European and American Dictators Are Different

One thing that has been bothering some Americans in connection with this proposed New World co-operation in defense of democracy is the perfectly obvious fact that the democracy of so many Latin-American nations is far from being pure and undefiled.

The conference in Peru may be productive of great things. Yet there is no use ignoring the fact that of the nations there represented only a few can be classed as genuine democracies, as the term is understood north of the Rio Grande. If a united front against the dictators is formed, there will be plenty of dictators in it.

Yet there is no need for anyone to be dismayed by the fact. For if dictatorship in itself is an old story in this hemisphere, the particular kind of dictatorship now looming large on the European horizon is something new. A moment's comparison will make the distinction clear.

As a general thing, the "banana republic" dictatorship is a highly individualized show. Only rarely is it based on any ideology or theory more elaborate than a simple desire for power. It may be exceedingly repressive-some of the Latin dictators had nothing to learn from the Nazis about the technique of silencing dissidents-but by its very nature it is ephemeral, and it does not force the ideals, the mental processes and the intellectual outlook of its people into a rigid mold. It is a way of government but not a way of life. It does not try to remake society according to a fixed pattern.

All of which is just the reverse of the European-model dictatorship which is to be one of the big concerns of the Lima conferees.

For the frightening thing about such a thing as Nazism is that while it vests all the power of government in one man, it goes far beyond the old-time idea of simple autocracy, and sets up an ideal to which all men are forced to conform. It is not enough that the citizen simply refrain from criticizing the dictator; he must think as the dictator wants him to think, he is permitted to have only such ideas as suit the dictator, the smallest details of his private life are regulated for him.

So that it is not merely political freedom which dies under this system. The fundamental right of the human being to think his own thoughts and worship according to the dictates of his own conscience, to pick his friends, to train his children, and to keep himself aware of what is going on in the world-this broad right, which is fundamental to anything that can pass under the name of civilization, ceases to exist.

That is why there is nothing in the least out of the way in the spectacle of various Latin-American dictators sitting down to discuss ways of checking the spread of European totalitarianism.

CLEMMER DAIRY IS NOW BETTER PREPARED THAN EVER TO SERVE YOU WITH PURE SWEET MILK-

Announcement is made today by Mr. J. H. Clemmer, senior member of the firm, Clemmer Dairy, that he and his two sons have consolidated their fine dairy herds, bought several of the best producing cows from Mr. Montgomery when he sold out his Oakwood Jersey Dairy, and are now in position to serve Ranger the best pure raw sweet milk it is possible to produce.

Our herd is tested regularly for FB, and all milk is tested at weekly intervals for barteria and other foreign matter . . . Especially do we call attention of the public to the fact that our milk is always capped wih our name plainly stamped on top of each bottle.

Please bear these facts in mind. I have been in the dairy business in Ranger for the past 15 years, and we now have one of the most sanitary and modern dairy plants to be found in

ROLLED IN THE

Urged on by their Medicine Men stricken Indians of long-vanished tribes "treated" themselves by rolling in snow and ice. Hopefully but futilely, they tried to drive from their bodies the "devil" that made them sick.

Now instead of Medicine Men we have Men of Medicine. Their prescriptions call for drugs, not superstition. That's why we carry over 18000 different drugs, and have two registered pharmacists to compound them. Bring your prescription or refills to this store and they will be filled quickly,
