Eden, therefore, will visit Prague after he has conferred with statesmen at Warsaw, after which the way will be open for an important conference of the French, British and Italian ministers at Stresa, Italy.

We Can Avoid War By Complete Isolation

Whatever else it may be doing, the current European war scare is at least providing a field day for American internationalists.

The burden of their cry right now is that if and when Europe goes to war it will be utterly impossible for the United States to stay out of it.

Looking back at what happened in 1914 and immediately thereafter, it is not hard to understand why people should feel that way. And yet it is equally hard to see why the program we followed during the last war has to be duplicated in the next one.

We weren't able to keep out of the last war—granted. But there is any overwhelming reason why, profiting by the lessons we learned then, we cannot keep out of the next one?

If we hope to do so, there are two courses open to us.

The first one is to follow the lead of the internationalists, work with the League of Nations right up to the hilt, negotiate and confer with European statesmen whenever the European pot starts boiling, and take in every way possible an active, energetic course to keep war from starting.

Considering what the American electorate has done to the League of Nations proponents at various times, it is hard to picture any American government following that course.

The other possibility is to buttress our isolation in every imaginable way. And the most important way would seem to be to get a new concept of neutrality.

We started out to be neutral in the last war. But what happened? We loaned money and sold supplies to all comers; the only persons who could get at us to borrow and buy were the allies; as an inevitable result, we soon became in fact, although not avowedly, a silent partner in the allied cause. We were their banker and their production manager.

Once that had happened, it was only a question of time before we should get into the war in bloody earnest.

Neutrality of that kind is no neutrality at all. If we follow the same course in the next war, we may expect the same result.

But we can devise a new kind of neutrality. We can refuse to sell or to lend to any warring nations. That would be hard policy to follow, of course. But it would enable us to steer clear of trouble.

We might as well make up our mind to it. If we prefer isolation to taking a hand in the internationalists' game, the isolation must be complete. Complete isolation is expensive, but that may be the price we have to pay for remaining at peace.

No city will amount to much as long as its chief industry is politics.

Optimism and common sense should be mingled in good proportion.

Rangers Outmoded In Modern Times, Research Man Says

AUSTIN.—Texas rangers, once famous the country over, are fast becoming a lamented tradition, says Paul E. Fidler, of the staff of the University of Texas Bureau of Municipal Research.

There was a time, he wrote in "Texas Municipalities," "when one could boast with pride and conviction that one ranger was sufficient to quell one riot, but our sister states must wonder whether such a reputation is merited when notorious criminals can roam the vast areas of the state, robbing, killing and kidnaping as they go for months on end without being apprehended."
