Her eyes rested apprehensively on the gasoline gauge. It showed that the tank was empty. The car was barely moving now, and Millicent kicked out the clutch and piloted the car into the curb. The big sedan and the speeding cabriolet had swept on out of sight.

Millicent was so mad she could have cried with sheer anger. The idea of leaving a car in a garage with an empty gasoline tank—of all the fool things for a person to do! She supposed that would be Robert Caise, brilliant, irresponsible, flighty. She looked at the registration certificate and found her surmise had been right. The car was registered in the name of Robert Caise.

Millicent found herself thinking that Norman Happ never would have done anything like that. Norman Happ had a sense of responsibility. His car would have been filled with gas, oil and water. The tires would have been in perfect condition—but the ignition key wouldn't have been in the lock. The very break that gave her an opportunity to use the car in the first place was in one way directly connected with her inability to accomplish anything with it after she had borrowed it.

moisture. At length, weary, tired and chilled, she saw the big house looming before her. It was now only about 75 yards away and so tired was she that she was counting the steps.

Automobile headlights danced along the wet pavement, sending reflections shivering against the sides of the building. Instinctively she stepped to one side, flattening herself against a wrought-iron fence.

The machine, a cabriolet, passed her, this time running with lights. She could see the form of the driver, noticed that the collar of his overcoat was turned up around his neck and a soft felt hat pulled low on his forehead.

She heard the hiss of the tires on the wet pavement, then saw the red lights on the rear glare into brilliance as the driver applied the brakes. The car swung wide for a turn and entered the driveway of Jarvis Happ's house.

Millicent forgot that she was tired. Whoever had followed the woman in the ermine coat had returned, and she wanted to talk with him. She speeded up her steps.

She was still in the driveway when she heard the sliding doors of the garage roll shut. After that there was no sound save that of her own feet on the wet driveway. She reached the garage and found the door was closed and locked. She looked up at the house. It was dark and comber, except for the dull brilliance of the hall windows in which the night lights were still burning.

It was then that Millicent realized the full extent of her predicament. She was locked out. It would be necessary to arouse someone in the household in order to enter the house.

She tried the garage door once more, then walked wearily around the house, wet feet squishing moisture at every step. She tried a side door. It, too, was locked. She tried the front door with no more success.

A wicker chair offered her aching feet some respite, and she dropped wearily into it, surveying the gloomy darkness of the porch, listening to the steady drip, drip of the rain as it dropped down from the eaves of the porch. She sat there for several minutes and then realized that she was taking cold. Somehow she must effect an entrance to the house.

She had circled around one side of the house. She wondered whether, perhaps, there might be a door on the other side. She was cold and cramped now, and fully appreciated the extent of her predicament. She walked around the house. There was one door and she tried it, but it, too, was locked. She came to the back of the house and suddenly caught her breath with a throbbing intake of quick hope.

There was a separate building at the back, the lower floor of which was used as a storage place for the gardener's tools. The upper floor was unoccupied, and she remembered hearing someone say it was where the chauffeur had his quarters.

Lights glowed from the windows of this upper room, and Millicent suddenly remembered Norman had told her Jarvis Happ had commissioned his chauffeur to shadow the woman in the black ermine coat when next she came to the house.

Harry Felding, then, must have been the one who drove that cabriolet. He had shadowed the woman in the black ermine coat, and doubtless knew where she lived. Perhaps Felding would give her the information. Perhaps he could let her into the house or find some place where she could spend the night—some place where she could divest herself of her wet garments.

The light streamed upon her features. For a moment her eyes were dazzled by the brilliance. Then they came to focus upon the room.

A startled scream was wrung from her pallid lips at the sight which met her eyes.

Elks Club Opens Season of Talk on Soft Ball League

At the regular meeting of the B. P. O. Elks, held Wednesday night, it was voted that the lodge have a team in the soft ball league of Ranger this year, and G. A. Murphy was elected as manager.

It was urged at the meeting that a meeting of the prospective team managers be held in the office of the Chamber of Commerce Monday afternoon, at which time the league can be formed and the rules and regulations worked out.

It was suggested at the meeting that a league be formed along the lines of the one in 1933, with a diamond of 45-foot bases and a softer, larger ball being used in order to get away from the semi-professional flavor the game was given in 1934.

It is possible that if some of the teams want to play with the harder, small ball, with the longer bases, that a separate league might be formed for those teams.

A diamond is being constructed at the new city park on the new Strawn road, on which a 45-foot diamond is to be constructed, it was mentioned at the meeting.

The "Hi-Y" club of Ranger, is to sponsor a boxing tournament in the near future. The winners of the different weights will be awarded high school championships.

Have you found the SUNNY PACKAGE on your grocer's shelf?

It's a delicious ready-to-eat cereal. Millions of Americans have found Kellogg's All-Bran a safe, effective means of correcting common constipation—the kind caused by lack of "bulk" in the menu.

Laboratory measurements show that All-Bran provides "bulk" to aid elimination. All-Bran also supplies vitamins B and iron.

The "bulk" in this tempting cereal is more effective than that found in fruits and vegetables—because it resists digestion better. Within the body, it absorbs moisture, and forms a soft mass. Gently, this cleans out the intestinal waste.

Isn't this natural food better than taking patent medicines? Two tablespoonfuls of All-Bran daily are usually sufficient. Chronic cases with each meal. If this fails to give relief, see your doctor.

Enjoy All-Bran as a cereal, or cook into appetizing recipes. Kellogg's All-Bran contains much more "bulk" than part-bran products. In the red-and-green package. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

"Eyelaxation"

Here's one way to assure "Eyelaxation"—the lamp illustrated is one of the new Reading-Study lamps designed with just that in mind. On the desk or table, an even, glareless light of just the right intensity is provided that makes even fine print fairly jump out of the page. Floor lamps are also available with the same principle of illumination.
