BOYS TAKE HEIFERS TO FAT STOCK SHOW

Eight of the best registered Jersey heifers ever raised by Eastland county 4-H club boys were taken to the Southwestern Exposition and Fat Stock show Friday. All of these heifers were on exhibit at the Ranger 4-H live-stock show on Friday, up to 4 p. m. The largest exhibitor among the 4-H club boys is Jack Walker of Alameda, who is exhibiting five head of animals. Buster Wheat of Morton Valley and James Dean of Alameda took heifers to show at Fort Worth. These boys expect to show against some stiff competition among other 4-H dairy club boys of the state, as well as to show against some of the outstanding Jersey breeders of the United States at the Fort Worth Fat Stock show.

CLUB BOYS AND GIRLS WILL VISIT AT FORT WORTH FAT STOCK SHOW

Final plans have been completed by Assistant Agents Hugh Barnhart and Cornelia Stewart for one hundred and fifty 4-H club boys and girls to visit the Fort Worth Fat Stock show and other places of interest at the show.

HER NAME IN LIGHTS

BEHOLD HERE TODAY DAPHNE BRETT, charming advertising executive, is in town. LARRY SMITH, advertising executive, has one younger sister, JENNIFER. Her cousin Daphne's aim is to guide her in her career. She dates TUCKER AINSWORTH, a playboy, in defiance of her mother's wishes. This is a development between the two.

Smile Larry proposes marriage to Daphne, but she tells him she must wait. Her reason is she feels her first duty is to get her business career started. Larry, without a moment's delay, then she loses her job. And the night she plans to elope with her mother's playboy, Daphne, learning of this, stops the marriage. She says she is sorry you go with my love."

GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XVII

Pattern calls for a blue and white. I think I'd like it. Daphne held up an elegant bathing suit she was wearing.

"Would you mind if I bought one?"

Larry didn't look up from his work. "Does it make any sense to you?"

Daphne thought it would since she had bought one for her birthday and June 20 is her birthday.

Larry surprised you didn't make a mistake, her sister retorted. The same old tone that she had used these last three years.

Larry put her knitting away. She is something else, better than she is professed."

Larry smiled sweetly. "Why do you forget it, Daphne? Why do you leave me alone? You've got your own money now. I've settled in modeling at Tay-Jarrett-Jarrett is a smart street shop—I go to bed and watch my diet. I don't want to interfere in your life. Will you be home?"

Daphne answered, "It can't be. Darling, we can't be together. For three months I've treated me as though you didn't exist. Surely you are intelligent enough to know that I would never hurt you. I'm taking a ridiculous job. After all, think what a life it would have been for me if I had married you. You couldn't have been very much in love with me to be over it, so soon."

LARRY threw down her book and walked the length of the room two or three times. "Whether I happen to be in love or not in love with Tuck is no concern of yours. At least, he hasn't troubled you."

Or you either, Daphne might have said, since Tuck had taken himself off to California for "a short visit" three months ago and had not returned.

"Aren't you seeing a lot of Roy Trowbridge? I think he's very attractive."

"I'm not boy crazy," Jennifer said with dignity. "But you wouldn't understand that."

Patiently, Daphne tried another tack. "What would you like to do during your two weeks off next month?"

Jennifer said, "Why I'd like to run over to Paris. What would you suggest?"

Unruffled, Daphne answered, "I was going to suggest that you accept Miriam Gatty's invitation to join her family on the Cape."

Miriam had been a classmate at Miss Maidstone's.

"Certainly, I'll accept. And wear what? I haven't had a decent rag in a year and I'd need loads of sports clothes."

Daphne might have said that Jennifer had spent every cent of her generous salary on clothes. Instead she said, "I've a little money in the bank I could let you have. You ought to be able to do very well on $200. Summer sports clothes don't cost very much. Suppose I keep the bathing suit and give you the trip?"

BEFORE Jennifer had a chance to answer, their doorbell sounded.

"That's Larry and he's early tonight and we want to get there early." Daphne got up to answer the bell.

Jennifer sighed and walked toward the bedroom. "Please don't go, Jennifer. It isn't necessary for you to run away when Larry comes."

"Who's running away?" Larry demanded.

"I was," Jennifer said. "Hello, Larry."

"Darling, will you find yourself a cigarette and amuse Jennifer for a few minutes? I've got to be domestic. Our maid didn't come today and the laundry is spread out all over my bed. I've got to put it away."

Larry gave a playful tug to Jennifer's golden hair. "Be a good little sister and give your big sister a break. Jennifer will do it, won't you?"

Jennifer's eyes called on Heaven to witness her plight. "Really," she said and picked up her book. "Would you like me to get out a broom too?"

Larry didn't answer her. He read his newspaper until Daphne, fresh and smart in a sheer tailored suit and small sailor, came into the room.

"Going out, Jennifer?"

"I may." Still she didn't look up.

"I've misplaced my door key. Do you think you'll be here when I get back?"

"I haven't any idea."

Daphne turned away ashamed of her sister's rudeness, conscious of her own humiliation.

LATER, when it was intermission and she and Larry sat on the stone steps high in the Stadium, Larry pulled on his pipe and was silent.

But she was glad of the silence. Glad she wouldn't have to try to be gay. That would have been hard. She'd only been able to save $200 and now she was going to give it to Jennifer for a holiday. She had that to think about. She would never have enough money for the nest egg she needed before she could marry Larry!

But if the holiday would help, would lift that unhappy veil that was between her and Jennifer, she offered it willingly.

Jennifer wired Daphne to meet her train at the end of the holiday. That small gesture was enough to send Daphne's hopes up.

Before she went to the train she ordered a supper of Jennifer's favorite foods.

The minute she saw Jennifer's face—so lovely, so sweet, so radiant—among the passengers alighting from the train, she knew that Jennifer's black mood was dispelled.

"I can't wait to tell you the news," Jennifer said. "You won't like it but you'll have to. Who do you think I met at Dennis? Gordon Herzberg, the great theatrical producer, and he's offered me a small part in a new production." She paused and again that hard expression appeared at the corners of her mouth. "What are you going to do about it?"

"Do about it?" Daphne said, hugging her. "Darling, I'm going to coach you as soon as you get your lines. I'm thrilled to death. Have you forgotten that the theater was my first love?"

John's Picture of the Crucifixion

Text: John 19:4-9, 14-18, 25-30

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D. Editor of Advance

THE crucifixion of Jesus is not unique in history, in the fact or manner of His death. Other men have been put to death, and multitudes have experienced the cruel death of the cross. Two men, in fact, were crucified with Jesus, one on His right hand, and one on the left.

Nor does the uniqueness of the crucifixion of Jesus lie entirely in His innocence. Other men, innocent of charges against them, have been executed.

What does make the crucifixion of Jesus unique and significant as the most tragic and challenging event of all history is the purpose of His death, the yielding of Himself to die in fulfillment of a mission of love and redemption.

It was the supreme goodness of Jesus, revealing in His earthly life the divinity of a God of love, and revealing in His death the fullness of the divine sacrifice that men might know the richness of grace, and be drawn toward God's redeeming love.

COULD Jesus have avoided the cross? We cannot tell. There seemed a point in His life where the temptation to seek avoiding it was almost overwhelming. At the beginning of His ministry, there were temptations to turn from His divine mission to some scheme of earthly conquest or vain glory. The devil had lured Him with a vision of all the kingdoms of the world and the power that He might exercise over them.

At a later stage, there must have been an occasional temptation to lead a popular movement of revolt, such as many Jews wanted. And then, during the hour in the garden of Gethsemane, there came the earnest agonizing prayer that, if it were possible, the cup might pass. It was too late. The hour of destiny had come, but it did not find an unwilling victim. Deeply in that spiritual conflict Jesus had triumphed.

In His anguish, He had said, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." The words that some had mockingly said of Him as He hung on the cross, "He saved others, Himself He cannot save," were literally true. It was the last supreme sacrifice of love and devotion to the truth.

FOR us the spiritual reality of the crucifixion depends to some extent upon the vividness with which we are able to reproduce the scene. In our contemplation of the suffering victims on the crosses, the Master and the two thieves, we perhaps are apt to forget that, standing by the cross among other women, was His mother.

Can we think of what that means? Mary, in the fullness and richness of her love, had followed her son even to the last agony. What deep and striking troubles she had experienced since the day when wise men had come honoring her newborn babe, and she had pondered all these things, and kept them in her heart!

But motherly devotion had stood the test of the years, and there could hardly have been an anguish of the cross deeper than the anguish of the mother who stood by her suffering son.

There is tenderness and beauty in the thought of Jesus for His mother as He turned to John and said, "Woman, behold thy son."

The most human picture of the crucifixion is that in John's Gospel, and the significance of the divine event, the tragedy of glory, is made all the more real agonizing prayer that, if it were possible, the cup might pass.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The administration's wage and hour program will be given to Congress in about a month. A large pile of recommendations for "new NRA" legislation has accumulated at the White House and Roosevelt has asked a special group of advisers to study them and help formulate a program.

Although details remain to be worked out, it is reasonably safe to predict the main administration bill will cover wages and hours exclusively, and will contain no provisions as to trade practices or any other phase of business regulation.

A federal board is planned to handle the establishment of maximum hours and minimum wages in American industries.

Present indications are that provisions in the bill will give that task to the National Labor Relations Board.

AMONG plans being studied by the president's advisers are Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney's federal corporation licensing bill, a program worked out by Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, and a proposal for a remodeled NRA, backed by Donald Richberg and Assistant Secretary Ernest G. Draper.

Chief of the advising group is John G. Winant, former Republican governor of New Hampshire, former assistant director of the International Labor Office, and, until recently, chairman of the Social Security Board. Roosevelt chose Winant because he wanted a nonpartisan of distinction who wasn't connected with any of the various factions lined up behind various plans.

The other members are Assistant Atty.-Gen. Robert H. Jackson in charge of anti-trust litigation; General Counsel Ben Cohen of the National Power Policy Commission, and author of the New York minimum wage law; and Thomas G. Corcoran of RFC. Roosevelt's handy man and ace trouble-shooter.

The four will make a secret report to the president, upon which he is expected to base a message to Congress and some concrete proposals.

THE story of Winant's resignation from the Social Security chairmanship is almost a fairy story. He insisted on quitting because his conscience bothered him, although originally he had left a $25,000 job with the I. L. O. at Geneva to come here.

Winant privately insisted he didn't belong in the chairmanship—because he was a Republican. He had repudiated his party during the campaign and gone on the stump for the Social Security Act after Governor Landon attacked it. But he kept insisting to Roosevelt: "I won't pretend to be a Democrat when I'm not."

No such sensitive conscience as Winant's has been seen here since the days of Grover Cleveland.

THE General Motors Company sent one of its highest officials to make a personal apology to Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady, following revelation by the LaFollette committee that McGrady had been spied upon by Pinkerton operatives hired by the corporation. It happened while he was trying to mediate a strike at Toledo.

The G. M. official told McGrady the company hadn't known anything about that item of espionage. (Copyright, 1937, NEA Service, Inc.)

Q. How did the Llano Estacado dead Plains, desire the name? Despite the fact that several names have been accepted by different historians, it is altogether probable that the region was so named because of the "palisade, trade," or "estacado" effect of equipment at the edge of plain.

Goat Is Nominated Animal of the Hour

By United Press

COMMERCE, Texas—Farmer A. A. West nominates for "animal of the hour" his faithful goat.

The barn of Farmer West, who lives west of Commerce, near Ladonia, burned recently. Standing at the door of the burning barn, the goat butted repeatedly two terrified bulles which attempted to get back into the structure and kept them from entering the barn.

Chief of the advising group is John G. Winant, former Republican governor of New Hampshire, former assistant director of the International Labor Office, and, until recently, chairman of the Social Security Board. Roosevelt chose Winant because he wanted a nonpartisan of distinction who wasn't connected with any of the various factions lined up behind various plans.

America Must Surpass Prosperity of 1929

Bearing in mind that everybody has his own personal set of figures on unemployment, it is nevertheless worth while to have a look at the statistics just made public by the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

According to these tables, in December the number of unemployed in the United States fell below 10,000,000 for the first time since the recovery movement started.

In March, 1933, there were in the United States 16,649,000 people who wanted work and couldn't get it. At the end of December, last year, this number had shrunk to 9,412,000—a drop of more than 7,000,000 from the peak, and a drop of nearly 2,000,000 since December, 1935.

But these figures begin to get really instructive when you turn them around and study, not the number of people who are without jobs, but the number of people who are actually at work.

Thus we find that, in March, 1933, there were 32,265,700 people gainfully employed in this country. By December, 1936, that number had risen to 41,817,000.

So, doing a little rapid arithmetic, it develops that there were 8,552,000 more people at work at the end of 1936 than at the low point of the depression in 1933; and yet the number of unemployed declined by only 7,237,000 in that same time.

The answer, of course, is that the population has not been static. The number of workers in this country is not constant; it is steadily increasing. To "go back to 1929," as we all have been hoping we would do, would not solve our unemployment problem. To attain the 1929 level of prosperity, we have got to be more prosperous than we were in 1929.

All of which is something like the Alice in Wonderland situation in which it was necessary to run at top speed to keep from going backward.

Carry the figures a little farther and this paradox becomes clearer.

In September, 1929, America contained slightly fewer than 45,500,000 employed people. Today it has slightly fewer than 42,000,000—within 3,500,000 of the all-time high mark.

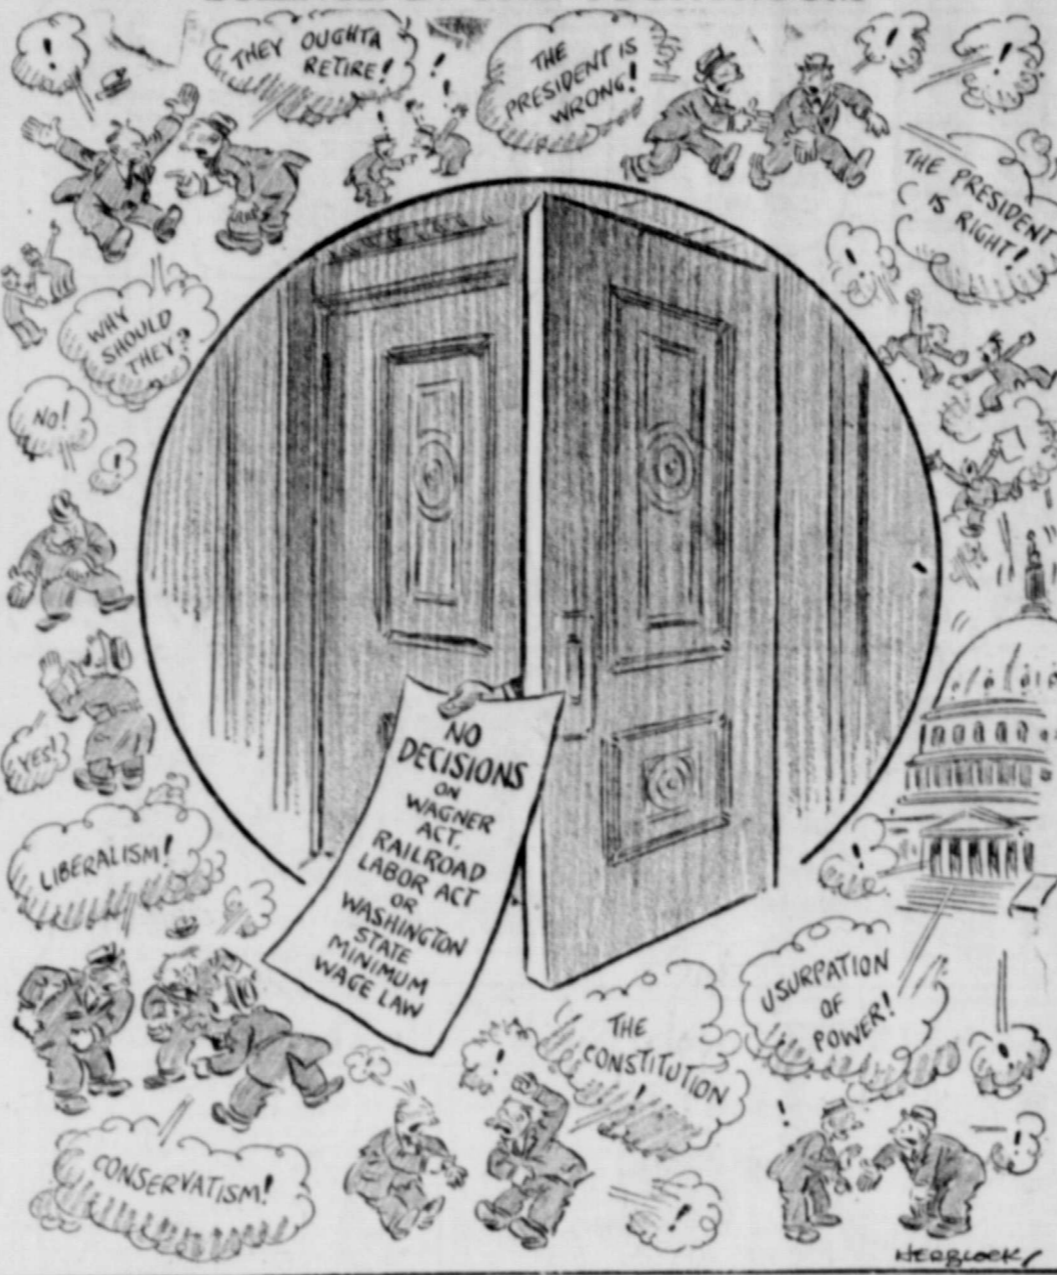

But even in 1929 there were 2,900,000 people without jobs; and since 1929 the increase in population has added 2,781,000 people to the supply of workers. That is why we still have such a pressing unemployment and relief problem, even though we are within shouting distance of the most prosperous level in our history.

These figures are worth going into at this length because they show clearly how vital it is that we surpass the best we have ever done before.

Improvement must be continuous. We dare not be satisfied with what satisfied us a few years ago. The recovery movement must keep on pushing down on the accelerator.

The government is in business, its opponents maintain. The president's supreme court move, they indicate, would be a packing business.

SCIENCE IN THE COURTROOM

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SERVICES

Sunday school, 9:45 a. m. Morning service, 11 a. m. Wednesday, testimonial service 8 p. m.

Public cordially invited. "Substance" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist on Sunday, March 14.

The Golden Text is: "If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it" (Romans 8:25).

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Corinthians 2:9, 10.)

The Lesson-Sermon includes also the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Paul and John had a clear apprehension that, as mortal man achieves no worldly honors except by sacrifice, so he must gain heavenly riches by forsaking all worldliness" (page 459).

Farmers Cited As First Link In a Curb On Floods

BY FRED O. BAILEY United Press Staff Correspondent WASHINGTON.

Expansion of contour tillage and terracing is urged by H. H. Bennett, chief of the Soil Conservation Service, as a "primary method" of flood control.

Experience and scientific experiments have proved that farming practices that conserve soil and water have a directly beneficial bearing on the control of floods and alleviation of drought conditions, Mr. Bennett said.

The effectiveness of soil and water conservation at flood sources is substantiated by several factors. He listed these two as important:

1. Flood loads are due in large part to rapid surface run-off or rainfall or melting snow and quick concentration of this water in stream channels.

2. The upland soils of a watershed constitute a storage reservoir capable of absorbing or retaining enough water to prevent, or at least greatly reduce, critical flood crests in the lower drainageways.

Proved and adaptable procedures to hold water in the soil are now available, he said. "There is a widespread and growing conviction," Bennett said, "that the solution of the nation's flood problem lies in a co-ordinated watershed program of prevention and control in which the upstream farmer will reinforce with soil and water-saving practices the downstream fortifications of the engineer at critical areas of great danger."

The former would prevent floods at far as possible and the latter would control critical flood crests when they do arise, he said.

Experiments in the arid Middle West show that the average moisture content of the soil can be increased 25 per cent by contour tillage and level terracing, Bennett said.

More than 20,000 farmers are co-operating in field activities of the soil conservation service, Bennett said. The number of demonstration projects increased during 1936 from 47 to 143 and the area of privately-owned land under cooperative agreement increased from approximately 4,000,000 acres to 7,000,000 acres, he said.

The demonstration program Mr. and Mrs. Lee Swanner Tuesday night.

 A delightful meeting of the Schuman Music club was held at the home of Dorothy Jean Bruce, Caddo highway, Friday afternoon, and Evelyn Childs, was welcomed into the club as a new member. An extensive study on the life of composers has held the interest of this group of young girls under the instruction of their piano teacher, Mrs. Weldon Webb.

Appreciation Expressed To Rangerites for Hospitality:
 The Oil Belt Education association two day convention staged in Ranger Friday and Saturday, proving to be one of the largest attended as well as successful of any to have been held since the organization brought to town a host of visitors. The placement committee asked several days prior to the convention that Ranger people open their homes for the occasion and the response was certainly evident of the true hospitality. More than one hundred letters and calls were received by the committee. When the visitors arrived the hotels of Ranger were filled first and will not meet the demand if you were able.
