Career Isn't Chief Aim of Life to All Men

One of the funny quirks of American life is the feeling that any man who can possibly do so ought to go ahead and make a "career" for himself. To sit around and enjoy life isn't enough; you have to get somewhere, make something of yourself, be a big shot, if it's in you to do it.

So a great many men give up their chance for homely, stay-at-home happiness and work themselves to a premature death chasing the mechanical rabbit around the arena. But now and then you find a man who is wiser than that.

Ernie Pyle, roving reporter, stumbled on one of these wise ones on an Arizona farm the other day. On that farm he found a healthy-looking, middle-aged man busy with farm chores, putting in his spare time painting pictures and getting a word of fun out of life. The man was Brig.-Gen. Belham D. Glassford.

Perhaps you remember the famous Bonus Army mess of 1932? General Glassford was chief of the Washington police at that time, and he was about the only man in the whole mixup who came out of it with an improved reputation.

The publicity he got out of that event could have been the making of him, if he had cared to use it that way. The country had discovered his existence overnight; had discovered, too, that he was a broad-gauge man, with plenty of ability, a world of human sympathy, and a level head on his shoulders.

By all tradition General Glassford should have used that as a springboard to dive head-first into a Career, spelled with a capital C. He could have done it very easy.

By now he would be a sure-enough big shot, complete with fancy salary, ornate office, good-looking stenographer, and all the other appurtenances.

But General Glassford didn't quite see it that way. Instead, he went to the southwest and quietly dropped out of sight. And now a reporter finds him running a 60-acre farm, dabbling in paints, doing a bit of writing when the spirit moves him—and, all in all, having about four times as much fun as any energetic big shot ever dreams of having.

To be sure, he is no hermit. He has done a bit of lecturing, helped the city of Phoenix reorganize its police department, and served briefly as one of Madame Perkins' labor mediators. In a half-hearted sort of way, he ran unsuccessfully for Congress last fall.

But the point is that those things are side issue. The general had devoted himself mainly to living, rather than to making a living. There is a world of difference.

Ambition is a fine thing. But it's nice, once in a while, to find a man who can see beyond it to the homely and uneventful happiness of useful obscurity.

"Germans must choose between food and munitions," Dart wonders if they can't compromise on say, grapeshot.

Now we may get a car with its engine at the rear, even though many drivers already are troubled with knocks from the back seat.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

WASHINGTON — The steam-rolling to which Senator Harry Flood Byrd was subjected in the Senate the other day might not have been so utterly complete if so many senators had not suspected that Harry was seeking to build himself up as a 1940 presidential candidate and at the same time fighting out an old grudge with Roosevelt.

The Senate voted, 73 to 1, for the administration's bill to extend life of the RFC for 2 1/2 years. Senator Byrd being the lone member to vote nay. Byrd's amendment to extend RFC's life only a year had been beaten, 53 to 22.

On the surface, the conflict between Byrd and the president may look like an honest difference of opinion.

The senator thinks hundreds of millions of dollars can be saved through a reorganization program eliminating duplications and overlapping.

The chief executive believes that only minor savings can be made through reorganization, insisting that his program of reorganization for efficiency purposes be kept separate from any program of economy which will eliminate governmental functions.

INSIDERS who know the background of the Byrd-Roosevelt relationship realize that there is far more to it than that. And even more to it than the mere clash between the conservatism of Byrd and the liberalism of Roosevelt.

According to Jan Farley's "For Roosevelt Before Chicago" boys, Byrd started out with them at the outset of the 1932 pre-convention campaign, then was persuaded by "Wall Street Democrats" to become a candidate for the nomination himself.

At any rate, he controlled the Democratic machine in Virginia, chose delegates for himself, and was prominent among the favorite sons who held out with Al Smith, John Rankin, Joseph Stinson, and other conservatives in the "stop-Roosevelt" effort.

It was generally understood that the Virginian was out for the vice presidency if he couldn't capture the major prize.

After the election, Byrd was an unannounced candidate for secretary of agriculture or for a sort of an "assistant president" job which would give him charge of White House political relations.

But Byrd's presidential ambitions, his conservatism, and the question whether he could be depended on for full loyalty to his chief were more than enough to cause Roosevelt to turn him down for any appointive job.

BYRD then had himself appointed and subsequently elected to the U. S. Senate when Claude Swanson resigned to become secretary of the navy in 1932. He became perhaps the most persistent critic of the administration in conservative Democratic ranks, attacking one administration measure or policy after another.

Various optimists proposed him as a presidential candidate on a conservative Democratic ticket.

As 1936 approached, it began to be common talk among many Virginia politicians that Senator Byrd, still in control of the state machine, was figuring on having the Virginia delegation to the convention vote for his own nomination. That's the background as told by New Dealers, in explanation of why the president, with his own reorganization program, doesn't intend to be "pushed around" by Harry Byrd.

When the crowd won't go home, better ask them to dinner. But don't try to arrange a full-size meal, including courses and fixings. Give them simple but delicious food, lots of it, and enjoy yourself along with your lingering guests.

Here's one hurry-up menu which fills the bill of feeding friends who enjoyed your afternoon party so much they just can't seem to make up their minds to go home. Tomato bouillon, waffles with ham and eggs, vegetable lettuce cups, gooseberry tarts.

Rapid Tomato Bouillon

(6 cups)

Three cups tomato juice, 3 cups boiling water, 1 teaspoon minced onion, 1 teaspoon olive oil, 1 teaspoon minced parsley, 1-4 teaspoon lemon juice, 1-4 teaspoon sugar, salt, pepper, celery salt, 2 bouillon cubes.

Heat tomato juice, onion, parsley and 2 cups water. Bring to boiling point, then reduce heat. Add olive oil, sugar and seasoning, remembering that the bouillon cubes will be salty and therefore you must go easy on the salt. Dissolve the 2 bouillon cubes in 1 cup boiling water, then add to tomato mixture over very low fire. Add lemon juice. Heat thoroughly but do not boil. Serve in cups with salted or cheese crackers.

Waffles With Ham and Eggs

(6 servings)

One small can deviled ham, 9 eggs, waffle batter, reduce heat. Make this at table, using your electric waffle iron and electric chaffing dish. Soften the deviled ham with a little cream to

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Prune and orange juice, rice pancakes, soft maple sugar, coffee, milk.

LUNCHEON: Vegetable chowder, pilot biscuit, canned cherries, cookies, tea, milk.

DINNER: Chopped green salad, liver and bacon, soufflé potatoes, green peas, molded cranberry jelly, old-fashioned spice cake, coffee, milk.

Gooseberry Tarts

Use a prepared quick-pastry for these. There are several reliable brands on the market. Keep a package on hand for such hurry-up meals. Mix with liquid according to directions on the package, roll and bake for about 12 minutes in muffin tins. They will bake and cool while the rest of the meal is in progress. At the last moment, fill 3-4 full with gooseberry jam and dot with whipped cream. After that the coffee, and everyone will be astounded at your amazing speed, determined to linger after the next party, hoping to be asked to stay on to a hurry-up dinner again. If they do, then try this menu: Canned bouillon with sherry, pancakes with creamed chicken, stuffed tomato salad, canned peaches and vanilla waffles and coffee.

Services Are Held For M. T. Stone

Funeral services for M. T. Stone, 72, who died at his home near Ranger, Sunday, were conducted Monday afternoon from the Central Baptist Church of Ranger, with Rev. H. H. Stephens, pastor of the church, in charge. Interment was in the Eastland Cemetery following the services in Ranger.

The decedent was born Oct. 3, 1865, and had been a resident of Eastland county for a number of years. Survivors include his widow, Mrs. Emma Falls Stone, two sons, Leroy of Eastland and Riley of Seattle, Washington, two daughters, Mrs. A. H. Bales, of Tyler, Texas, Mrs. F. E. Springer of El Paso, Texas and seven grandchildren.

All present at funeral except Riley Stone of Washington. Short services were held at the home because of the illness of Mrs. Stone.

GIVEN time, Rogers Hornsby will wind up with a first rate club in St. Louis without spending a quarter. Only Branch Rickey of the neighboring Cardinals is the equal of Hornsby in appraising baseball talent. It is significant that Rickey taught Hornsby.

In the winter's biggest deal, the Browns gave Cleveland Lyn Lary, Julius Solters, and Ivy Paul Andrews for Bill Knickerbocker, Vosmik, and Oral Hildebrand.

Personally, I would not have traded Knickerbocker for the other five. If the Detroit Tigers and New York Yankees had suspected that Cyril C. Slapnicka had the slightest intention of disposing of Knickerbocker, the old scout now in charge of these rash moves of the part of the Indians easily could have engineered a much more favorable swap. As a matter of fact, a couple or three legs might have been broken in the rush.

The Yankees, Red Sox, Senators, and Browns gave up Lary, The Red Sox and Browns took a good look at Solters and had enough. The Yankees, Red Sox, and Browns had their fill of Andrews.

CLEVELAND yields its finest trading material for three athletes who repeatedly have been tried and found wanting and for whom the Tribe won't be offered a broken bat. And Alva Bradley's outfit still finds itself without the party it needs most—a catcher.

Lary hasn't a stroke, and won't be a good hitter if he remains active for another 10 years. In eight seasons in the American League, Lary's batting average is .272. In half that time, Knickerbocker's mark is .293. Lary is an exceptional base-runner, but he can't steal first base. Outside of speed and knack on the base, the shortstop leaving Cuyahoga county is Lary's equal in every department, and he is six years younger than his fellow Californian and bigger and stronger.

There is ample evidence that Cleveland quit on Vosmik too quickly. Vosmik, a right-handed hitting outfielder of the picture type experienced only one poor season—1936, when he hit .287. In successive campaigns—1933-4-5, he batted .363, .341, and .348. He missed the American League batting championship by a single point in 1935, when he made the most hits—216. Solters hasn't approached any of those marks in three years of major league effort.

WINNING clubs and local talent draw baseball crowds. Vosmik is a product of Cleveland sandlots, and to date it hasn't been necessary to apologize for him.

For Vosmik, the Browns can get practically anybody they want from the Red Sox and other outfits, so don't be surprised. And the Indians do not benefit by the transaction, chalk up another man against Slapnicka.

As for the pitchers, Hildebrand from the outset appeared to have vastly more latent ability and form than Andrews. The one-time Butler basketball player has been sorely handicapped by fault catching. His throwing to Hemsley may be another story. He may do another Monte Pearson.

Catching—that's the important thing.

It seems that what the Cleveland club needs most is an official who can get important things through his head.

Authentic Dope On Spring's Foot Wear
Colors, shoe materials, pattern designs, and general style tips, were interestingly given at the annual shoe convention held at Dallas this week, and attended by shoemen of Ranger.

which is predicted to exert considerable influence on dress styles and colors during the coming season.
Ties for spring will be built up along D'Orsay lines. Novel cut-outs and light trims, however, will make the new ties noteworthy for their distinctness.

Black leads the list for spring, with navy blue, Paris grey, and Spanish tan closely following. The materials in gabardine are fetching, and here's hoping all the women like gabardine—it's all the rage. Shoes for spring will continue the present Juliet and D'Orsay silhouettes. The covered in-sole with a low cut effect at the side with the airy in treatment is the basic feature. Pumps dressed with large "flare" tongues will carry out the "Coronation theme"

A very small change will be made and the friends of the children of the school are invited to share in this undertaking.
Ranger friends are cordially invited to attend this musical, one of the looked forward to events of the current season.

Club Heads Urge Show Attendance

Ranger Times, Ranger, Texas. Gentlemen:

I understand Mr. B. E. Garner, manager of our local showhouse, has volunteered the proceeds of a special show for the flood relief fund of $10,000.00 being asked for by the American Red Cross Society; provided all community organizations, would co-operate in an advance sale of tickets at $1.

In giving our donation to the Red Cross flood sufferers we felt it our duty as a patriotic organization and citizens of these United States to make another sacrifice.
Three decades and eight years ago when the call was made for volunteers at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, we offered our lives. Today, when a greater disaster than war is ravaging the villages of the Ohio and Mississippi and causing countless thousands to be homeless and hungry, members of Sam McKinney Camp No. 59, United Spanish War Veterans, again volunteered, not our lives, but our financial aid to suffering humanity.
