

47 Texas Counties Have Road Projects Up For Contracts

By United Press
AUSTIN. — Forty-seven Texas counties have road work projects listed for early letting by the state highway department. Subject to approval by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads, the bids will be taken Mar. 22.

Numerous other counties seek road work. Some are wondering why their projects are not on the list. Some of them might find the answer if they looked into automobile registrations. Counties in which there have been flagrant abuses of registration are said to be missing from the work lists. Department officials admit no such use of pressure, but the lists speak for themselves.

After all, the highway department can scarcely be expected to get over-enthusiastic about work in counties that are depriving the department of operating funds.

way department has complained that it has failed to get its legal share of automobile registration fees. Officials say registrations are so manipulated that both cars and trucks are not registered in the counties where they belong but are shifted to counties which can retain all or part of the fee. Such practice is possible because the registration law calls for a variable distribution of the registration fees. Counties keep all up to a specified total. Above that they share with the state highway department. Counties that have not reached the limit, in some instances, have solicited registrations and have permitted payment in county warrants. Some of those warrants are purchasable at far below par, so the inducement is considerable to fleet owners.

Recent use of circus parades as an advertising medium shows that some companies, like the steam calliope, use high pressure.

Two NYA Projects Started in Texas

AUSTIN. — Two resident work and training projects operated by the National Youth Administration in Texas began last week, bringing the number of NYA resident projects in the state to five, J. C. Kellam, state youth director, announced.

On Mar. 7, a project for 50 West Texas farm boys started at Texas Technological College at Lubbock. Another project for 12 farm boys from Caldwell, Gonzales and Guadalupe counties began on the same day at the Luling foundation farm at Luling. The boys on these projects will work part-time making improvements on public property, and during their spare time will receive instruction in farm practices suited to the areas in which they reside. Their earnings will enable them to pay for their room and board at each institution, and have about $7 a month for their own use.

Another resident training project for 50 interested in shop work has entered its second month at Southwest Texas State Teachers College at San Marcos. Two other resident projects, one for 50 negro girls, another for 50 negro boys, are operated at Prairie View State Teachers College.

During the week ending Mar. 12, 7,102 youths in need of assistance were employed on the NYA work program, Mr. Kellam said. These youths work about one-third time and earn about $12 a month. During spare time they are encouraged to take advantage of the training opportunities made available to them, in order to prepare for private employment.

St. Nick Comes Late to Bayous

Christmas didn't reach Louisiana's isolated Bayou du Large settlement until spring, but the eager, happy children shown crowded about the tree, above, in Houma, seemed to be enjoying the presents which Bishop James Craig Morris is handing out just as much as if Yuletide had come Dec. 25. In fact Christmas comes in spring every year in Bayou du Large since menfolk of this English-Scotch community are out on their fur trappings in December when the rest of the world is celebrating.

12-Year Schools to Be Talked at Dallas

DALLAS.—Advisability of adopting the 12-grade system of education in Texas will be discussed at a statewide conference of school administrators scheduled to be held here Mar. 24-26, Deputy State Superintendent of Schools John W. Gunstream announced.

State Superintendent of Schools L. A. Woods will preside at the conference of more than 1,500 Texas school representatives.

A group at the conference will also consider plans for promoting adult civic education through public forums.

Speakers will include Dr. A. E. Casgrain of the United States Department of Education; C. L. Kuykendall, chairman of the state board of examiners, and Harmon Lowman, superintendent of public schools at Goose Creek, Texas.

FLYING BLIND

In thick weather, it is often necessary for airplanes to "fly blind" . . . to depend on instruments rather than vision and charted landmarks. Almost uncanny in their accuracy, such instruments are nevertheless second choice in the navigation of the air.

Shoppers who trot off down-town to the stores without first consulting the advertisements of those same stores are likewise flying blind. And needlessly so. The advertisements in this paper are put here for your guidance, for your safe landing in the Ports of Value.

Study them in comfort of your home . . . map your course before you put on your hat and drop the latch-key into your handbag. Compare the products offered, their prices, their general advantages. Then set out on your shopping-trip prepared for what you will see, what you will wish to have sent home.

Let the advertisements serve as guiding beacons of buying. It's the smart thing to do.

The Legal Profession and Mass Production

There has been, in the last year, or so, an increasing movement on the part of bar associations throughout the United States to place legal service on a rapid-turnover, low cost basis for those who need it. The aim of this movement is the legal service bureau, an organization run by the bar to operate on a scale of moderate prices and reaching the legal needs of low income groups.

The legal service bureau is sharply distinguished from the legal aid societies which furnish free advice and service to those persons unable to pay even a moderate fee for legal aid.

The movement represents the first step of the legal profession toward mass production, toward standardization of prices and services. The legal service bureau becomes a shop where prices are set in scale and the process of industrialization is applied to the law for the first time.

It's a great break for the people who have long needed legal service at a moderate fee—the laborer, the salaried man and the small business man.

Under a plan recently devised and proposed for use, such a bureau would offer service in lines considerably specialized and therefore almost routine for the attorneys handling them. They include draftsmanship of various legal papers (at standard prices obtainable in advance); simple wills, leases, contracts, handling of certain types of disputes, as wage and rent controversies; garnishments, claims for alimony, separate maintenance and support, mortgage foreclosures, insurance claims, accident cases and some criminal trials.

The bureau, it was pointed out, will handle many classes of cases which are not being handled by lawyers in private practice because the money involved is too small and the legal procedure too complicated—as services required by automobile owners in connection with petty infractions of the law or damages to property.

Included in the recommendations for the bureau were notations that the organization probably would not be self-supporting the first year or two but thereafter would be entirely so, and there were provisions for branch offices. The recommendations tacitly hinted that in this legal service bureau young attorneys with crisp, new diplomas could get sorely needed apprenticeship under the supervision of experienced oldsters. It would give them a living and training at the same time.

Many established attorneys will hold, as counselors, have always held, that the relationship of attorney and client is extremely personal and confidential, and that legal industrialization will destroy in the bar that which has always been its greatest attribute.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

BY RODNEY BUTCHER

WASHINGTON.—The current breathing spell in the relations between the government and business may not last as long as was anticipated by those who know the mind of the President. If it doesn't the left-wingers in the administration ought to stand in a rising vote of thanks to Mr. Bernard M. Baruch. Mr. Roosevelt, as reported in these dispatches, had reached a point where he was taking the advice of those who said he should say nothing and do nothing to "disturb business." He appears to have felt that it was up to business to lay off lambasting the administration, too. At any rate, Baruch's testimony before the Senate Unemployment Committee made the President hopping mad. "Only the headlines," said F. D. R. casually when asked if he had read Baruch's testimony. But the headlines had told him that Baruch had vigorously slammed New Deal policies and blamed them for the current depression. It appeared that Baruch, although somewhat vague as to economic remedies, had come about as near calling the present economic unpleasantness a "Roosevelt recession" as anyone could without using the exact words. Roosevelt hates the phrase and the implication. New Dealers quickly insisted to him that the gist of the benign, patriarchal Baruch's testimony was that Baruch didn't want to pay such high taxes. A change in the President's attitude is noticeable and left-wing advisers think a more aggressive White House policy is likely. Already there are signs that Roosevelt is studying the possibilities of replacing anti-New Deal Democrats with New Dealers in this year's primaries and elections, despite an outlook which has seemed discouraging. A new attack on the depression through a government spending program is still likely. It's good politics and, according to one large school of New Deal thought, good economics. For a chart of unemployment, some of the most outstanding government economists prefer the one worked out by the Committee on Economic Security, which made the studies preliminary to passage of the Social Security Act. They have continued to route the curve of employment from the point where the committee left off and have kept it up to date. This chart shows a high mark of 13,000,000 unemployed in 1933. Last September the number had decreased to below 8,500,000. It's too early to tell yet, but some of the best guessers agree that the chart may soon indicate nearly 13,000,000 unemployed at the first of March. Economists who follow the chart most closely doubt that the curve will go above that figure. Because agricultural employment is about to increase, they think the curve may soon show an upturn. Heavy Infestation Of Grasshoppers In County Predicted

The 1938 infestation of grasshoppers in Eastland County will be fully as bad as in 1937 or worse, R. R. Reppert, Extension Entomologist, predicted, while making a survey in Eastland County with County Agent Cook this week. Last year Eastland County farmers and ranchers used approximately half a carload of poison materials and the estimated need this year is a full carload. An inspection made in the state by Reppert last fall indicated three times the 1937 infestation could be expected in 1938. Nothing has intervened since that time to relieve the situation. There is now on hand in Eastland county enough poison materials to make a good start in a control campaign. This material consists of bran and sodium arsenate which were supplied by the U. S. Government. Those who use this material are expected to contribute an equal amount of bran. Plans are under way to organize county grasshopper control campaign at once in Texas. Farmers expecting grasshopper infestations are urged to watch carefully for small hoppers and advise the County Agent at once when they appear.

Rancher Planning A Quail Preserve

By United Press CHANNING, Texas.—Tom Belcher, rancher in the Canadian river breaks five miles northeast of here, is establishing a quail preserve, and already more than 1,000 blue quail make their homes. Protection of birds has been a hobby with Belcher for many years. The preserve is being established in the three gullies which con-ed as a factor in the general conservation of land programs of the state and federal governments. Other similar land stabilization and wildlife propagation projects are underway in this area, said W. E. Connell, manager of the Channing soil conservation service. "Ranchers are finding that gully stabilization is not sufficient," Connell said. "A spreader dam at the head of the gully to divert the water, a fence to keep out livestock, and planting of adaptable vegetation are the three main steps in such a project." Shrubs most adaptable to the gullies include hackberry, current, choke cherry, Virginia creeper and wild grape, Connell said. Belcher explained that he made his grain sorghum stacks available, as well as the wild native foods, to his quail coveys. If food is especially scarce, he establishes regular feeding grounds. As a result, many of the quail have become as tame as chickens. A SOUFFLE will lift the spirits while it settles the luncheon problem. It takes less art than courage to make, especially with simplified recipes. Don't guess. Follow your recipe.

Tomato-Cheese Souffle (Serves 4 to 6)
Two tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons flour, 3-4 cup milk, 1-2 up condensed tomato soup, 1-2 dry mustard, 4 eggs separated, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce.
Melt the butter, add the flour and cook until frothy. Then add the hot milk and cook until thoroughly thickened. Stir in the tomato soup and the grated cheese and heat until the cheese is melted. Remove from fire and add the mustard and egg yolks—adding one egg yolk at a time and beating thoroughly after the addition of each egg yolk. Add Worcestershire. Beat the egg whites until stiff, but not dry, and fold them into the mixture. Pour into a well greased casserole and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 50 to 60 minutes, or until firm in the center.

LET'S KNOW TEXAS
WILL H. MAJOS, AUSTIN, TEXAS
In this column answers will be given to inquiries as to Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its people. Address inquiries to Will H. Majos, Austin, Texas.

Q. What were among the first acts of General Sheridan in regard to Texas officials?
A. Governor Throckmorton, although tending cooperation with the military whenever it was requested, was removed from the governor's office, July 30, by General Sheridan, "as an impediment to reconstruction" and was succeeded by Elisha M. Pease. Other officials were also removed and their places filled by those known to be in sympathy with military reconstruction.

Q. Who constituted the Supreme Court when Sheridan was placed in command and who were appointed to succeed them?
A. The Supreme Court, composed of Richard Coke, George P. Moore, Stockton F. Donley, A. H. Willis, and George W. Smith, was replaced by Edmund J. Davis, C. Caldwell, Amos Morrill, A. H. Latimer and Livingston Lindsey, all known to be supporters of the plan of reconstruction.

Q. To whom were the terms "carpet baggers" and "scalawags" applied?
A. To assist in carrying out Sheridan's reconstruction plans, numerous irresponsible politicians and adventurers flocked into the State to advise the negroes as to their political and social rights and to secure positions of power and authority for themselves and the negroes in State and local affairs. So many of these carried all their belongings in carpet bag satchels that they were dubbed "carpet baggers," and the Texans affiliated with them were called "scalawags," a term of contempt.

Q. What was the "Freedman's Bureau"?
A. It was a military court, established by Congress, composed of military officials, with the laudable purpose of protecting the negroes in their newly acquired rights. The operation of the triple court system—civil, bureau and military—brought about much confusion and tended to increase the prevailing disorder and disregard of law.

Q. Where is Beaver Lake?
A. Devil's River widens into a long water hole 50 or 60 miles above where it empties into the Rio Grande, being a dry canyon above that except after heavy rains. This water hole is known as Beaver Lake.

Q. How many trees did the Forestry Service plant in Texas in 1937?
A. The United States Forestry Service planted 12,279 acres of seedling forest trees in Texas in 1937. Four other states received more: Michigan, 42,031 acres,
