BRITAIN AND U. S. TAKE LEAD TOWARD PEACE

By United Press
The United States and Great Britain today renewed their moral leadership for peace in Europe and the Americas.
President Roosevelt led the western hemisphere's observance of Pan-American day with an address at Washington, warning that the United States will turn back any aggressors from abroad.
The peace of the Americas, he said, "shall not be endangered by controversies within our family and we will not permit it to be endangered from aggression coming from outside. The American republics, nevertheless, face a great test. If our good fortune is to continue, our will must be strong."
At Berlin, U. S. Ambassador Hugh Wilson, indirectly urged Germany to abandon efforts for economic self-sufficiency and join the American campaign for reciprocal trade concessions.
More important to world peace was the virtual completion of Britain's agreement with Fascist Italy, intended to end differences between the two nations and weaken the Nazi-Fascist combination.

'Hottest Clue' In Frome Case Is Found By Rangers

By United Press
HEBERNVILLE, April 14.—Texas Rangers, trailing a car they believed to be driven by the murderers of Mrs. Weston Frome and her daughter, announced today they had found a handkerchief with the letter "F" embroidered in one corner clinging to a bush at a camp the suspects used in the past two days.
Texas Ranger Pete Crawford believed it was the "hottest clue" yet uncovered. State police at Austin said, however, that the handkerchief differed from that found clutched in the hand of Nancy Frome when her body was found near Van Horn.
Rangers found two campsites in South Texas pastures, believed to have been used by the suspects. The suspects are heavy, swarthy man about 35 years old and a blond woman about 25.

The memorial is not an obelisk of stone but a vital crusade with a message of encouragement and hope for our own and later generations."
"The Army honors those who have died by appealing to the living to unite in a movement to fight cancer with knowledge, to spread the message that in its early stages this disease is curable. Probably half of the 150,000 men and women who died last year could have been saved had they known the symptoms of early cancer and acted on that knowledge."
"Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker was the only Texas woman on the National Advisory Board of the Women's Field Army. In memory of her untiring devotion to the women of Texas and of these United States, what could be more fitting than that Texas create a living memorial to her life among us?"

CONGRESS IS GIVEN PLANS FOR RECOVERY

By United Press
WASHINGTON, April 14.—President Roosevelt proposed to congress today in a special message a $4,512,000,000 program of lending, spending and credit expansion to launch the new deal on its greatest expenditures in a pump-priming drive against the recession.
Another important piece of legislation also appeared. The house labor committee agreed to report a new wage-hour bill, providing fixed levels of pay and working hours by gradual adjustment of standards.
Meanwhile conferees on the new tax bill headed into imbibed committee fight.
The new spending program proposed by the president would boost the federal 1939 budget expenditures to a minimum of $8,881,000 with spending possibly topping nine billions for the first time in U. S. peacetime history. Little legislation would be required for the program.
The president's associates said the net increase in the national debt would not exceed $1,000,000,000. The program would involve use of a $1,400,000,000 gold "nest egg."
Mr. Roosevelt, working until 2:45 a. m. today to reshape his plans after conference with congressional leaders, will go on the air at 9:30 p. m. CST tonight to rally popular support for the new deal against an economy opposition, which some believe includes Vice President Garner.
The new plan is designed to increase national income in two years from the present $56,000,000,000 to $80,000,000,000 a year. The plan fell into three general categories: one, maintenance of relief; two, expansion of credit; three, revival of public works and additional funds for certain new deal recovery agencies.
The lending-spending-credit expansion plan includes:
1. $2,062,000,000 of treasury expenditures to make work.
2. $950,000,000 of treasury loans to make work.
3. $1,500,000,000 of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans to aid business and local governments.
4. Distillation of $1,182,000 gold, use of $210,000,000 free gold already in the treasury working balance and Federal Reserve reduction of reserve requirements by about $750,000,000.
The house drove the $800,000,000 agricultural department supply bill toward final action. Leaders expected that before passage an amendment would increase federal highway aid to solve the $167,500,000 provided for in the 1938 fiscal year.

Ranger Man Claims Record for Holding P. O. Box Number

"Dutch" Irvin, Ranger school-teacher, claims a record for holding the same post office box number longer than anyone else in Ranger.

In spite of several changes in location of the postoffice, when box numbers were often changed, Irvin has retained old 93. At the time the post office moved into the new building Irvin was assigned another number, but he rebelled.
"I have had 93 for over 40 years," Irvin told post office clerks, "and if I don't get that number in the new post office I just won't have a box."
He got 93.

You Go to School to Learn

This is an especially apt time to think a little about what changes in the tides of education are brought about by heightened political rivalries, strengthened economic barriers, intensified international ill-will, and wars.

Deteriorations and perversions in educational systems are not effected by decree alone. The faculty mind, the student mind, the aggregate intelligence of the scholastic field, absorb the emotional colorations of the world at large, and the characteristics of an entire system become so changed in time as to make it unrecognizable. The supposedly cloistered soul is after all not quite hermetically sealed.

The values of liberal arts courses in colleges as opposed to specialized training, general courses in high schools as opposed to technical courses, are the subject of considerable dispute at present in the light of their ultimate practical benefits to the average man. But that there is a place for both . . . that the world needs men of learning as well as men of training . . . is undenied. Education as an instrument whereby a man may enlarge the scope of his cultural experience as a means to attaining simply a greater degree of pleasure out of life is also still accepted as one of the assets of a civilized existence.

The opportunities of this kind of an education are in especial danger of being abridged in periods of widespread international ill-will. The availability of courses in foreign languages, foreign literatures, is particularly subject to destruction. You may remember the disappearance of high school German courses 20 years ago.

The courses were not abolished in some schools, but few students took them where they remained. You read now that the popularity of German rose in New York's schools after the war, to a post-war high point in 1934, and then started going down steadily, and is still going down.

Language is a cultural asset, whether Nazism is or is not. At present the chances for German look as if they're rapidly approaching the vanishing point. Will Goethe be universally unfathomable in this country a few years from now?

Wouldn't it be dandy for the English language if the Americans and British got to despising one another for a few generations!

A Skidmore college student says in test that the North Pole was named after its discoverer, Marco Polo. Mussolini may seize upon this as grounds for a claim to the territory.

With European dictators, the ultimate objective is usually not the ultimatum objective.

THE EXECUTIVE REORGANIZATION PROGRAM

THE AGONY OF JESUS

BY FATHER S. E. BYRNE
St. Rita's Church, Ranger

The road which Jesus took on His journey to Calvary descended from the praetorium into the Tyropoeon valley, and winding westward climbed a steep hillside. Almost along the top ran the city walls, and farther in the distance, hemmed about by gardens and houses, lay the place of execution, Golgotha. This name, which means skull, doubtless in those days designated some bold and lonely rock, rising from the ground and lying skull-like upon this open stretch of land. Golgotha must have been but a short distance from the walls of the city, for it was the custom of the Romans to execute convicted criminals just at the gates of the towns, and near some highway sufficiently used to make the spectacle serve as a public example.

From the account of St. John, we know that Christ was turned over to the Jewish soldiers, but from subsequent events we know that some of the Roman soldiers, with a centurion in command, acted as executioners, for crucifixion was never a punishment administered by the Jews. The high priests were content to merely be present at the execution of this sentence.

The execution followed immediately upon the sentence, for this was Roman usage, and the Jews desired to have Christ put to death immediately, for fear lest the body should be left upon the cross and thereby profane the sanctity of their festival of the morrow. Accordingly the procession was formed forthwith; at its head rode a centurion on horseback, behind him walked four soldiers surrounding Jesus and the two criminals also sent to be executed. Our Savior no longer wore the garment of derision, but had been clothed in His own garments. But His head still bore the crown of thorns, and about His neck they hung a tablet, upon which was written His condemnation.

The instrument of torture, the cross, was not produced, all was ready and the procession marched rapidly toward Golgotha. Stared at by an insolent crowd of sightseers, Jesus dragged that heavy

Just at this time a man happened to be entering the town; he was a Cyrenean Jew returning from the country. From his dress and bearing the soldiers saw at a glance that he was a stranger employed at servile labor; to their minds this was sufficient excuse to make him perform one of those forced services which the whims of the legionnaires were continually imposing upon the Jewish inhabitants. They therefore compelled him to carry the cross after Jesus. It was because of this compulsory service rendered to the Savior that the name of Simon the Cyrenean has been preserved from oblivion. Whether he was a disciple of Christ we do not know, but St. Mark recalls that Alexander and Rufus, names known among the early Christians as belonging to brethren in the faith.

But for Christ, the soldiers had to help Him rise, and at sight of this Man being dragged to execution a shudder of pity swept through the throng, and a group of women who were close to Jesus lifted up their voices in cries of lamentations. Moved by the great grief of these women, Jesus turned toward them, saying: "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me; but weep for yourselves and for your children; for soon the days shall come when they will say: 'Blessed are the barren! Blessed are the wombs which have not borne, and the breasts which have not given suck!' Then shall they begin to say to the mountains: 'Fall upon us!' and to the hills: 'Cover us!' For if men deal thus with the green wood, what shall be done in the dry?"

This response surprised the women of Jerusalem, for its tone was so grave and solemn and almost severe, sounding not so much of gratitude as it did rather of an exhortation to penitence. Thus indeed Jesus showed greater anxiety for them than for Himself. Forty years later these same maidens who now heard the words of Jesus were to be enveloped in the destruction of Jerusalem. These young mothers were to behold the sword and torch consume the flower of the children of Israel; the underground causeways of the city were incapable of shielding their children against the rage of their conquerors; the corpses of the citizens were heaped therein by the thousands; while in delirium of famine they would actually kill and eat their own children.

At last Christ reached the place of execution, worn out and utterly exhausted. The soldiers offered Him wine mingled with myrrh and poppy, which the Jews were accustomed to give to condemned criminals, thereby producing a sort of stupor that would lighten their sufferings. Jesus, having tasted it, would not drink, but steeled Himself to accept all the bitterness and hardships of His execution.

Finally the executioners seized Him and stripped Him of His garments; the crucified captive must hang naked upon the gibbet. He was then placed on the cross and nails driven into His hands and feet to keep Him fastened to the cross when it was raised. Who can imagine what torments Christ must have endured in this suffering, for we know how much it hurts if we have but a pin stuck into us, and to have both hands and feet pierced with large nails must have been terrible; this was not enough, the hole for the cross had been dug, and when the victim was secured to the cross it was raised and left to drop into this hole with a shudder that was flesh-rending.

Two crosses had been set up, one on the right, the other on the left of Jesus, bearing two thieves condemned to death with Him. The soldiers now affixed above the head of Christ the inscription dictated by Pilate. Upon this inscription in Greek, Latin and Hebrew was these words:

YOU'LL SMILE TOO
WHEN YOU TRY THIS "MAKIN'S" TOBACCO.

NAMES in the News

Names make headlines. Newspapers, today as always, are made up of what people say, think, propose, dissent from. Governments, institutions, businesses—and all their activities—are only the lengthened shadows of men!

What is true on the front pages is true, also, on advertising pages. Advertisements are simply signed statements of men, banded together to form a business who seek your patronage. They back their good name against the products they ask you to buy. They say, in cold black type, that theirs is a name you can trust.

People who get the most for their money in the market-places are people who know the value of familiar, trade-marked products. They buy with confidence. They buy by name—and save time, tiresome searching, and money! Are you doing likewise?

Easter Cruise

BY MARION WHITE

CAST OF CHARACTERS
JOYCE MILNER, heroine; she took an Easter Cruise.
DICK HAMILTON, her boy; he brought in the heroine.
ISOBEL PORTER, traveler; she sought a mate.

Yesterday Mrs. Porter interviewed a young man, Dick Hamilton, who had just returned from a cruise. And her look almost danced Joyce to take part with Dick.

CHAPTER VIII

DOWN in her cabin a pleasant surprise greeted Joyce's eyes. In the center of the room, on a dress hanger hooked through the door, was her white dress, spotless and pressed as if it had never known a drop of water.

She tried the dress on, praying that it had not shrunk. But no; it was as good as new, and the dress hanger hooked through the door, was her white dress, spotless and pressed as if it had never known a drop of water.

So Joyce went up to dinner with a light heart, proof against Mrs. Porter's frigid charm and Isobel's sophisticated court.

Dick, she noticed, was developing a nasty cold, sneezing and sniffing and gasping, yet all the while trying to persuade the doctor that he never had a cold in his life—not a real cold.

But before the meal was over he left the dining room, taking with him a very unexpected package. She felt a strong hand on her shoulder, and she was spun quickly about, to face a still furious Mrs. O'Hara.

"The only trouble," he remarked gallantly, as he propped himself against the door, "is that there are so many lovely young ladies that we can't dance with all of them."

Joyce laughed, enjoying the moment. "Why not try a Paul Jones?" she suggested carelessly. "You'd get around more."

"A Paul Jones?" Captain Boyer searched his memory for the meaning of it. Then recalling, he added brightly: "Of course. That's the dance where we all change partners, isn't it? Why didn't I think of it before?"

As the dance ended, he went over and made the suggestion to the orchestra leader before returning Joyce to her table.

Gaily the orchestra leader blew a whistle and called the changes: "Single line, now, and MARCH! Hands on shoulders" . . . "Ladies right, gentlemen left" . . . "Find your partners!"

Faster and faster the music was stepped up; more and more hilarious became the dancing. Joyce went through the changes, her cheeks flushed, smiling in bright abandon because she did not realize that anything so gay as a Paul Jones might bring its difficulties.

THEN Joyce, stepping along merrily, hand over hand, looked down the line of approaching men and caught her breath. "Lord!" she thought, "look what's coming!" For there, directly in front of her, just one man removed now, was pudgy Mr. O'Hara, still swaying unsteadily but beaming assuredly under a Napoleonic hat of vivid red.

Now she was in Mr. O'Hara's arms, and he, unmindful of the routine of the dance, took quick advantage of the situation. He led her out of the circle, stepped her into a brisk, old-time two-step. Presently the whistle died, and the others resumed the dancing, so there was nothing to do but enjoy these few moments.

Mr. O'Hara's brief abandonment.

"That's the little girl!" he approved heartily. "We'll show 'em. Boy, you're some lil' stepper, baby!"

In between his casual remarks, his lusty voice would now and then be raised exuberantly, in tune and out of tune, to the orchestra's selection.

After the first few steps, Joyce forgot to worry about him. Let him have his fun, she thought, with a bit of Aunt Martha's philosophy. After all he doesn't have much chance, not with Old Pickle-Puss always behind him. . . .

The whistle sounded once more, and the dancers fell into a line of march. But not Mr. O'Hara. "Think I'm going to change partners now," he demanded.

"No, sir—ee-ee!"

So they kept up a little dance of their own, a dance which was a bit of a two-step, and something of a fox-trot, and not at all unlike an Alabama cake-walk.

And the others who danced turned to look at them, and those who sat at nearby tables laughed appreciatively, and Joyce laughed too because—well, what of it?

INTO a circle the dancers formed, and Mr. O'Hara continued his little specialty in the very center of it, while those about paused for a moment to applaud his efforts. Right and left went the dancers, and presently new partners found each other quickly at the sound of the whistle. And still Joyce danced with Napoleon O'Hara.

Now, prancing past the captain, he smiled proudly. "How'm I doin', Captain?" And Captain Boyer grinned good-naturedly. "Fine!" he assured him.

But enough is enough, Joyce decided. The perspiration was forming in tiny beads on her forehead, and her feet could stand no more, yet her partner showed no indication of giving up.

"I think I'll have to stop," she protested finally. "It's so very warm—"

"Nonsense!" protested the gentleman, tightening his hold about her waist. "We're just beginning to step, Beautiful. Say, can you do the Big Apple?"

"No, I'm sorry."

"What? All the young people are doing the Big Apple. It goes like this. . . ."

In some devious fashion he began to lurch his knees, to bend them this way and that, looking for all the world like a toy balloon on a fork. . . .

Over his shoulder, Joyce cast an appealing glance toward Mr. Gregory, sitting expressionless at her table. But whether he understood the signal or not, he made no move to help her out of the situation.

Now they were indeed becoming ridiculous, yet Joyce only aggravated the matter by attempting to free herself. "I'll look like a fool," she thought, "if I try to saw how-dare-you-sir after letting it go this far. . . . If only Dick were here—"

Finally, across the deck, she caught Mr. Robert's eye and he winked back, understandingly, and made his way toward the orchestra, thinking, perhaps, if the music stopped so would Mr. O'Hara.

But before he had taken two steps, relief did come to Joyce, and from a very unexpected quarter. She felt a strong hand on her shoulder, and she was spun quickly about, to face a still furious Mrs. O'Hara.

"Haven't you made a sufficient spectacle of yourself today?" she demanded of her husband through tight lips.

Sheepishly he tried to explain. His wife paid no attention. Instead she turned to Joyce, and in a voice which carried over the entire deck, she cried: "As for you, young woman, I'd thank you to keep away from my husband."

Weather Forecasts On Time Schedules Started In Gulf

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Gulf of Mexico weather broadcasts on direct time schedules, a new service for all classes of marine vessels, has been inaugurated by the U. S. coast guard and lighthouse services in cooperation with the government weather bureau.

Forecasts for the Middle and West Gulf areas are sent twice daily, with storms, hurricane and advisory warnings for those areas at two-hour intervals from WWOI, lighthouse bureau station at New Orleans; NMG, Mobile, Ala., and NOY, Galveston, Texas.

NMG and NOY are coast guard stations. The lighthouse service announced that all broadcasts would be made in "plain language" and could be received by any set with a wave band covering 2662 kilocycles.

The forecasts are designed to provide all classes of vessels with information formerly obtainable only by ships equipped with radio telegraph apparatus and operators. It was believed the reports also would be of value to dispatchers' office, dock terminals and yacht clubs.

Station WWOI broadcasts wind and weather forecasts for the Middle and West Gulf of Mexico at 10:40 a. m. and 10:40 p. m. When issued, storm, hurricane and advisory warnings for those areas are sent at the same time and repeated at 40 minutes past the first even hour and at two-hour intervals thereafter for ten hours.

Forecasts and warnings for the Middle Gulf are sent from NMG at 10:20 a. m. and p. m. Storm warnings are repeated at 20 minutes past the first even hour and at two-hour intervals for the next ten hours. Station NOY broadcasts are at 10:50 a. m. and p. m., with additional advisories at 10 minutes past the even hours. All times are central standard.

Armenian, because these latter two were more commonly understood by the Jews. This inscription was designed to show the Jews plainly in what contempt he held both their nation and their dream of royalty. During the march, in their anxiety, the high priests had unnoticed this inscription, but now they again went in search of the governor. They demanded that he should change the superscription so that it would read: "Behold Him who called Himself the King of the Jews." But Pilate, who had been so weak before, firmly replies to their request: "What I have written, I have written," and dismissed them.

Let us, because of the lack of time, pass over the sufferings of Christ on the cross in a very brief manner. Hours could be taken up in the explanation of them. We have the seven last words or seven last sayings of Our Lord on the cross that for each of which there is a world of explanation. We know how first, instead of reviling His enemies, He prayed for them: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Then how the thief on one side, instead of blaspheming Him, rather looked at them, and those who came into Thy Kingdom, remember me!" And how this simple prayer was rewarded by words that we all hope one day will be true of us: "I tell thee that, of a truth, today thou shalt be with Me in Paradise. Then how He thought of His mother, and gave her to the care of St. John and to the whole world as its spiritual mother: "Woman, behold thy son," and to St. John: "Behold thy mother."

Thus, during three hours Jesus battled without uttering a single complaint. The evangelists, who have described the agony in the garden, are silent concerning the events that took place within Jesus Himself. Yet in the end a great cry pierced the gloom, revealing the mystery of these hours of anguish. St. Mark has preserved these words just as they came from the lips of Jesus, in that familiar Aramaean tongue, which as a child he had learned at Mary's knee: "Eli! Eli! Lamona Samachthani!" "My God! My God! Why hast Thou forsaken me!" This lament is the open heart of the psalm wherein the Messiah's passion is all predicted. Indeed, it was a mental agony which found an utterance in that cry of distress.

The Jews found courage to reproach those words of Jesus, feigning to mistake the divine name of Eli for that of the prophet.

"He is calling upon Elias," they said, showing even by this jibe that they were still afraid, for by Israel knew that the awful Seer was to reappear upon a day of terror and blazing fire, beneath cloud-hung skies and a moon like blood, when all the Heavenly powers would tremble in their spheres.

St. Matthew tells us: "Now, from the sixth hour there was darkness over the whole earth, until the ninth hour." And about the sixth hour, we are told, a mass of dank and murky vapors had begun to mount upward toward the cross, enveloping it as in a funeral pall, and that terror

MEMPHIS—Carl Hubbell's sum-up of the National League this spring is the best I've heard.

"Things look about the same," says Hub. "The only difference is that my arm is a year older." Hubbell has been Bill Terry's fatal ticket since the Terrible One assumed command of the New York Giants in mid-season, 1932, and was an 18-game winner three years previous.

The Polo Grounders were pan-stricken when the great southpaw lost his cunning last July. The gentlemanly Oklahoman favored it in time to win 17 games, and led the National League in that department as well as winning percentage and strikeouts.

But even Hubbell and his rubber arm can't go on forever, and as the Giants took home the boys are wondering what will happen when the master cracks up.

Despite his outfit's miserable showing against the Yankees in the world series, Terry stood out, really making the National look like another minor.

Another thing aren't especially bright, with the Giants' principal farm, Jersey City, studded with such sterling youngsters as Freddie Lindstrom and Babe Herman.

WITH Slick Castleman a big question mark, the Giants need another first-rate pitcher unless Hubbell, Cliff Melton, Hal Schumacher, and Harry Gumbert are to carry practically the entire load. Bill Lohman of the new crop became something of a disappointment following a promising start.

Burgess Whitehead scarcely will be in shape to start at second base.

WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Regardless of what anyone thinks of the holding company act or of brain trusters in general, the New Deal's "inexperienced young lawyers" have won a striking victory over the "leaders of the American bar" in the Supreme Court's holding company decision.

Here is further proof that the government, under fire, has developed a string of lawyers who can take on the best and most expensive of the private practitioners.

The demonstration has been especially convincing on the electric power front, for the holding company decision—in perhaps the government's most difficult legal battle of a generation—was preceded by the Supreme Court's validation of PWA municipal power plant loan grants and the decisive three-judge opinion upholding TVA.

The legal generalship has been supplied from the beginning by those two widely publicized but limelight-dodging brain trusters, Tom Corcoran and Ben Cohen. Those two wrote the holding company bill, nursed it through Congress and then skipped vacations to pilot it through the courts.

H. C. Hooper of Associated Gas and Electric once said he'd be willing to spend billions to beat the act and was active in supporting one of the biggest lobbies ever to oppose a bill in Washington. That battle lost, nearly all the big New York law firm banded together under leadership of John W. Davis to beat the government power program. Their fees ran into millions. Only the modestly paid government lawyers would admit the act was constitutional. Davis leaped into the Baltimore federal court to challenge the act a week after it was signed. On behalf of a Baltimore dentist who owned a few bonds in a bankrupt holding company, he asked Judge Coleman to instruct trustees that the act was invalid. "Now you will have to practice law," he whispered challengingly to Corcoran, Cohen and SEC General Counsel Johnny Burns. The New Dealers replied with yells of "fake case!" and "collusion!" after Davis had met his dentist client in the courtroom for the first time. Judge Coleman decided against the New Dealers and so did the Court of Appeals.

But the Supreme Court accepted the Corcoran-Cohen argument, that the Baltimore case, in which the government wasn't a party, was no fair test of the act.

Then an armada of utility lawyers launched 52 suits against the act. Once again Corcoran and Cohen fought up to the Supreme Court with Attorney General Cummings in what utility lawyers called an "unheard-of" maneuver designed to stay other suits while the government's own suit under the act against the huge Electric Bond & Share Company was being tried.

Meanwhile Corcoran and Cohen had recruited Robert H. Jackson, New Deal ace trial lawyer who is now solicitor general, to take special charge of the Bend and Share case.

And to date the courts have handed the big-time lawyers and utilities which employ them nothing but a bunch of goose eggs.

Nehi Contest Plans Assure Consideration For All Contestants

Interesting evidence on a subject of much current interest and discussion—the conduct of advertising contests—is advanced by a local business man, Mr. Louis Rifkin, owner of the Nehi Bottling Company, of 1004 West Main Street, Eastland, bottlers of Royal Crown Cola in this district.

Many people hesitate to enter contests, feeling that the cards may be stacked against them or that winners may be "picked out of a hat." Books and articles suggesting that such contests are hazardous conducted or that judging is prejudiced in one way or another have recently gained considerable notice.

Reporting extremely wide public interest in the $50,000 contest recently launched by Nehi, Inc., Mr. Rifkin sees excellent opportunities for residents of this section to win some of the many cash prizes offered for completing a simple sentence, and he stresses the fact that particular pains are being taken to insure equal chances for all contestants.

This is done by using judging methods employed by a number of large advertisers to assure absolutely fair and impartial conduct of prize contests.

The organization which has undertaken this task for Nehi, Inc. is the Reuben H. Donnelly Corporation, New York, which has acted as judge in some of the most important contests recently conducted by national advertisers including Philco, Old Gold, Kellogg, and others.

The Reuben H. Donnelly Corporation is a huge organization of which their contest handling department is just one unit. Their services include a variety of services to business organizations. With the judging in these hands, we know that every entry will receive the thorough consideration of well-trained judges and that every winning statement will be determined on the basis of sheer merit alone.

Entries are rated against a predetermined standard for clearness, sincerity and originality of thought by a series of junior and senior judges, in such a way that each entrant is protected against the possibility of being eliminated on account of individual vagaries on the part of any single judge. Each entry gets the complete attention of a number of skilled judges, and there is no conceivable way in which either whim or partiality can influence the judging.

"We can assure all entrants of an equal chance of winning, since their own ideas and words are sought, rather than fancy entries or skill in writing and since the judging is so fairly handled."

"I look forward to each week's list of winners, with the expectation that the Eastland area will be well represented."

Friday and every Friday. The program may be heard every Friday night at 8 p. m., over the N. B. C. It costs nothing.
