Speaking of Illusions About the Next War

If the Japanese invasion of China and the Spanish civil war have left you any illusions about humanitarian rules in war, let recent, casually spoken remarks from Russia blow those illusions sky-high.

Said Commissar of War Klementi E. Voroshilov, ex- ing these splendid musicians. plaining that the Red army was ready to use poison gas: "Because Fascist countries violated the 1925 convention on the use of gas in warfare, we were forced to train "If the enemy spreads gas behind our frontiers, we gentlemen." The commissar didn't raise his voice. He might have been talking about pouring paris green on potato bugs.

And that is the way war will be. Army flyers with fine accuracy will bomb munition stations and shipyards. Recruited army flyers with less accuracy will bomb munition stations and shipyards-but will hit apartments and hospitals and schools three blocks away, for three blocks lowship With Christ," and the is a short distance when you're bombing from 10,000 feet.

There will be cries of "atrocity and" then there will be retaliation. And then there will be gas by the bucketful.

War isn't a simple contest between the strength of men and armies any more; it's a complex, jumbled puzzle where propaganda is as important as bullets and the front hear the word of God, and do it." boys will sing, the orchestra will Uttz, supt. is anywhere that life exists.

Have no doubt that gas will be used in the next widespread war, for gas is a weapon, one of the deadliest, and gas is demoralizing, and that is reason enough.

Gas will be used with cause, for cause can be found It will be as simple as false propaganda, as simple as touching a lever in an airplane 10,000 feet up, as simple as the wind which carries rolling clouds of death through city streets and country lanes. Gas will be used.
