World Comes To Bat At Tenest Moment

Whatever else you may say about the present moment in world history, you at least have to admit that it is exciting.

It is exciting for much the same reason that a baseball game is exciting when you have the bases full and the town's best fencebuster coming to bat; nobody knows just what is going to happen next, but whatever it is, it is bound to be something spectacular.

Sinclair Lewis brought this out admirably in a recent article in Good Housekeeping magazine.

In the uncertainty of the present he sees youth presented with the greatest of all challenges.

"When all of youth that has been born in 1885-1935 shall have had its chance, this half century may perhaps be put down as the noblest in history," he remarks. "But to take that chance, youth must not be afraid to show itself, not as perpetually clever and shiny and speeding, but as filled with the awkward, faith-dipped simplicity which is the quality of greatness.

"It must not be afraid of anything—for just ahead of us may lie the world's most vicious war or the benign curbing of cancer and tuberculosis; another Shakespeare, or another scourge of Dillingers in low places and Kreugers in high; a flight to Mars, or a descent into an ocean of lava; a peaceful world nation, or a world shattered into 10,000 bandit tribes."

And then he adds this significant comment: "There are two equal sins for a thinker or a doer in this year of 1935: to despair of the noble future of mankind; and to believe that this savage race, mankind—so much more savage than the tigers, because we kill not just for meat, but for our highest ideals—can be made all sweet and holy just by a few fine phrases."

A size-up of this kind is worth re-reading and thinking about. For while nearly all of us are painfully aware of the disastrous things that may happen to the world during the next generation, we often forget that it is equally possible for truly magnificent things to happen.

The world may go up as well as down. It has cut its moorings and is off on one of the most momentous trips it has ever taken; if the prospect is frightening, it can also be encouraging.

Too much optimism at a time like this is silly—and so is too much pessimism. If we can temper optimism with a sane realization of the difficulties ahead and an iron determination to make things work out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, this time may be known as the prelude to the greatest era of advancement in the history of the race.

Our Military Leaders See Their Shadows

President Roosevelt did the right thing in squelching those overambitious army officers who had so much to say about American "war plans" in this hemisphere.

An army strategist is apt to say almost anything, of course, and it would be foolish to attach too much weight to the whole affair. And yet it is a timely warning of something that we usually fail to realize—the fact that militarism is a growth not confined to Europe and Asia, after all. We have our own share of it, and it's time we realized it.

Consider, for instance, the ideas which Brig. Gen. F. M. Andrews, chief of the new General Headquarters Air Force, spread before a congressional committee recently.

We must, said General Andrews, keep our eyes on Newfoundland, the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Trinidad, British Honduras and the lesser Honduras. Any or all these places would make dangerous enemy air bases in the event of war; we must keep them under surveillance, be ready to bomb them if we find air bases being developed on them, and be prepared to seize them by main force "if the situation is sufficiently vital to require it."

Nor is that all. Other army officers urge Congress to establish a huge air base in the Great Lakes border. They admit that Canada probably is not meditating war on the United States; but they point out that if any "hostile power" lodged itself in Canada, it would be within easy raiding distance of our great industrial centers.

Now all this is very little less than vicious. It represents militarism in its worst sense—the attitude of mind that sees everything in terms of military equation and ignores all the supremely important intangibles of international relations.

One of our greatest assets is the fact that we enjoy friendly relations with our neighbors. The Canadian border has gone unfortified for a century. The average American no more expects trouble from Newfoundland or Bermuda than he expects Pittsburgh to attack Cincinnati.

But such facts mean nothing to a militarist. There is foreign soil at our doorstep; it must be the soil of an enemy; let us spend huge sums and lay elaborate plans to repel attack, even if it means replacing international friendship with suspicion, fear, and dislike!

SCOUT NEWS

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

Camp Billy Gibbons
 We have some more good news for you. District Commissioner L. Pouncey, and Scoutmaster Dan Gill have promised to help the handicraft program this summer. They have already made a trip to camp and surveyed the handicraft area. You've all been under the shade trees here built in the mess hall and the swim pool. The area will be enlarged and with a rustic fence. Tables, tubs, benches and display racks, will be placed in the area. These two scouts will be in charge of the project every moment of the camp period. If you are not sure how to make a neckerchief or a bugle out of an old shirt, ask them. They will show you. Take the time to do it. Instructions, in the form of various articles in leather-etch! And a prize will be given. Archery will be taught from the beginning of the camp. You will learn how to shoot the bow and arrow from the point of the arrow hitting the "gold" on the target. They promise to give you a prize if you hit the target.

headwork from making an ordinary head neckerchief slide on up to the art of heading a "rabbit foot" charm. Silver craft, which has always been very popular in camp, will come in for its share on the program. On visitors days, scouts will have an opportunity to display their handicraft work. The instructors have announced that prizes will be offered for the best workmanship. Scouts, you can not afford to miss this camp. See your scoutmaster now, and have him help you make plans for attending.

Future's Rosy for Her Reign

Probably this wasn't just what the song writers had in mind as "A Garland of Old-Fashioned Roses" a couple of decades ago, but Margaret Walk is a distinctly modern miss. She's glimpsed here in her regal raiment as queen of the annual rose festival at Santa Rosa, Calif.

BORN THIRTY YEARS TOO SOON.

The "New Orleans Grays," organized in 1835, was the first military unit organized on American soil to go to the aid of the settlers who had decided to throw off the yoke of Mexican tyranny. Adolph Stern, former alchemist of Naggedoches, outfitted the company of 50 men.

WATCH KIDNEYS SAME AS BOWELS

Wash Out Your 79,200 Feet of Kidney Tubes

Your bowels contain only 27 feet of intestines, yet the kidneys contain nearly 10 million tiny tubes or filters which would measure 79,200 feet if laid end to end. Therefore, it is just as important to watch the kidneys as the bowels. Kidneys are working all the time and are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and poisonous waste out of the blood.

Healthy persons pass thru the bladder 5 pints a day and get rid of more than 2 pounds of waste matter. If you pass less than this, your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes may be clogged with poisonous waste. This is a danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

Kidneys should be watched closely and need cleaning out the same as bowels. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription which has been used by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to wash out your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

"Eyelaxation"

WHY THESE LAMPS GIVE YOU BETTER LIGHT . . . .

- 1 Reflector is translucent and lets through the proper amount of soft, glareless light to eliminate eyestrain and make seeing easier.
- 2 Glass reflector throws light upward and provides a soft general illumination throughout the room to reduce contrasts.
- 3 New three-way lamp globe with three lighting intensities at the snap of a switch . . . 100, 200 and 300 watts from the same globe.
- 4 Shade is lined with light-reflecting material to give the maximum illumination for reading or studying.
- 5 Shade is wide enough to distribute light over the entire working area. You can read normally without leaning to get under the light.

READING STUDY LAMPS $6.95

Reading-Study lamps are available in several styles, but all have the distinguishing features of a scientifically designed lamp to give adequate illumination and protection from glare. Try one of these lamps tonight and you'll be convinced that they decrease eyestrain.

FLOOR MODELS $8.95

Floor lamps of similar design also use the same principles of proper lighting. Both indirect and semi-indirect lamps supply a general room illumination and also glareless light for reading or studying.

Science has long recognized the need for better lighting . . . lighting that is adequate to protect the eyesight of every person who does visual work. For years illuminating engineers have designed, tested, experimented with various types of lighting fixtures. Lamp designers worked for many months to build into a single lighting unit all of the sound principles of proper lighting set down by the scientists.

Now . . . they present this revolutionary improvement in lighting . . . a new principle in lamp design that will aid you in caring for your eyesight. Look for the Illuminating Engineering Society's tag of approval which is your assurance that the lamp you buy is up to modern specifications.

CHAPTER I

It was July, the hour 8 o'clock in the morning. Locusts sang in the high elms bordering the winding road which capped the ridge of hills. The deep blue sky was brushed over with wisps of clouds, and there was in the air a threat of the intense heat which would presently brood over the whole countryside in the quiet of midday. A bridle path wandered through the stillness, and there was a church-like hush in the deep places, where brooks ran over copper colored stones and toads hopped in the long grass.

Katharine Strykhurst walked her mare through the woods, slowly at first, later spurring her to a more daring gait. The beautiful Katharine was frowning this fine morning. Her dark, exquisitely arched brows almost met over fine eyes of an intense dark blue. Her fair hair, fine and silky, with a sheen of authentic gold in its deep waves, was brushed straight back from her brow and gathered into a knot at the nape of her neck. Her white linen bodysuit, her casually open white shirt, set off her looks to perfection. Yet there was something almost startling in the contrast between the darkness of those eyes and the fairness of her skin and hair. Katharine, in fact, was a mass of contradictions, and was occasionally proud of it. She was at once proud and humble, arrogant and gentle; her spirit suffered keenly because of the contrariness of her warring emotions.

This morning was a fair example. She had come to the riding club—Michael Heatheroe's club—fully expecting Michael to accompany her on her morning canter. For weeks now—ever since the early part of April, actually—that had been the accepted order of things. Katharine no longer needed the service of a groom. She handled the little mare now with spirit and authority, but it had been Michael's habit to mount his roan and lead her along the paths. This particular morning another pupil had been at the stables before her—a plump, dark, lusciously pretty girl whom Katharine recognized as Sally Moon, one of the girls who had gone to the same school Katharine had attended in the village of Innicoek, which lay below her now in the shimmering haze of morning.

Katharine had nodded coldly to Sally who was resplendent in breeches and brightly polished boots and who wore the most absurd of crocheted yellow sports berets on her dark mass of curls, at an absurd angle.

The colored boy had come out, grinning at Katharine, leading the little mare known as Fury. Katharine had shut off the ignition, had leaped out of her car, and (not without a flourish) had mounted Fury's back with ease and elegance.

She had heard Sally say languidly to Tips: "Is Michael coming?"

Out of the corner of her eye, Katharine had been aware that Tips had nodded in the direction of the stables, whence Michael Heatheroe was at that moment emerging. The sun caught the crest of his red hair and made it gleam. Katharine felt her heart plunge, right itself. It was insane—this is the way her traitorous nerves always behaved when Michael first appeared on the scene. A perfectly ordinary young man in riding clothes, she told herself, proudly and scornfully: that was all he was.

Michael had greeted her with an unself-conscious smile.

"Sorry I can't ride with you. I've a lesson." He had thrown a glance in Sally's direction, and Katharine had forced her stiff lips into the semblance of a smile. Naturally he would ride with Sally Moon, if she were a beginner.

Katharine threw up her handsome head with an impatient gesture, going over the brief scene again.

"I'm quite, quite mad," she confided to the silent aisles, riding by. Certainly it was none of her business if Michael had a new pupil. He needed all he could get during the spring and summer season. All the summer people went back to the city the first of September, leaving Innicoek shuttered and silent. No, Michael had to look to his own affairs while summer people rented big houses on the bay and along the lanes.

Some men liked Sally Moon's type; there was no doubt about that. Sally was luscious, sun-kissed, like a peach that has ripened over-long. Her chocolate-colored eyes shined in all directions, especially in the direction of whatever man happened to be about. She had a way of siding up to men, half bold, half coy.

"I can't—I won't compete with that sort of thing," Katharine Strykhurst confided aloud to the world and was startled at herself. Who was asking her to compete with Sally? What on earth was she raving about?

She began to laugh, and with the first rippling sound her black mood slid from her shoulders. What a fool she was, making a mountain out of a molehill! Michael was her friend, a tall, rangy young man with a slow smile and a caressing note in his voice for everyone. Sally was only a small town coquet with too much makeup on and a trick of making every triangular conversation seem a competition in sex.

In a good humor now, Katharine galloped the mare the last few paces of that stretch of lane which would presently cross the Shore Road which was Innicoek's main artery. This far out, it was a broad ribboned highway, flanked by red and white gas stations and an occasional mammoth sign. A mile or two back from the Sound, it became Innicoek's Main Street, with tall maples shading old white houses with green shutters. Further down still was the bank, the white-painted church, the library, Miss Matilda's nursery school, and a grocery store. Innicoek was an old village, sleepy, comfortable, leisurely. Katharine often said, with passion, that she hated it.

She lived in one of the oldest and largest of the stone houses down on the Point. It was set in the midst of park-like acres. Its Norman turret was hung with ivy, and in summer clematis dropped mournfully from its portico. Within it was dark with seasoned oak, eastern rugs, bronze lamps and red velvet hangings. Twenty-five years ago it had been a "show-place," and in the eyes of Katharine's trim, modern stepmother it was that still. Her father, white-haired, portly, a lawyer down in the city, never thought of changing anything about it.

Katharine said to herself that she hated it. When she came into her mother's money—that would be next March, and she was looking forward to it—she would find herself a gay, modern apartment down in the city and would furnish it in the modern manner—tweed fabrics, chairs fashioned of chromium tubing, angled tables with glittering mirrored surfaces.

Her father and her stepmother had no idea what went on under those smooth fair brows. Inwardly Katharine seethed; outwardly, at least, she was calm. This riding club of Michael Heatheroe's had given her a much needed outlet lately. When things palled on her, when life seemed "too utterly poisonous" to bear another minute, she would slip into her riding things and drive over to Shady Ridge where the good smell of trampled earth, the stamping of horses in their stalls satisfied something in herself. Not that she would acknowledge, even for a minute, that she was interested in Michael.

A glance at her watch now warned her that her hour was nearly ended. She spurred the little horse back in the direction from which she had come.

Fury paused obediently now at the intersection of the bridle path and River Road. Michael had taught her to do this and, even though Katharine's touch on the bridle urged her on, she hesitated, nervously pawing the red earth. Katharine, roused from her thoughts, stared unseeing for a moment into the eyes of the girl in the little green car which had drawn up as Fury emerged from the green tunnel.

"Zoe Parker! When did you get back?"

The car door slammed and Zoe ran forward uttering shrill cries of greeting. Zoe, Katharine told herself critically, was really lovely. Those glittering white teeth, that charming warm blush of sunburn, those bright dancing eyes! Pity Zoe was such a crashing fool!

"Hel-lo, darling!"

Zoe was in white linen with a vest of dark blue linen, dotted in white. Her shoes, her hat, her gloves were all unbelievably crisp.

"You look smart!"

"Thanks. You do, too, darling!" Zoe cried. "We just got in last night. I was going to call. How are you and what've you been doing?"

"Oh, the usual," Katharine drawled.

"I'm crazy to see everybody," Zoe declared. Everybody knew that Zoe's ambitious mother had whisked her to Europe in May in order to avoid a scandal about Gibbs Larkin. Gibbs was 35, handsome in a thoroughly dissolute way, ionscienceless. Zoe had fallen headlong in love with him, with all her lightning impetuosity. Gibbs, people said, would never marry. He was one of those eternal bachelors who sip sweets where they will. Zoe had recklessly and defiantly been seen with him every place.

These girls who fall so wildly and recklessly in love, thought Katharine, contemptuously!

They chatted for a few moments longer, making an engagement to meet that afternoon.

"Has she 'got over' Gibbs?" Katharine wondered. She did hope Zoe would spare her the confidences. These love recitals were bound to be boring. Katharine prided herself on her imperviousness to the grand passion. Love was stupid. It tied you all up, got your feelings confused. There was no sense to it. . . .

All of which, of course, had nothing whatever to do with her feelings about Michael. She and Michael had simply been friends, good comrades, and it was perfectly natural she should be slightly miffed when he so casually gave away the hour which had been sacred to her for months. . . .

Her face reddened, as she waved goodbye to Zoe.

"What's the matter, darling?"

"N-nothing," Katharine lied, valiantly. "Just a heat wave, I guess."

It was because she had been annoyed to have used the word "sacred," even to herself, in connection with her friendship with Michael. What was the matter with her anyway?

That was Thursday morning. On Friday she went for her ride as usual, and Michael was there, tall, lean and casual.

"Mawnin!"

She smiled at him with just the right degree of casualness. "Good morning."

He tightened a strap, patted Prince Charlie's gleaming flank. "Storm comin' up!" he announced.

"Oh, do you think so?" But Katharine's query was not the usual feminine flutter. She adored storms.

"Maybe I'd better take this," Michael flung an oilskin slicker across Prince Charlie's back.

"Not for me," Katharine said coolly.

The red-haired young man glanced at her quizzically a moment, then called to Tips: "Here, catch this!"

The slicker sailed through the air, landing in a pile of hay. The colored boy ran to retrieve it, with a flash of white teeth in an ebony face.

"Just as you say," Michael announced. He swung a long leg over his western saddle, leading the way.

The trees ached overhead in a conspiracy of silence. In the dim interstices where the sky could be seen there were patches of angry clouds. From the west rose a rumble of deep thunder.

You won't mind gettin' wet?"

He looked back at her over his shoulder, his gentle voice courteous as usual.

Katharine laughed. "No, why should I?"

The deep roll of distant thunder increased. They crossed an open meadow with a river meandering alongside and an orange flash of lightning licked across the sky. Suddenly they were again in the woods, the horses wading carefully through the shallow stream and plunging up the muddy banks.

Now the rain came down, suddenly, in torrents, in violent sheets. For the main part, the trees protected them, but soon the path again crossed a civilized road, a main highway. Great angry peals of thunder sounded, and the sky was made livid by the almost continual flashes of lightning. The horses were nervous. Fury danced and winned, refusing to proceed.

At the side of the road was a small blue-roofed cottage which had once housed a district school, and later an amateur radio station. It was unoccupied now. At the rear was a rude shelter for horses. Michael, without consulting Katharine, cantered back to her and, seizing Fury's bridle, led the nervous little animal under cover.

"We'd better stop here a minute," he said quietly. "It's foolhardy to go on just now."

Michael helped her to dismount. Then he tied both Fury and Prince Charlie to the rude rail of the shelter and quieted them with his reassuring voice.

"We can go inside, if you like," he told the girl, after a particularly vicious flash of light. "I had to stop here last week in that cloudburst—remember? I had a party of kids. They were scared stiff."

He pushed open the door, disclosing a narrow room with a bricked fireplace and some battered school benches. Someone had evidently built a fire. There were the remains of logs, charred and broken, in the grate.

"Cheerful place," Katharine commented dryly.

He glanced at her curiously. "It's not so much. Here—let me dust that thing off. You can sit down."

"I'd better not," Katharine hugged her arms about her.

Michael knelt, making shift, with a bundle of twigs at the side of the fireplace, and the remains of the logs. Presently he had a blaze going. The west wind whipped in at the open door and Katharine shivered, in spite of herself.

"Well, go on—lecture me—" she said, looking at him.

The tall young man turned from the grate, dusting his lean, long fingered hands.

"For what?"

She regarded him coolly, lighting a cigaret with fire that shook a little.

"Oh, for being stubborn—not taking the slicker—"

"Oh, that!"

He turned back to the fire, appearing to forget her.

Suddenly Katharine felt rage sweep her. To be ignored like this was strangely maddening! She inhaled deep frowning angrily at the absorbed young man, who so solicitously over the fire. She knew well enough that Sally Moon—or Zoe Parker—would do on such an occasion. Sally would whimper a little and shiver and wistful, and there would be a good deal of argument accepting the man's coat. Michael didn't have a coat that didn't matter. He ought at least to show some concern about her. Why, she might have pneumonia.

Katharine, struck suddenly by the utter nonsense her reasoning (she almost never had a cold), lay aloud.

"What's the joke?"

She glanced, sidewise, at Michael Heatheroe. "No, you'd understand!"

He flushed, the brick tint showing above the deep stain of his sunburn.

"I'm not so slow," he drawled in that easy voice of his.

"I didn't mean that," Katharine hastened to say.

Outside the thunder rolled and pealed, the sky ste darkened, and occasional angry flashes of lightning luminated the room. The rain, obedient to a dervish's lore in at the door, and Michael closed it. Now they shut in together.

"This may go on all morning," she said, at risk of wishing only to break the silence.

"Oh, I don't think it will. It's lifting now. . . ."

But she had the feeling that he, too, wasn't thinking what he was saying. Were both of them a little sheltering from a mere thunderstorm this summer evening?

"Fury doesn't like it," he said, of the lightning. "nervous."

"Just like a woman," Katharine said scornfully.

Her tone roused him.

"I've known plenty of men who didn't like either."

"Oh, but have you?" Katharine mocked him. The devil of perverseness seemed to possess her. She wanted to startle, shock, annoy him—stir him out of his usual acceptance of her.

"Sure enough!"

She stared at him, drinking in very line of his fast quizzical gray eyes with the little laughter wrinkles around them. Michael was—how old? Twenty-eight? His shoulders were broad, his waist slim, like a true man's. She knew, she told herself, dozens of men better looking, smarter, better educated in every way. Why earth did she bother with him?

"You don't think much of us around here, do you?" she pursued, scarcely knowing what she said.

"You all—people in Innicoek?"

"Yes. You think we're all spoiled children—or something." Her tone was hateful and she knew it, but the life of her she couldn't change it.

Michael stared at her thoughtfully. She had a pulse, almost irresistible, to reach up and rumple that red crest of hair, from which the stubborn curl had fully been ironed only that morning.

"Folks around here have been mighty nice to me. 'Nighly nice!" She mocked his soft, easy drawl. Suddenly she felt both her hands imprisoned, in a grip of steel. Grey eyes darkening like the stormy skies out looked into hers.

"You don't—you mustn't. . . ."

"Mustn't what?"

The treacherous tide within her warmed her. Was this surrender, of which she had heard so much?

But Michael Heatheroe dropped her hands, released her as suddenly as he had seized her. "I beg your pardon," he muttered. "You sure made me mad, Miss Strykhurst. I guess I forgot myself. . . ."

noon luncheon was served the visitors from tables arranged in the basement decorated with runners of roses and honeysuckle. The menu consisted of barbecue meat, green beans, new potatoes, vegetable salad, cake and coffee.

The afternoon session was opened with a board meeting. The Women's Missionary Society was in charge of the remainder of the hour. President, Mrs. W. A. Lewis offered greetings and introduced the district president, Mrs. G. W. Thomas, who in turn introduced the Rev. Frank Reynolds of Moran, who gave a fitting devotional, "The Comradship of Evangelism" was given in a talk by Rev. E. A. Cain.

The musical feature of the program brought variations of old time religious songs from two colored women of St. Paul's church, Ranger. Mrs. Geneva Kelly, vocalist, and Mrs. Sarah Allen, at the piano.

Mrs. T. M. Goodnight of Caddo concluded the lesson with a fine talk on "The Wonders of Personal Testimony In Evangelism."

The short business period was given over to reports including summarized report from Mrs. Ardel of Cisco, recording secretary, and Mrs. W. L. Jackson, corresponding secretary, Ranger. It was favorably agreed to send money to Buckner's Orphan Home soon for clothes to be bought a girl graduate.

The meeting is recorded as one of the largest attended as well as interestingly carried out of any to have been held in several months.

The young bride is married to a rich, but badly spoiled youth, believing her first husband to be dead. It turns out, however, that he had placed a wooden cigar-store Indian in a casket to fool his wife and authorities. After her marriage he turns up to blackmail her but while he is negotiating for money, he is found dead in his apartment with a stab wound through his heart.

The wife is arrested, but Mason finds four other persons who had motives to kill the man.

Getting all the suspects in his apartment by a ruse, the attorney-detective clears up the mystery in a most amazing climax.

Ward's Cooking School Features Pressure Cooking

Some of the advantages of the pressure cooker which have been proven to the crowds attending the classes in cooking and canning at Montgomery Ward since Wednesday, were discussed today by Carl Jansing, store manager.

"It has been proven conclusively," said Mr. Jansing, "that the pressure cooker cooks and cans faster than any other method. The reason for this is that the highest temperature that can be obtained in an open vessel is 212 degrees Fahrenheit. The pressure cooker, however, because of its steam tight construction, makes a higher temperature possible. Cooking may be done at 15 pounds or 250 degrees Fahrenheit. This intense heat and steam under pressure forces its way through the foods and cooks them from three to four times as fast."

Other advantages, pointed out by Mr. Jansing, were the saving of fuel, as only one burner is used; elimination of the shrinkage in meats; making tough meats tender; cooking of fresh meats and vegetables without water, thus saving vitamins and mineral salts which are so healthful, and the elimination of smoke, grease, steam and odor.

The cooking and canning school will continue through Saturday. Classes are held at 2 p. m.

Here's what "SUMMER-IZE" Service means...
1 Drain off dirty winter grade oil and refill your crankcase with new SUMMER MOBIL OIL, made by the Clearosol Process.
2 Drain off winter transmission lubricant, clean thoroughly, refill with heat-resisting Mobil Gear Oil.
3 Drain, clean and refill differential with correct grade of Mobil Gear Oil.
4 Mobilize car thoroughly, using special Mobilgreases as approved by your car manufacturer.
5 Drain off anti-freeze solution and clean radiator thoroughly, using Mobil Radiator Flush if necessary.
6 Check battery and fill with distilled water; remove corrosion and grease terminals.
7 Fill gasoline tank with Mobilgas, now adjusted for summer driving.
