Nature Greatest Enemy of Italy

Uncle Sam Looks Into Prospects for Jobs

Most of us can remember a time when $12,000,000 looked like a great deal of money. As far as our own private purses go, it still does. But with the federal government, things being as they are, it is hardly more than enough to leave under the saucer for the waitress.

Anyway, $12,000,000 is going to be spent on an investigation by Uncle Sam; and the only surprising thing about it is the fact that the investigation might actually be worth what it will cost.

Some 24,000 jobless men will be put to work under direction of Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, trying to determine "the effects of recent changes in the techniques of production upon the volume of employment and production."

Boiled down, this means that they are going to try to find out just what the prospects are for re-employment in private industry of the 3,500,000 men now working under the $4,000,000,000 work relief fund.

Sooner or later these men must go back to private industry for their jobs. Uncle Sam, who is so used to giving until it hurts that he is practically numb by now, can't carry them forever. But before he can't put them down, he has to have some idea what their chances are for supporting themselves without his help.

We have heard a great deal of talk about "technological unemployment" in the last few years. Gloomy prophets have tucked their beards inside their vests and assured us that even if production bounced back to the 1929 level, there would still be a great army of workers for whom industry would have no place.

But nobody has any very definite, hard, and fast facts to present.

If Mr. Hopkins' inquisitive 24,000 can find out, the knowledge will be well worth the $12,000,000. For it is only by getting this kind of knowledge that we can lay down any sensible relief program for the future.

The present work relief scheme will come to an end next summer. Nobody knows right now what will happen after that.

There is a pious hope in the air that the men involved will be able to get jobs on their own hook, but it is a hope and nothing more. And until the hope is replaced by actual knowledge, Congress will not be able to decide on what the government should spend its relief money after the work relief plan is ended.

So here, to repeat, is one work relief project that ought to be worth all it will cost. There are few things we need more than an accurate picture of the probable state of the employment market in private industry.

Secretary Morgenthau describes the new dollar as "the handsomest ever," but we doubt if it will look nearly as good as one did a few years ago.

SH!

With All My Love by Mary Raymond

BEGIN HERE TODAY Against the wishes of her grandmother, aristocratic MISS WILLIAMS, DANA CAMERON, DAUGHTER OF WESTBROOK MARRIES DR. SCOTT STANLEY, struggling young physician. Before her marriage she had broken with wealthy RONNIE MOORE, Dana's half-sister. NANCY, is in love with RONNIE, who has loved Dana since she was a child. Both Dana and Ronnie are miserable, but both are too proud to make a move toward reconciliation. Scott recognizes Dana one day on the street. He hastens after her. Not as much money as Ronnie had. Not 10 million. But enough to give her a fine home and pretty clothes if that was what she wanted. The thought of Ronnie was like acid, burning new tracks of misery along which his tortured thoughts must travel. Scott was glad in a dull kind of way—perhaps relieved was the better word—that Dr. Osborne had invited him to his home tonight. Dr. Osborne had become a staunch friend. DANA and Ronnie arrived at the Cameron home. Nancy, who had been reading, glanced up at them, startled. She got up and started toward the door. Ronnie called, "Don't go, Nancy. I want to talk with you." "With me?" Nancy kept her hand on the door. "Why not?" Ronnie drawled. He was smiling, but his eyes looked puzzled. "But I suppose I should know better than to expect you to reciprocate. Dana, this is a case where devotion has gone unrequited." "You like to talk," mocked Nancy, her dark eyes meeting his unsmiling. "Yes, but it never gets me any where with you. I had a hopeless passion for you, for years. It began when you breezed through mathematics, leaving me to make up grades during summer vacation. It burned fiercely when you played dazzling tennis, while I played like a dud. And it reached its zenith when you failed to step on my toes at dances the first year I came home from college, as all the other girls I picked did!" "You were a poor picker," Nancy said. "You were always hauling girls around who generally decorated the walls. I suspected you had assumed the role of good Samaritan and were going around binding up the bruised hearts of a popular little girl." "You never gave me a chance to bind up your heart." Ronnie had come close to Nancy and was staring down into her eyes. His tone was no longer bantering. "Not that you weren't popular, or wouldn't have been if you had cared about it. But you didn't like boys and parties." Nancy said, "Boys can be silly. I was never surer of it than I am at this minute." SHE went inside then. "That's an example of what I always got from Nancy," Ronnie said with a laugh. He joined Dana who was sitting in the swing, her gaze toward the street. "I don't know what Scott did," Ronnie said gruffly, "but I do know he isn't worth all this. No man could be. After all, you've only known Scott a little over a year." "But I am married to him!" "And you love him?" After a moment, Dana nodded. "Then why don't you go back and try again?" "I couldn't," Dana shook her head sorrowfully. "And he doesn't want me to." Ronnie felt his heart leap. He took Dana's hands, folding them

Cleopatra's Nose . . . and yours!

If Cleopatra's nose had been a little longer, we are told, the history of the world would probably have been very different . . . such is the power of a lady's face!

In those days, beauty aids were matters of trial and error. Since then science has taught us many things about hair, eyes, teeth, nails, complexion . . . figure. Almost all the things that really count in a woman's appearance she can control, herself. And a self-made beauty, to our way of thinking, has as much to her credit as a self-made industrial leader.

Examine your own complexion today. Could it be better? Is your hair as soft and lustrous, your teeth as white, your eyes as shining as they might be? Have you made the most of every possibility? If the answer must be "not quite," do take the matter in hand . . . this very day.

For every woman deserves to be as lovely as she can. And a hundred advertisements are waiting to show you how! So—read the advertisements in this newspaper—they contain information you should have.

T. A. (Al) Tune, who is opening his new filling station on the new Strawn highway, just north of the Main street crossing, is to hold open house tonight and invites his many friends and former customers to pay him a visit there.

Tune has been in Ranger since 1919 and has sold Texas Company products the entire time he has been here. He owns his own home in Ranger, owns the filling station he is now opening, owns the ground on which it is located, as well as the pumps and equipment in the station. He said today that it was his belief in the future of Ranger that had prompted him to make the investment in the new station.

Tune, in addition to being one of the best known filling station owners in Ranger, is a past post commander of the Carl Barnes Post of the American Legion and an active worker in the organization, is a member of the Elks Club and has held several offices in that organization.

He and his staff will hold an open house tonight until midnight, to see the new year in, and he has sent out cordial invitations to everyone to pay him a visit at his new station.

Proration Angle Is Presenting Problem

By United Press
AUSTIN, Tex.—An interesting angle of oil regulation was been raised by Charles Francis, Houston attorney. The state has a marginal well law. It puts a minimum restriction of the railroad commission in fixing allowable production from an oil well. In East Texas this minimum is 20 barrels. There are now about 19,000 wells in the East Texas oil field. Total production allowed for it is 428,000 barrels a day.

Francis recently asked the commission what is going to happen when the number of wells, multiplied by 20 barrels, exceeds what the commission believes should be the allowable field production.

The Italian plan of campaign may prove an insidious one. If so, after building those roads, they'll sell Ethiopians motor cars.

"Ohio plans campaign against Japanese beetle." China might watch the results for a possible drive against the Japanese borer.

Now we understand why those nasal radio ditties are called "cowboy" songs. They resemble the howling of a cow's little boy.
