Hitler Has Won Back German Confidence

European politics is never easy for an American to understand, and the understanding is made a good deal harder by our habit of classifying the rulers of Europe as good men and villains.

We see a man like Hitler, for instance, we add up the insanities of Jew-baiting and concentration camps which he has given Germany, and we assume offhand that he is a dark and unholy scoundrel.

And then, when we see Germany giving him almost unanimous support and cheering him with wholehearted fervor, we cannot understand it; and we take it for granted that the Germans have willfully and perversely deluded themselves.

It would be better if we should take the trouble to realize that Hitler's immense popularity with his people is a perfectly natural thing with an entirely logical explanation.

Milton Bronner, veteran European correspondent, points out that Hitler is above everything else the man who has enabled Germany to forget the humiliations of a lost war and a disastrous peace.

For 16 years, he remarks, Germans lived in a sort of nightmare. The glorious war that they were to have won so easily had been lost. Instead of a victorious peace, with a triumphal march down the Champs Elysees, there was Versailles, with the German delegates forced to sign on the dotted line like so many criminals.

After that, Germans saw allied armies on the Rhine. They saw French troops in the Ruhr. When Germany wanted anything her statesmen had to go to London or Paris, not as equals, but as suppliants.

Always it was the Germans who were summoned to foreign cities to be told what the victors had decided on. Even when Germany was released from certain treaty obligations, the release came not as a matter of right, but as a boon.

Hitler simply put an end to all that. He thrilled his countrymen by announcing that they would have army, navy and aerial forces as they saw fit and not as some foreign powers decided.

He made the foreign statesmen come to Berlin to confer. Under Hitler, Germany ceased to be a suppliant for favors; instead, foreign powers were begging her to help preserve peace.

A change of this kind, coming suddenly, does something to the national morale. As Bronner points out, Hitler has enabled the Germans to stop feeling like inferiors. Consequently, they idolize him—and small wonder!

We cannot hope to have an intelligent viewpoint on European affairs unless we first understand that Germany follows Hitler for the most natural human reasons imaginable.

Romance Has Not Died With Square-Riggers

The day of rip-snorting romance at sea is supposed to have ended about the time when the steamboat shoved the last of the square-riggers off the main sea lanes.

But romance doesn't depend on the trappings of tradition. As long as there are oceans to be crossed and men to cross them there will be adventure, and romantic things can happen to a seaman today just as well as they did 100 years ago.

Consider, for instance, the surprising things that befell a young man named J. Ancil Bayette, who went to sea for a lark last June after graduation from the University of Florida.

Bayette shipped on a four-masted schooner for St. Vincent, in the Cape Verde Islands. The schooner had a load of lumber and automobiles, and it immediately ran into very heavy weather—so heavy that it took 114 days to make the trip, whereas even Columbus did it in 90.

Anyway, on arrival at St. Vincent, the skipper got into difficulties with the owners and was dismissed. And then, by a freak of chance, young Bayette, fresh out of college, was put in command, and the schooner took on a new cargo and cleared for the west coast of Africa.

Old Man Trouble was still on the prowl. More storms came. The old schooner sprung a leak—or, more accurately a whole set of leaks. And the young collegian who went to sea for a lark found himself commanding a foundering hulk in an Atlantic gale, with his frightened crew putting in 24 hours a day at the pumps.

Finally the pumps clogged. The schooner became waterlogged. The young skipper found his brief career of command climaxed by the necessity of abandoning ship.

And at last, with food and strength and hope vanishing together, they managed to land on the tip of the island of Brava, in the Cape Verde group, where they slept in caves on a rocky beach until one of their number was able to walk to a settlement and summon help.

So the romance of the sea is dead, is it? If you think so, you might ask this young college lad from Florida.

'Dusting the Covers of Texas History' For the Texas Centennial Celebrations of 1936

The report of the first committee to select a site for the Texas Centennial celebrations of 1936 was not any better than San Felipe. Anywhere, the Government must remain in Houston until 1840 under the terms of the old contract.

Veto of that particular tract was a blow to the men, but persistent Congressmen sent out a third commission April 14, 1839. West of the Brazos was favorable. Perhaps that section of the country would be better than somewhere along the coast. The Colorado and Brazos were being settled rapidly.

This time the three representatives and two senators were commissioned to select a site "some place between the Trinidad and Colorado and above the old San Antonio road." The place was to be named Austin, and there was to be enough room available for a university. For leagues of land, at least, were to be purchased, for not for more than $3 per acre. For traveling expenses, commissioners were appropriated $8 per day, to be paid half of it when they commenced their search and the other half when they returned.

"Leave the capitol where it is," indignantly citizens said. "Select some site on the Colorado," others told the men as they set out. "Godspeed to you," the ten commissioners said, "and may you

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER N.E.A. Service Staff Correspondent WASHINGTON—Republicans go into earnest huddles with increasing frequency. Each time, they play "button, button—who's got the button?"

Privately or publicly, they tell each other that the G. O. P. must have an issue, must formulate a program, must unite upon a set of principles with which it can lure wayward voters from the false gods of the New Deal.

Definite suggestions are few and lame, and the state of popular opinion is such, according to some observers, that almost any position the Republicans might now take would be strategically impossible.

Band Concert

Huge Success

The high school student band concert given Friday night in the Methodist church was heard by a good audience that half filled the auditorium despite the stormy night.

This second concert of the Better Homes-Music Week series, was opened by Mrs. Nora Hafley Mahon, presiding chairman, in a clever talk on Music in the Homes, concluding with the introduction of Bandmaster Cullom.

The program given as published in the Eastland Telegram, had a charming number by Leo Wolf, and Katherine Colburn, a flute duet, and Mr. Collum's composition.

This is said to have been the best band concert Eastland has enjoyed.

Professor Collum, in his talk on "Influence of Music on the Youth of Today," dwelt on the beauty of music in the home, and the interest it aroused in the youth of the family, keeping them from undesirable things. He thanked all for the fine co-operation he was receiving, and all those who have contributed towards the purchase of the band drum for the orchestra, including the generous gift of the Music Study club.

Mrs. H. O. Satterwhite, president of the club presented an outstanding talk on "The Influence of Music in the Co-ordination of Family Life."

The program was varied, and appealed to all tastes. The closing number, "Home on the Range," was a fitting finale.

It's COTTON Week

RANGER MERCHANTS JOIN IN CELEBRATION OF COTTON WEEK

The entire nation, and particularly the south, will celebrate cotton week from May 6 to 11 inclusive. During this week the promotion of cotton will be foremost in the minds of many leading business men and those directly and indirectly interested in the production of cotton.

The history of cotton dates back to the days before the birth of Christ. It is known to have been grown in India as far back as 2500 years ago and cotton cloth was found in the ancient tombs of the Incas of Peru, in which country it was probably first grown in the New World.

Cotton Week has been observed for the past few years to promote the use of one of the oldest staples in the world, to make the people more cotton conscious in an effort to aid the growers.

Texas, the leading cotton state in the United States, with one-fourth to one-third of the national production and one-fifth of the world's crop, with a nominal value of $128,905,000, or about 52 percent of the combined agricultural crops of the state is one of the logical places for the celebration of Cotton Week.

Merchants all over the nation, and particularly over the south, are this week calling attention to cotton fabrics, making special inducements for their customers to use cotton in an effort to aid the large percentage of the people of Texas who are directly or indirectly interested in growing the staple.

In the Times, today, will be found a number of these advertisements of merchants co-operating with the movement to popularize cotton goods this spring, and each has stocked large stores of beautiful fabrics, many of which were never before have cotton goods been so beautiful, nor never has there been such a wide variety from which to choose fine fabrics for almost any need, and the people of Ranger are being urged to co-operate with the movement by purchasing cotton goods entirely during the week of March 6 to 11 inclusive.

The DARK BLOND

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Millicent Graves, secretary to George Dringold, finds her employer in his office dead. Jarvis Hopp, a stranger, offers to help her. He sends her to a beauty shop where she is transformed into a sunset, then takes her home, introducing her as his secretary. She meets Hopp's son, Norman; his nephew, Robert Caise; Mrs. Hopp; Miss Gentry, Hopp's partner; Vera Buchene, Mrs. Hopp's maid.

In Hopp's home Millicent sees a mysterious "woman in black" whom she believes has a connection with Dringold's death.

The chauffeur is found dead. Hopp is kidnapped.

Millicent and Norman learn the truth about the woman in black who belongs to Phyllis Faulconer. They go to her apartment. Norman goes first. When he does not return, Millicent follows. The place is in wild disorder and Norman is in sight.

Millicent goes to a nearby garage, asks to see Phyllis Faulconer and goes to the second floor. Someone grabs her arm. It is Detective Buchanan. He opens his purse, finds the auto written by Bob Caise, and accuses her of being Phyllis Faulconer.

Now Go On With the Story

CHAPTER XLV

Buchanan said, "That clinches it. You're Phyllis Faulconer. That was written by Bob Caise. My servant Mahoney bet me 10 bucks that when we got Phyllis Faulconer I'd find that Bob Caise had slipped her off about the car. That's why he sent me to wait for you, you're going to head-butt me and get booked."

"But you don't understand," she said. "That note wasn't left by me. That was..."

"Oh, honey?" he said. "I've had enough of your alibis. You come with me. You can tell your alibi to Sergeant Mahoney."

"Thank heavens!" she said. "I can at least talk with some one who's got intelligence."

"Go on, smarty, make all your wise cracks," he said, opening the door of the automobile and pulling her by the handcuffed wrists. "You may think I'm dumb but I had sense enough to trap you and trap you right."

She recognized the futility of further argument and braced herself to be led down the stairs. Once more she saw the pitying glance of the uniformed attendant of the garage and now she understood its complete significance. He had known that a police detective was waiting to arrest whoever showed up to take out that Faulconer sedan, and he had known she was walking into a trap when she climbed the stairs.

She felt her cheeks burn with humiliation as she was led, handcuffed, in charge of the officer, across the lighted lower floor.

"Well," Buchanan said triumphantly, "I got her."

"Do you need those handcuffs?" the garage man asked.

Buchanan flashed him a belittling glance.

"I'll say I do. She's wanted for murder."

The garage attendant stuck by his guns.

"You're about a 100 pounds heavier than she is," he remarked. "If she hasn't got a gun you should be able to handle her without handcuffs."

"You don't need to tell me how to do my job," Buchanan remarked. "All I want you to do is to show me where the telephone is and then keep quiet."

The attendant jerked his head toward the office. Buchanan took Millicent into the office, hooked his foot around the leg of a chair, jerked it a few inches toward Millicent and said, "Sit down there and rest yourself. Don't try to make a break."

He picked up the telephone, said, "Police headquarters," and then, after a moment said, "Homicide Department... is Sergeant Mahoney there? Well, let me talk with Ramsey... Hello, Ramsey, this is Buchanan. I got the Faulconer Jane... Yes, she's sitting right here at the Savoy garage. Where's Mahoney?"

The receiver made a long series of squeaking noises and Buchanan said, "Well, see if you can get Mahoney and tell Johansen to come around here. It's just a couple of blocks... Yes, sure, he's off duty, but he mixed into it and he might as well see it through. Tell him it's big stuff and he may get his name in a newspaper. Only shoot him along."

Buchanan hung up the telephone.

"And now," Millicent asked, "do we start for headquarters?"

"Not yet, sister."

He tilted back in the chair, put his feet up on the desk pulled a black cigar from his pocket, clipped off the end, inspected it, scratched a match on the sole of his shoe and concentrated his attention upon lighting the cigar. When he had it burning to suit him he puffed out clouds of smoke, his manner that of one who is very well pleased with himself.

"Well," Millicent demanded impatiently, "what are we waiting for? I want to talk with someone who has some authority."

"Sister," he told her, "I've got all the authority you need to bother about."

"I mean," she said, "someone who has sense as well as authority."

"I had sense enough to outsmart you," he told her.

She ignored the comment.

After a few moments she demanded again, "Well, what are we waiting for?"

"That," he said, "is one of the things you might like to know, but you're pretty smart and you'll know what I want to tell you and nothing else."

"I demand," she said, "to be taken to headquarters. I happen to know that you've got to take me before a magistrate when you arrest me."

"So," he said, "you've got a criminal record, have you?"

"No, I haven't a criminal record. I've got work to do and I demand an opportunity to vindicate myself."

"Don't worry. You're going to get that, I promise. If you're on the up and up we'll know it in a very few minutes."

"How?"

"We've got someone coming who can identify the real Phyllis Faulconer. I won't take your word one way or another. I'm betting you're Phyllis Faulconer, but just the same I'm going to give you all the breaks."

"Oh," she said, "if you'd only do that! If you'd only have someone from the apartment house who knows the real Phyllis Faulconer it would save you the humiliation of making a false arrest and save me a lot of time."

"Okay, sister," he agreed good-naturedly, puffing smoke at the ceiling. "I've got a chap by the name of Johansen coming around here. He knows the real Phyllis Faulconer and I know him. He's a square-shooter, but he's hard-boiled and you can't slip anything over on him. Here he comes now."

Millicent heard the pound of heavy steps. She already anticipated the vindication that was to be hers. She turned a smiling face, and then the smile froze on her lips and panic filled her eyes.

"Hello, Johansen," said Buchanan.

The man who pushed his way through the glass paneled doorway nodded a greeting and then shifted his eyes to Millicent.

He was the officer who had knocked on the door of the apartment and complained to Millicent about the excessive noise—the man who had blown the police whistle when she fled from the apartment!

RECORD HEAVE

When Jack Torrance, Louisiana State shot putter, breaks records, he isn't content with inches. Big Torrance stepped up in the putting ring at the Penn Relays and broke the world 12-pound shot standard by more than a foot and a half, registering 42 feet 4 1/2 inches, against his old record of 40 feet 5 1/2 inches. Here he is in action at Philadelphia.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

SOME authority on Americana tells us that early cabinet-makers were fond of carving the pineapple on bed posts and table legs because it was regarded as a symbol of hospitality and rare perfection. The glass factories turned out all kinds of table glass fashioned in the favorite pineapple pattern and the ladies of the day pieced and quilted their quilts in several versions of the pineapple design. As a food it was considered a great delicacy and rare treat.

Pineapples still can be relied on to furnish the perfect finishing touch to menus. Fortunately they are one of the fruits that loses nothing at the hands of the canner. However, when fresh fruit is plentiful in the markets, it is particularly welcome both as a food and a tonic.

Before you use fresh pineapple in any way be sure to give it a thorough scrubbing with a stiff brush. The extremely rough skin makes a splendid lodging place for dust and germs.

Easy to Pick Good Ones

It's easy to select fine fruit when shopping, because pineapples have few imperfections. The size of the fruit really has little to do with its quality. Pounds for pound, one pineapple yields about the same percentage of edible material as another.

The vitamin content is considered good, comparing favorably with oranges. This is worth keeping in mind because as oranges become scarce and high in price, pineapples make a good substitute.

To Prepare for Table

There's one precaution about getting fruit ready for the table. Be sure that every bit of the skin and eyes are removed. There's an astringent in the skin and eyes that often makes the mouth sore. I find the easiest way to handle the fruit is to cut it in inch slices after washing. Then pare off the skin and dig out the eyes with a sharp-pointed knife. Remove the hard core in the center and cut the flesh in dice, or shred if preferred.

I also find that if I sprinkle the fruit with sugar at least an hour before serving, the flavor is more delicate and the sweetness penetrates through the fruit.

Another point to keep in mind regarding fresh pineapple is the necessity of scalding both the juice and the fruit before adding them to a gelatin mixture. Your jelly won't "jell" if you don't do this.

the cache for years, he visited it only once. Several years ago, when an Indian tribe in the White Court district faced starvation, Old Moostas hitched up two ponies and went into the hills.

Two days later, he walked into a trading post at White Court, dumped a "poke" of gold nuggets on the counter and bought out the store. He distributed the food and other goods among the starving Indians, and then retired to a lazy existence on the Indian settlement.

Then started a long battle of wits between prospectors and the

Prospectors Plan Hunt for Gold

By United Press

EDMONTON, Alta.—One of the most amazing gold hunts in Canada's mining history is being planned this summer by Alberta prospectors.

Without proof that it even exists, hardened sourdoughs are planning to hunt the many hills of the White Court area for the legendary "gold cache" of Old Moostas, 79-year-old Indian, around whose garbled figure a legend of fabulous riches and superstition was weaved by prospectors several years ago. At that time he saved a tribe of Indians from starvation by bringing back a "bag of gold" from the secret cache in the hills. Moostas believed that the gold was put in the cache by the "Great Spirit" for use only in time of dire need, and died several months ago without revealing where it was, and refusing to tell how he found it.

The cache is believed to lie among the hills in the White Court district. It is described as a "prospector's dream"—a cave lined with pure gold.

The legend is that although Moostas knew of the existence of
