Compromise Is Bound To Defeat A Fighter

Ramsay MacDonald stands today as a tragic example of the thing that can happen to a man who stops fighting and starts to compromise.

His party has disowned him, his old supporters are his bitter enemies, and he is no longer a member of Parliament—this man who, only a decade ago, sent his voice across England like a horn of Roland to rally people for a better social order.

During the war MacDonald's name was one with which good patriots could frighten small children. MacDonald saw the war as a racket, from the start, said so, and paid for it heavily.

All the scorn and unpopularity that a united nation can visit upon a dissenter were poured on his head. When he sought to go to Sweden to discuss peace with workers' representatives from the central powers, English seamen went on strike and refused to carry him. He was an out-cast.

But he was also a fighter. He stuck by his guns, refusing to give up his principles, no matter how hard the storm. And in a few years he had his reward.

War-time hatred turned to peace-time admiration. He led his Labor Party to great gains; and at last he became prime minister of England, first representative of his class to sit where Pitt and Gladstone had sat.

And then something happened. Ramsay MacDonald, who had fought like grim death for his principles a short time before began, now, to compromise. A Socialist, he began to act like a conservative representative of the propertied class; a pacifist, he followed as premier policies indistinguishable from those of his predecessors who had hated pacifism.

English Laborites accused him of selling out. The words are too harsh. It is so fatally easy to justify a policy of compromise; to point out that half a loaf is better than no bread, and that the leader of a minority party must proceed very slowly, when he attains a position of power.

So MacDonald compromised, and what happened after that is something that no politician can afford to overlook.

His party deserted him. In the recent campaign he was heckled so viciously that he was never able to complete a speech. He was snowed under, at last, failing of re-election to Parliament by a vote of more than two to one. Today his career is ended, to all intents and purposes.

Once he stood alone against the world for a principle—and his nation came to love him for it. Later on he compromised, and forgot that magnificent ability to tell the world to go to blazes if it didn't like him—and the result is complete and lasting defeat.

He is the most tragic political figure of the day—an unforgettable example of the disaster which comes upon a fighter who stops fighting.

NEW YORK.—Japan is the only foreign nation more interested in baseball than Mexico.

"They want a dozen American managers and coaches to come down there and develop them," says Al Schacht, the comedian who accompanied the All-American League team on a tour of the republic below the Rio Grande at the conclusion of the campaign.

"They really go for the game. Why, we had hundreds of women of 65 and more at our games every day. They've always got a hand out there and they give the visitor a lot of applause when he makes a good fielding play or drives in a couple of runs. When he does that the band plays the hero number when he comes back to the bench and the people stand up and applaud.

"When it was all over they paid us off in pesos. They had coils stacked up by the bushel. I never saw so many coils even in big collections. I sent five pesos out for a barrel and dropped all mine into the barrel, counting all the while.

"That was silly because I lost track. Anyway, after the barrel was filled I walked along with the pesos to the nearest bank and when I left I could put all I got in exchange for my pesos in my vest pocket. What I got was seven $100 bills. Not so good and not so bad!"

Much Too Good for Mexico

AMERICAN LEAGUE players who made the trip were Vernon Kennedy, Ted Lyons, Earl Whitehill, and Jack Knott, pitchers; Luke Sewell and Charley Berry, catchers; Jimmy Foss, first base; Rogers Hornsby, second base; Frank Higgins, third base; Ed McNair, shortstop; and Heinie Manush, Roger Cramer, and Ralph Kress, outfielders.

"That team would be good enough for any league, and was much too good for Mexico," asserts Schacht.

The club appeared in Mexico City on Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays. On other days it performed in nearby towns.

"Our opponents in Mexico City were the Aztecs, a pretty fair club," relates Schacht.

"We played the Aztecs on a Sunday and the ball park in Mexico City had no outfield fence; it stretched from here to hellandgone. And there were with all those left-handed pull hitters in the lineup and what they did!

"Things were different at Pachuca.

"Before the first inning got under way, we were told that ground rules at Pachuca were different. They had an outfield fence at Pachuca, and they told us that any ball hit over the right field fence was a one-base hit and no more.

"You wouldn't believe it but we hit 14 legitimate home runs in that game and got beat, 2-1. In the fifth inning we hit four balls in succession over the right field fence and all it got us was one run and escape from a whitewashing. Those Mexicans aren't so dumb."

And Al Schacht is a good story teller.

Girls Spend More Than Boys Do at Texas Christian

By United Press

FORT WORTH.—Eight hundred and forty-seven students in Texas Christian University spend a total of $580,695 in a year, according to a survey just completed by the Department of Journalism of the school.

The expenditures—for clothing, amusements, school expenses, and every other item for which money might be used—vary all the way from $250 to $1,350. The men average $565 total expenditure for the year; the girls, $386. Most of the difference between the sexes is accounted for in the greater amount the girls spend for clothing.

Although the number of men in T. C. U. is 75 less than the number of girls, the latter spend nearly six times as much for dresses as the boys do for suits.

Interesting items disclosed by the survey include an average monthly expenditure by each boy of 95 cents for picture shows, 12 cents for candy, 10 cents for school supplies, $1.10 for food between meals, 89 cents for barber shop service, six cents for taxi-cabs.

Included in the average monthly expenditures of the girls are such items as, soda fountain, 49 cents; candy, 15 cents; beauty parlors, $2.82; picture shows, 39 cents; school supplies, 28 cents.

The average amount earned, for boys, was found to be $269.79; for the girls, $67.76.

Six Shooter Nell Is Just a Woman In Spite of Her Record

By United Press

DALLAS, Tex.—Texas has always been known for its two gun men, but never has it been known before to have a woman taxi cab driver known as Nell (Six-Shooter) Duckett.

Nell is the only woman in El Paso that doesn't own a dress. She does the work of a man and wears men's clothes.

Nell says the taxi business is alright, but with a fare of only 10 cents it's all you can do to make a living. "You have to pay a boy to keep your car clean, and if you have a good automobile, you have to buy good gas and oil for it, for if you don't it'll cost you more in repairs in the long run," she said.

She is the co-owner of a taxi stand, and for 18 years has transported passengers, sometimes working as much as 18 hours a day. She smokes cigars, but prefers cigars. "I'd smoke them all the time if it wasn't so expensive," she said.

Nell has a daughter 20 years old of whom she is very proud. She is studying to be an artist.

"She had some of her paintings on display at the Girl Scouts Show the other day, and she likes to paint," Nell said proudly.

"I don't claim to be a hard-boiled business 'man,' but a tender mother, trying to make a living for myself and my daughter.

Grapefruit "Blush" At Last Achieved

McALLEN, Texas.—Grapefruit growers at last have achieved by automatic "roughing" the delectable "blush" a grapefruit should have when it is mature.

A. E. Henninger, Lower Rio Grande Valley grower, reports that he has succeeded in the botanical experiment of breeding a "sport" grapefruit which is red both inside and out.

WE DRIVERS

A Series of Brief Discussions on Driving, Dedicated to the Safety, Comfort and Pleasure of the Motoring Public. Prepared by General Motors

No. 2—NIGHT DRIVING

IT'S JUST AS TRUE as can be that when people get expert at anything they are apt to begin getting careless about it, and that's what we have to look for when driving our cars. For instance, we recently heard a group of engineers discussing night driving, and one thing they kept talking about was "over-driving our headlights."

Now that term seems to be a common one with them, but it's new to most of us. What they mean is that the distance we can clearly see with headlights is, of course, limited, and we are apt to let our car speeds get beyond the distance where we could easily stop within that limited distance. It's true that we naturally tend to go a little slower at night. But if we aren't careful we gradually get faster than we realize, and that may get into trouble. You see, momentum, the same force that tries to keep us from making turns safely, cuts all kinds of capers on slippery roads... especially He works on the same old principles night and day. Darkness doesn't hinder him, but it hinders us.

Table titled 'DISTANCE REQUIRED FOR STOPPING' showing Miles per hour vs. Feet traveled while thinking and feet traveled while using brakes.

Then after he does get the brakes to working, it takes him another 18 to stop completely, even with the best brakes in the world and with tires, under favorable road conditions. At least so we are told by the Board of Public Works of one of the states which has made a very interesting study of drivers and driving conditions, and who has prepared the data for the above chart.

The important thing to realize is that distance needed to stop increases a great deal as we increase our speed.

We just have to remember that when we're driving along in a car, we think by the foot, act by foot and stop by the foot, and if we aren't careful easy to get going faster than is really safe.

Now, just as engineers have told us how to open in safety with our own lights, many experienced drivers have pointed out how to avoid trouble with other people's lights. They say that all we have to do when passing other cars at night, is to stop looking at their lights and watch the right-hand side of the road.

The truth of the matter is that night driving can be just as pleasant as safe as day driving. But we have to be more alert and more careful.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MARY E. DAGUE
LAST NIGHT for dinner we had canned red raspberries chilled to the nth degree. Every one of us praised the simple dessert and of course you know that ever so many inexpensive but luxurious alluring desserts can be concocted from the fruit we canned last summer.
The juice of canned fruits, combined with lemon juice, makes a good fruit for breakfast. Light colored juices are excellent in salad dressings. Any fruit juice thickened with cornstarch and made piquant by a little lemon juice does as pleasing sauce for steamed puddings. Stiffened with gelatin and molded attractively, fruit and juice together are grand with whipped cream.
These desserts add interest to winter meals by furnishing the flavor and minerals of summer fruits at a time when the diet is apt to be rather heavy and monotonous.

Tomorrow's Menu
BREAKFAST: Combination fruit juice, cereal, cream, ham omelet, toast, milk, coffee.
LUNCHEON: Fried oysters, creamed celery, Parker House rolls, toasted fruit, milk, tea.
DINNER: Tomato juice cocktail, roast beef, browned potatoes, buttered brussels sprouts, salad of lima beans, carrots, peas, orange soufflé, milk, coffee.

against Woodring was by a scant 6000 votes, while his second triumph last year was by 63,000 votes. He lost only 15 of 105 counties.
"I have only one predominant thought now," Landon says, "and that is to mind my own business. After all, a governor does have to work. Kansas has balanced its budget, lowered taxes, and met every relief need. In addition, we experienced three major disasters: drought, dust storms, and floods.
"My political philosophy decrees that I shall never worry about my political future and I am sticking by that creed now."
This 47-year-old state executive and World War veteran declines to take any determined stand against the administration or to directly attack President Roosevelt, although he is not averse to a few jabs at the administration's program.
After graduation from the Kansas University School of Law in 1908, Landon entered the banking business in Independence, his home town. Then he became an independent oil producer and the business principles he has learned in banking and oil have been applied to government.
Sees Foreign Trade Need
He indorses part of the AAA, but believes the major error is the inattention given to a restoration of foreign markets through which the farmer benefited.
"Industry and agriculture must be balanced and foreign trade revived before there can be any farm relief," he contends.
"I cannot agree that any plan which tries to peg agricultural prices or create some sort of pegged price for farm products is feasible or advisable, for the simple reason that man cannot control the forces of nature. Until man can control the weather, it is folly to try to control farm prices," says the governor.
Waste in the AAA and other administration bureaus and from experimentation and high-salaried "field representatives," Landon chooses to term "political and administrative delinquencies."
And where is the Forgotten Man today?
"The Forgotten Man is still partly forgotten," Landon asserts.

public gatherings where he could not help but enhance his prestige.
"I am too busy as governor to go scooting about the country making speeches," he insisted.
Devoted to Family
Next to his attractive wife, two daughters, and small son, his most prized possessions are a faded campaign hat, which is crumpled and shapeless; a pipe that emits a variety of odors, and a set of elaborate fishing apparatus.
He is an ardent baseball and football fan. He works in his shirt sleeves in summer, calls reports by their first names, and trusts them implicitly in "off the record" talks.
Unlike many public servants who laud their own accomplishments, Landon frankly admits that co-operation of Democratic legislators made it possible to place Kansas in the unusual position she is in today.
He predicts the Republican party will adopt a program between ultra-conservatism and ultra-radicalism and that the chances for victory next year are good.
"Roosevelt can't be beaten?" he repeats. "Wait and see."
Sees Drift From F. R.
"From all over Kansas I hear the farmers—and I heard it in many sections of the middlewest, too—are gradually veering away from the national administration and will not support Roosevelt for re-election.

With All My Love by Mary Raymond

BEGIN HERE TODAY
After the death of her parents, Dana Westbrooke, child of her mother's second marriage, was brought to live with her grandmother, Mrs. WILLIAM CAMERON.
Dana's half-sister, NANCY WALLACE, feels resentful toward Dana.
Mrs. Cameron secretly hopes Dana will make a brilliant marriage, she is elated when rich RONALD MOORE becomes interested in her young granddaughter.
Lonely Nancy seeks her love for Ronald behind an antagonistic attitude.
Meanwhile, Dana and DR. SCOTT STANLEY become attracted to each other. PAULA LONG, desperately in love with Scott, watches his interest in Dana deepen.
Dana is caught in a storm. Scott overtakes her and carries her to his home, nearby.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XI
DANA repeated Scott's words, her eyes widening. "This is where you live?" But how?
"I was looking out the window," he told her, "and cursing my luck to have a storm like this come up while my car's in the shop. And then I saw you. There wasn't anything to do but go after you."
Dana was looking about the room. It was wide and cozy, with easy chairs, a fireplace and bookshelves filled with books. An old room Dana saw, but it had escaped shabbiness. It even had distinction of a sort, with its mellow wood paneling. The rugs were old, but they had once been good. A lamp glowed cheerfully on the table where books and magazines were scattered.
She nodded appreciatively. "It's a nice room."
Scott said, "I wanted you to like it. And now we'll have to find you something dry and get you out of those wet things. I'll build a fire to dry your dress and shoes. Then I'll call a taxi."
"Oh, no," Dana protested. "If you have a coat you can lend me I'll just slip it over my dress."
"Listen," Scott said firmly. "I'm a doctor, but I don't want you as a pneumonia patient." He swung open the door of the adjoining room. "You'll find a dressing robe in the closet."
Dana found herself obeying. She stepped into the next room, caught a glimpse of herself in the mirror. Her wet hair straggled across her white cheeks, and her hair was a sodden ball atop her head. Water was oozing from her soaked white sandals. Scott was probably right, she might be ill if she didn't change. And besides, it was mighty uncomfortable being wringing wet.
DANA emerged a few minutes later in a gayly striped dressing robe, wrapped about her slim body and securely tied. On her feet were Scott's bedroom slippers.
"I thought," she explained, "that as long as I was ordered to change I might as well put on these, too."
A grin spread over Scott's face. Dana said, a little ruefully, "I know I'm funny-looking."
"Even, you are," Scott agreed. "But, yes, in that outfit you're quite adorable. I'm going now to change my suit. Lucky I have an 'other coat'!"
Willie Scott was dressing Dana spread her wet dress on the grass fender and placed her shoes near the fire.
Scott returned quickly, having contrived, somehow, to look immaculate without appearing stiffly groomed. He went to the telephone and called a number.
Dana heard his voice protesting. "But this is an emergency. I've got to have a taxi. Get one out here and I'll make it worth your while."
He hung up and called another number, with no greater success. Then he came to the door and stood there, frowning a little.
Dana sat on a footstool near the fire, the light bringing out the bronze gleams in her hair. She looked very slight and boyish with the man's robe belted about her, her feet lost in Scott's leather bed-room slippers.
"All the taxi places say they have a waiting list a mile long. It means an hour's wait, at least."
Dana said cheerfully, "Well, that's all right—now that I'm good and dry."
"I was all kinds of an idiot to bring you here," Scott said slowly. "Regardless of the fact that you are an ornament to my heartache, I'm going to have to get you home in a hurry. While we're waiting for your dress to dry and the cab let's shrink I'll stir up some eggs and make coffee. Sorry there's not much else to offer. The only meal I have here is breakfast, and I didn't foresee that my car would be in the shop at the same time the elements would choose to play the devil."
THE elements were still playing the devil, Dana thought. Rain was pouring against the window panes as though a giant hand were dashing buckets of water from above. Now and then there was a roar of thunder, followed by vivid streaks of lightning. But there was a feeling of security in the cozy, unpretentious room with the firelight playing softly on the satiny surface of old wood and bringing out the warm tones of the rug.
"Let me help," Dana offered.
"Can you cook?"
"Try me," Dana boasted. "No body can make a better omelet. It's one of my specialties."
"Just for that bragging I'm going to turn the kitchen over to you," Scott said.
"All right. But first I'll call Grandmother and tell her not to worry."
She got Aunt Ellen on the phone. The receiver against her ear crackled alarmingly, followed by an ominous roar of thunder.
Dana said quickly, "I'm having dinner with a friend. Aunt Ellen I'll be home later."
It wasn't possible to go into details with a storm roaring about your ears. Besides, it would require a lot of explaining to tell the whole story. No use worrying them all for nothing. When they heard just how it had all happened they couldn't blame her.
Newspapers next day were to record that the storm was one of the worst that had struck the town in years, to describe the uprooting of trees and how tops were lifted from trail houses and lines of communication blown down.
A terrific crash of thunder, following a vivid streak of lightning, sent Dana running to Scott. For a moment her head was hidden against his shoulder.
"Steady, there!" came Scott's reassuring voice, his arm tightening about her.
Dana lifted a white face. "And I've always said I liked Mother Nature in any old mood," she said.
"Mother Nature's got a jag on tonight," Scott said thoughtfully. He still had his arm around her, but dropped it abruptly. "The old girl's drunk with power. It has just occurred to me that I didn't put my house number on that mile-long list—though I doubt if taxis will be navigated in a storm like this."
HE was gone quite a while. When he returned his expression was sober.
"The phone's out," he said. "Dana, I'm afraid this is serious. If the storm doesn't let up—"
"Don't worry," Dana said, trying not to reveal her own concern. "It can't be very late. It can't keep up much longer."
"Your'd think it would have blown itself out long ago with such violence. But you never can tell—"
There wasn't a doubt that Scott was worried, Dana thought. And it was all her fault.
Scott said dryly, "Storm or no storm, folks aren't very charitable."
"Gossip, you mean?"
"Gossip, scandal—whatever you want to call it. That wouldn't be so very nice for you, Dana."
"Or for you," Dana said gravely. "After all, you're starting a career and people might be prejudiced against a doctor mixed up in a scandal."
Scott shook his head. "That's all right—but the worst of it would fall on you." He considered her, frowning.
Dana's natural optimism came to her rescue. "Let's not get upset before we've eaten dinner. Anyway, it just isn't possible for such a torrent to last much longer."
They drew the table before the fire which was still burning brightly, the wood crackling merrily as though in defiance of the gloomy elements.
Later they washed the dishes, dried them, and then came back to the living room.
Scott tried the telephone again and reported failure. Meanwhile Dana had put on her dress and sandals, which she declared were perfectly dry.
Once Scott opened the front door but met such a wild reception from the black furies outside that he closed it quickly. He came over to the fire and sat down near Dana. She looked sweet and courageous, he thought, seemingly unconscious of her rumpled linen frock, her lovely eyes meeting his calmly. Any other girl he knew, in a similar situation, would be having hysterics.
Scott said slowly, "I'm afraid a taxi couldn't get here, even if we could call one. The worst of it is, this hurricane may blow all night."

Week of Prayer Opens With Fine Program

The week of prayer being observed at First Baptist church got under way to an inspirational beginning Monday when a program was heard by a large group of members, presenting as main speaker, the pastor, Rev. G. W. Thomas. Subject, "South America and Mexico," constituted a splendid theme.

The Lottie Moon offering has served to great advantage in these foreign places, since the foreign board of funds are limited and donations has gone far in bringing about wonderful improvements.

A number of prayers were given and the program was closed with a singing led by Mrs. Thomas, with Mrs. Hutchings at the piano.

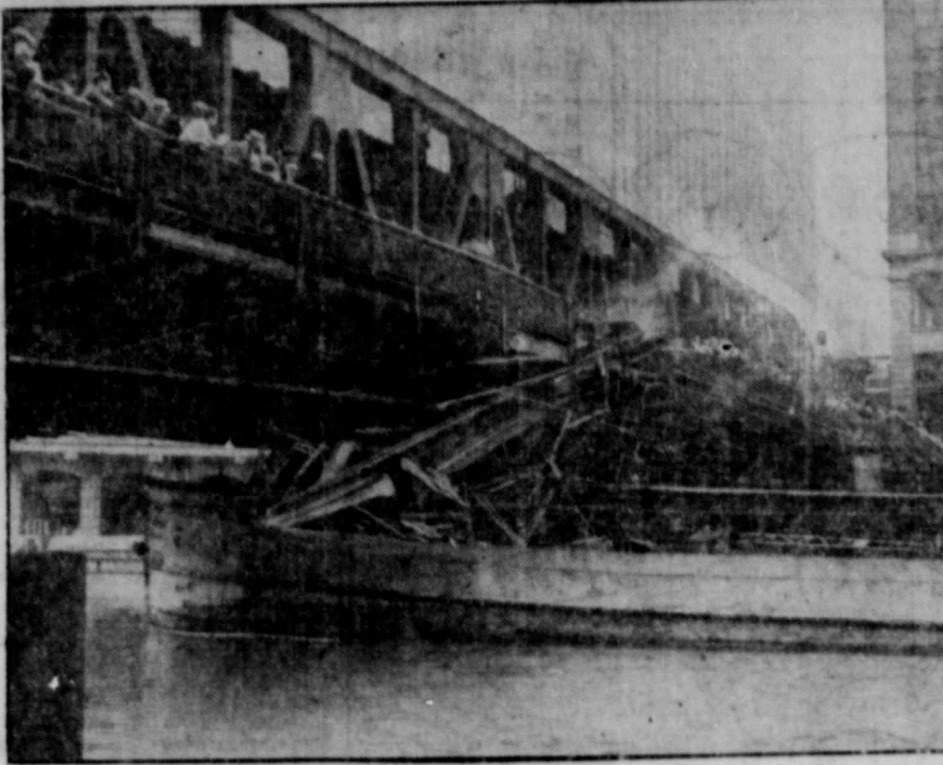

A cooking demonstration, using the famous Chambers wonder range, is to be staged next Wednesday afternoon by the Ranger Furniture Exchange in the building formerly occupied by the Robinson Auto Supply Company.

W. F. Ehleert, representative of the Chambers company, will be in Ranger to conduct the demonstration, to which all the women in this part of the county are cordially invited to attend. No admission charge is to be made.

One of the features of the Chambers range is that one can cook in the oven with the gas turned off by retained heat. Ehleert will demonstrate this new departure in cooking at the demonstration Wednesday afternoon as well as many other advantages to be found in the Chambers stove, which has been especially designed for the woman who wants beauty and modern simplicity, but who demands a generous cooking capacity and every new feature, and yet who prefers a compact range, occupying a small space.

Low Bridge! But Sandboat Couldn't Stop

A boat that couldn't stop and a bridge that couldn't be raised suffered heavy damage in this Chicago river collision. Because an elevated train was passing over it, the Wells Street span could not be raised as the 620-ton sandboat H. Dahke approached, and the boat, unable to resist the current, smashed into the lowered span. Firemen worked several hours to extricate the craft.

Turkey Shipments For Christmas Are To Be Larger

CUERO, Tex. —Turkey shipments during the Christmas season are expected to be the largest in the history of DeWitt county, famous as a producing center.

More than 125,000 sleek gobblers and turkey hens were withheld from the Thanksgiving market because of low prices.

Growers refused to ship their 1935 crop until prices were raised to 18 cents per pound. This caused flooded markets during the last two days of the Thanksgiving season.

As a result they were able to ship only a minor portion of top-conditioned birds. Thanksgiving shipments were the lightest in many, less than 25,000 turkeys being moved.

Packers had expected to ship 1,000,000 pounds. Indications were that the 1936 crop in this section will be the largest in history.

Thad Lane, one of the counties leading growers, said flocks of turkey hens containing 50 to 600, would be held back this year as a breeding stock for 1936 because of low prices.

The average grower usually holds back a dozen hens to be used as laying stock.
