TWO JUNIOR COLLEGES MAY BE RE-RANKED

By United Press

AUSTIN, Feb. 24.—A bill to increase two state junior colleges at Arlington and Stephenville to four-year ranking, was finally passed today by the Texas house of representatives after debate that threatened, once, to cause a fight between members.

Vote on the final passage to the senate was 82 to 29.

The house, overnight, reversed its attitude on the bill concerning North Texas Agricultural College and John Tarleton College.

Yesterday members had voted to postpone consideration of the matter until March 27. The postponement was reconsidered today despite charges by opponents that the bill's sponsors had "traded" votes with disinterested members.

During the argument a near-fight arose when Rep. Rose Peader of Stephenville, rushed toward Rep. Robert H. Wood of Marshall, the chief opponent of the bill, after Wood declared that passage of the measure would react against state teachers' colleges when bills affecting them come before house committees. However Sergeant-at-Arms Ernest Boyett stepped between the two representatives and decorum of the house was restored within a few moments and the bill finally passed.

Polish Students Demonstrate At Nazi Embassy

WARSAW, Poland, Feb. 24.—Thousands of Polish students rioted in the streets of Warsaw today in the largest anti-German demonstration since Poland and Germany signed a non-aggression agreement five years ago.

More than 2,000 students attempted to march on the German embassy after mass meetings at four Warsaw universities and colleges. Speakers bitterly attacked Germany.

Police reserves were called out when the meeting broke up and the students began to march through the streets. A cordon of police was thrown around the embassy, and the students were driven back with fire hose.

U. Of T. Co-eds Are Slimmer than those In Other Sections

AUSTIN, Tex.—University of Texas co-eds are much slimmer than girls of the Middle West and North, Miss Leah Gregg, physical training professor, said today in connection with the recent Posture Parade held at the University.

The average University freshman is 17 years old, 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighs 115 pounds. She should weigh 121 pounds, according to height-weight charts for college girls, Miss Gregg said. At least 61 per cent of all University freshmen co-eds are under weight five pounds or more, while 42 per cent are ten pounds or more underweight.

German Taxes Are Greatly Increased

BERLIN, Feb. 24.—Drastic tax increases, hitting rich and middle class alike, were decreed by the German government today, apparently as part of the belt-tightening program of the five-year plan.

An official commentary, accompanying the law, said that some of the increases were designed as social measures to iron out existing inequalities between rich and poor and that others were matters of "simple necessity."

Under the new law the average middle class German will pay approximately $40 a year more in income taxes, while the higher income tax brackets will be hit much harder.

Union Certified As Bargaining Agent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The National Labor Relations Board today certified the American Communications Association, a CIO affiliate, as exclusive bargaining agency for approximately 15,000 employees of the Land Line system of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company in 35 states.

McCALL GOES TO HIS DEATH FOR KIDNAPING

By United Press

RAIFORD, Fla., Feb. 24.—Franklin Pierce McCall, 21-year-old preacher's son, died in the electric chair today for the kidnap-murder of James Bailey Cash, Jr., a South Florida youngster.

McCall died in the execution chamber of the State Prison Farm.

His last hope of escaping the death penalty had vanished when justices of the U. S. Supreme Court and the U. S. Circuit Court had declined to intervene.

McCall, however, had seemed confident to the end that he would not pay with his life for the kidnap-slaying of the little boy, with whom he used to play and take fishing.

Only when a guard called to him to come and did McCall show emotion. Quickly, however, he straightened up, half smiled and started the death march, 10 steps from his cell to the chair.

At 10:45 a. m. sheriff D. C. Coleman read the death warrant to McCall. He was taken into the death chamber a few minutes after 11 o'clock and the switch was thrown at 11:08.

He was pronounced dead at 11:15 a. m.

Slain by 'Friend'

WALLACE SEES EVILS IN CROP PRICE SETTING

Program at Sweetwater Due To Begin At 4 o'Clock Saturday Afternoon.

By United Press

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Agriculture Department officials have begun a campaign to head off enactment of any farm program which would provide for dumping of American farm surpluses abroad.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace is leading an administration counter-drive against domestic allotment plans calling for price-fixing. Several midwestern congressmen of both parties are sponsoring them.

The administration strategy appears to be to cling to the present farm program, for 1939, at least. Minor administrative amendments will be approved, but any major changes will be opposed, Wallace has announced.

Recent speeches and statements by Wallace and his chief administrative aids have been directed at what they consider to be the vulnerable spots of price-fixing schemes. Wallace has warned that they would result in a "chaotic farm situation."

Briefly, the domestic allotment plan would provide that the secretary of agriculture establish a fair price for farm products for home consumption and permit the remainder of unlimited production to be dumped abroad at whatever price it would bring.

Administration opponents of the plan assert that it would lead to unprecedented regimentation of agriculture and distributors and to certain failure. The cost to the government, they argue, would not be prohibitive.

Establishment of a fair price, or cost of production, on products for home consumption would entail a complicated formula giving each farmer a quota on which the government would guarantee him a certain price based on his costs.

Proponents of the plan differ as to whether the government would require processors to pay that price or the government would allow products to be sold at market prices and make up the difference by direct subsidy payments.

Administration officials object most strenuously to dumping features of the plan. It calls for the sale abroad of all products not needed at home for whatever price they would bring.

Such a plan, Wallace said, could not succeed. Importing countries would raise their tariffs or would exclude unwanted surpluses through quotas or embargoes, he said.

R. M. Evans, Agricultural Adjustment Administrator, said dumping would lead to "retaliation and trade wars." It would result, he said, in excessively high costs to American consumers and the passing of bargains over the counter to foreign consumers.

"Every bushel of wheat or bale of cotton or pound of lard that moves into export trade at a price less than it actually costs to produce in labor, capital and soil fertility is an absolute loss—never to be recovered," Evans said. "That is the final weakness of any farm philosophy that encourages dumping."

A total of 49,351 cattle has been checked through the U. S. Customs office in El Paso from Mexico since Jan. 1. In addition, 5,633 cattle have been placed in bonded pastures until the April 1 quota is re-opened. The quota of 60,000 cattle for the first quarter of 1939 was filled on Feb. 1.

It was understood the case would be appealed to the Supreme Court of Texas. It was styled T. E. Powell et al. vs. City of Baird, et al.

In the trial court the city won and the plaintiffs appealed to the Eastland court, charging certain citizens were denied suffrage because they did not possess city poll taxes.

Brandies Stood Like a Lighthouse as Tides Changed

Among the gravest necessities of government at the moment is the finding of a successor to Justice Brandeis on the U. S. Supreme Court who can approximately fill his shoes.

In integrity, in steadfast adherence to fundamental principles, Justice Brandeis has stood for more than 20 years like a great lighthouse unmoved by the currents and tides of American life which swirled about his feet. That is not to say that Brandeis was aloof from life. It is merely to say that the current of American legal thought has passed alternately to the right and left of Brandeis' position, which has always remained grounded unshakably on the rocks of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence.

Today it is interesting to note the comment on his passing from the active judicial scene, because some of the keenest and most obviously sincere regrets are being expressed in conservative quarters.

Yet when Brandeis was nominated to the court by Woodrow Wilson, a tremendous hue and cry went up from almost the same quarters which are now eulogizing his career. Six former presidents of the American Bar Association objected. Ex-President Taft spoke against him. Every Republican except George Norris was against him. His book "Other Peoples Money" was cited against him as proving him "radical." Only after a long and bitter fight was he confirmed.

Yet today, many of the same elements which fought him 20 years ago now realize his greatness and lament his retirement. Why?

Because Brandeis, with incorruptible and immovable firmness, has stood by his guns. Distrustful of great concentrations of power in the business world at the time of his appointment (and thus a "radical" in terms of 1916) Brandeis was equally distrustful of great concentrations of power in the governmental world in 1936 (and thus almost a conservative in terms of 1936).

His uncompromising stand for the personal liberty and dignity of the individual was a place of appeal for working men in 1916 against great business combinations which submerged them. Today the same regard for personal rights is a place of refuge for business men who feel submerged in swelling governmental power.

Brandeis once said: "An intolerant majority, swayed by passion or fear, may be prone in the future, as it has often been in the past, to stamp as disloyal opinions with which it differs."

One justice for all men, rich or poor—that stamps the great judge. Justice Brandeis has been a great judge, and the good wishes of many who once hated and feared him followed him into whatever fields of activity he chooses for his remaining years.

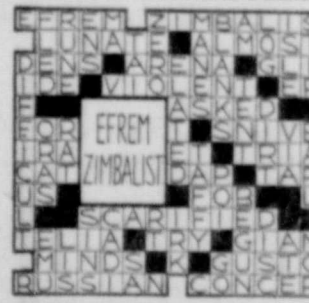

Choosing Brandeis was one of Woodrow Wilson's best public acts. To choose a worthy successor is one of Franklin Roosevelt's most pressing duties.

Gold In Smoke To Be Caught By Mills

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.—A smokestack-sitter with a gunnysack could make $100 a day at the Golden Cycle mill. Casual observers noticing the clouds of smoke pouring from smokestacks of the mining company's ore-processing mill here would find it hard to believe that these clouds of smoke are carrying a daily average of $100 in gold dust out of sight.

Hunter In Court Is Pleased At Decision

VALLEJO, Cal.—Victor Olson is convinced Solomon would have handled his case just as did Judge Arthur Lindauer. Olson was brought into court for having in his possession a wild duck which he had shot. He explained that he killed it merely to put it out of its misery after it had first been wounded by a boy hunter. To satisfy the exigencies of the law, Judge Lindauer fined him $25 as required, and then to satisfy his own sense of justice, suspended the sentence.

SERIAL STORY

WOMEN WANT BEAUTY!

BY LOUISE HOLMES

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday Susie has nearly finished her beauty program. Already Jeff is finding an increasing interest in her.

CHAPTER XVII

JEFF went back to the lay-out and Susie, in a series of graceful twirls, made for the piano. Her hands ran across the keys in a growing crescendo of chords and trills. She had played before in the gymnasium she had sung quiet little ballads, but it had been nothing like this. Susie and Emma had scarcely noticed her singing before. Now they stood gaping in the shower room door as she burst into song.

It was a song of triumph, of exultant youth. Why she sang like that she could not have told. Her voice was rich and deep, it had a faint huskiness that reached the hearts of her two listeners. "And I'd give all the world for just one caress," she sang. "I'm just some, I guess, that's all." The song stopped and she sat there, rapt, tear-filled eyes on her hands.

"I'm going to be beautiful tomorrow," she thought. "When Dick comes he'll find me beautiful." Oh the joy of it, the almost unendurable joy.

Swen came to the piano with typewritten pages. His work was done. He had written instructions and she must follow them to the letter. Diet lists, rules for exercise and weekly massage.

"Thanking him, Susie put a hand on his arm. 'You've been so kind, Swen—and Emma—' looking past him to smile at his wife. 'You've both been so patient and good to me.'

They said incoherent and embarrassed things. It had been a pleasure—they wanted to see her again—they backed away in confusion.

Left alone in the gymnasium Susie played for an hour, lovely melodies, popular numbers which she had picked up by ear. It was almost Christmas, the happiest Christmas a girl ever had. Would Dick come home for the holidays? If he came would she see him? In her heart she knew the answer. The kind fate could not go so far and then withdraw their gifts.

ON the following morning Harker's beauty salon was a beehive of activity, of consultation, of assent and disagreement. Miss Fleming studied Susie, front view and side, she made suggestions as to hair-do and makeup. White linen-clad girls and a young man with expert beauty ideas hovered near, waiting for orders, excited over their part of the program. Only a few appointments had been made. Susie was to hold the floor for most of the day.

She had arrived at nine wearing a plain little dress loaned by the Missus section, fresh, glowing, eyes dancing with expectancy. By 9:30 the shop had settled down to a routine. The young man with ideas put a permanent wave in Susie's hair. It was done carefully, lovingly. Susie's wave was to outline anything ever done by young Pierre. At noon she emerged from his booth, a net over her hair, small squares of cotton under the elastic.

Followed an exacting process. Susie, stretched on a table, eyes tightly closed, gallantly suffered a forest of eyebrows to be removed. The operator was clever, with each pull of the tweezers her fingers pressed the stinging spot. In spite of the care tears squeezed between Susie's lids. At intervals the brows were smoothed with soothing lotion. Susie was given a moment to relax. At last she arose from the table, soaked cotton strapped above her eyes.

At each step the commercial artist was nearby, making idealized sketches. It was the most widely publicized program ever sponsored by Harker's, it was soon to come to a smashing climax.

SUSIE'S lunch was served in a dimly lighted room specially set aside for her. Like a mummy, swathed in white, she lay back on a chaise longue and allowed herself to be waited upon. It was like a story from Arabian Nights, it was like a fantastic dream, swiftly coming true. Susie Lambert, who had stolidly served waffles to indifferent youthful patrons, smiled graciously on missions as they hurried about in her behalf, wings of rapture beating in her heart, joy surging upward like the pound of waves.

Jeff came in while she ate chicken breast and thick slices of tomato and thinly buttered toast. "To our rose unfolding her petals," he asked, sitting beside Susie, somehow making the place cozy and pleasant by his mere presence.

"Oh, Jeff, they are practically killing me and I love it." Her voice had a thrilled undertone, her eyes shone from under the cotton pads.

He looked down, twisting his hat. "Kane's the boss. He put this campaign over."

"He did not," she countered emphatically. "All the worthwhile ideas came from you. You hardly seen Mr. Kane. Why, Jeff, there wouldn't have been any today if it hadn't been for you. What's the matter with everybody?"

His laugh was light, a shield against his discouragement. "After all I'm just the errand boy," he said.

"That's not true," she went on, lovingly. "Can't Mr. Harker see what you've done? I'll tell him—that's what I'll do.

"We know, Jeff," she said softly. "We know about the night you saved me from a mailed milk, all the times you've kept me on the right track. I won't forget—ever." Lifting her hand from his she touched his cheek and he turned his head until his lips were against the soft, pink palm. He did not kiss the palm. Instead he rose hastily to his feet.

"YOU'RE a great kid, Susie," he said huskily. "Got to be up and at it. No debutante on the day of her coming out ever got more attention."

"Jeff," she hesitated, "I want you to see me first—before Mr. Harker or anybody." She laughed, a little shrug of sound. "I want you to put your stamp of approval on me."

He looked down at her. "I'll be hanging around," he promised. Susie's eye was whisked away. She was taken to a light, corner room to be immediately surrounded by heads of departments with soft, delicate underthings, cobwebby hose at four dollars a pair, shoes of fine leather and dull suede, gowns, furs, strange hats like feather trimmed skull caps and luredl parakees, gloves and costume jewelry.

Fascinated, Susie stared into the mirror. Shining hair pale brown with golden high lights, framed an oval face. Dazzling bright eyes sparkled between curling lashes. Slim, straight brows gave a slightly oriental touch to the provocative eyes. Faint, blue-green shadows added unbelievable depth and allure. Susie saw a pert little nose, cunningly applied lip gloss made her mouth a delicious temptation. Natural color came and went in her cheeks. Tears filled Susie's eyes.

"Look—out!" Emily exclaimed, rushing forward with a soft tissue. "Look—out!" Pierre repeated. "Dry those tears, girl, or you will spoil everything."

SUSIE laughed shakily and the tears were gone. The clock said 3:30 and she was to be presented to Mr. Harker at 4. The linen gown disappeared, a hat was deftly fitted to her head. And such a hat. It shaped tightly to one side, coming down almost to an eyebrow smugling into the curls. A fragile veil came just over Susie's nose, making a dusky cloud around the little hat.

Again Susie was laid on the table and the thrilling task of final makeup began. A girl sat on a stool beside the table putting the last finishing touches to her nails, while Emily, a plain, tense person with magic in her fingertips, did things to Susie's face. Creams, astringents, warm towels, the shock of ice, gently applied powder base, each step in the procedure a different, delightful odor. Susie lay under the ministering hands, drowsily content.

At last Emily's tenderness relaxed and she stepped back. "Look at her," she said to the manufacturer. "I never would have believed it."

"Beautiful," the manufacturer agreed.

"Let me see," Susie begged. "After all it's my face."

Emily looked surprised, as if speech had come from an inanimate object.

"Not yet," she said. "Not yet." (To Be Continued)

Yesterday Susie is beautiful, the beauticians agree after their long work on her. Susie wants to see her face herself, but they tell her not yet. She is to be presented to Mr. Harker.

CHAPTER XVIII

THERE were no mirrors in the room. Susie waited for the first view of herself with the still excitement of a bride awaiting the first peep of her wedding march.

Then, with the net still over her hair, she was dressed. An army of maids in waiting helped her while an army of departments heads looked on critically. Susie sat herself in the hub-bub. When a straight, dark dress, deceptively simple in design, a miracle of clever workmanship, was slid over her head and zipped neatly up the side, a linen apron was tied around her neck and Pierre reverently took command.

He removed the net and loosened deep waves. He spun soft curls around an expert finger, he tucked in hairpins, bringing the curls close to Susie's white neck. He fashioned a transparent whirl over each ear. Then he put a mirror into Susie's hand.

Eagerly she gazed into it. Chillyly she looked behind her mirror. At last she gasped. "Why—why she doesn't recognize me," Susie faltered.

At her words the room was swept with a gale of laughter. "How about you recognizing our beautiful friend, Suzanne?" Pierre asked. The heads of departments crowded around, buzzing, complimenting, exclaiming.

"Fascinated, Susie stared into the mirror. Shining hair pale brown with golden high lights, framed an oval face. Dazzling bright eyes sparkled between curling lashes. Slim, straight brows gave a slightly oriental touch to the provocative eyes. Faint, blue-green shadows added unbelievable depth and allure. Emily looked surprised, as if speech had come from an inanimate object.

"Not yet," she said. "Not yet." (To Be Continued)

"Ah—" sighed the milliner, "I knew it—perfection." She was crowded aside by a young woman with a knee-length coat that matched Susie's dress. The soft elegance of imported wool, a flaring collar of exquisite fur, huge fur sleeves. The coat fastened at the neck with a dull gold clasp, it fell gracefully over the short, narrow skirt. The head of suits and coats smoothed Susie's shoulders and stood back in rapt satisfaction.

Gloves, finest suede, hand stitched, were slipped on Susie's hands, softly crushed at the wrists. Someone handed her a purse, suede again, like the shoes and gloves, with a huge, fanciful "S" in burnished gold. The clock said 3:45.

With every passing second Susie's nerves grew tenser. It was becoming difficult to swallow her eye felt stiff, too wide open. The girl in the mirror was a stranger, she had lost herself, her spirit floundered foggy in a daze.

Someone said, "Mr. Kane is waiting." Someone opened the door. Then Susie the prima donna, the debutante, Harker's sensation, turned on a temperamental fit. Susie had never indulged in temperment, but she was feminine, she knew how. Her behavior was the outgrowth of terror and rising hysteria.

"I want to see Jeff Bowman," she said.

"Please, Miss Suzanne," said the head of the glove department. "It's almost 4. Mr. Kane is waiting to take you to Mr. Harker."

BUT remonstrance only added to Susie's nervous tension. Mr. Harker too was a stranger. She hadn't seen him for six weeks, she didn't want to see him. And why should Clifford Kane be the one to escort her to his office?

Firmly she said again, "I want to see Jeff Bowman."

Someone located Jeff. He was loitering near the desk in the beauty salon. He'd said he would be hanging around. He came with a rush when peremptorily called. The heads of departments, the flitters with pinchusions fastened to their bosoms, faded relievedly through the door. Clifford Kane fumed, watch in hand. Jeff walked close to Susie, sensing her hysteria, understanding her terrible need of him.

"I'm frightened, Jeff," she quavered. "It isn't me—I can't stand me. I want them to stop looking at me. My knees are going to crumple."

Jeff did not know. He took Susie carefully in his arms. She clung to the amazing comfort of him. Putting a finger under her chin he raised her dazed eyes to his and smiled confidently into her eyes.

"You're swell, Susie," he said. "It was the best possible line. Sympathy would have reduced her to tears, bullying would have antagonized her. Jeff's remark made her laugh."

"Well, that's something," she managed to say.

"Boy how you've turned the trick. You're a knockout. Forget the old Susie we both liked." Stepping back he bowed with one hand on his vest. "I salute Suzanne," he said.

HER chin went up, courage took the place of shrinking fear. "Thanks, Mister," she smiled, and walked toward the door. Over her shoulder she twinkled. "Ready or not, here I go."

"Walk smart," he advised her, "Shoulders back, head up."

Susie was laughing as she joined a nervously irate Mr. Kane. Upon seeing her he forgot to be irate. He whistled through his teeth. "Ye gods," he muttered. "The impossible has come to pass, the age of miracles is upon us."

It was a triumphal march to Mr. Harker's office, a buzz of amazed chatter followed in the wake of Susie and Mr. Kane. Near the elevator Susie saw Jeff's mother and ran to her with both hands outstretched.

"Am I all right?" she asked in the manner of a little girl.

If Edna could have whistled through her teeth she would have done so. Instead she said, "My dear, you are lovely—lovely."

The department heads had gathered in the outer office to hear the first good word which meant work well done. Susie saw Swen and waved to him. He looked dazed, not even recognizing her. Pierre stepped forward to touch a curl. Newspaper reporters, who had been making themselves inconspicuous up to now, surged up. Jeff, appearing from nowhere, got between them and Susie. His broad back was the only thing taken when a camera flashed. Harker's wanted Susie publicized their own way.

As Kane guided Susie to the closed door of John Harker's office she said, "May I go in alone—just for a moment?"

Kane, who had been mentally reviewing a presentation speech which reflected much glory upon himself, drew back in dismay.

"But Mr. Harker asked me to bring you," he objected.

"Well, you've brought me," she said, smiling, the ripe temptation of her lips emphasized by the veil. "Oh—okay," he muttered, and she opened the door.

Mrs. O'Daniel To Entertain Monthly With Formal Party

By United Press

AUSTIN, Tex.—Mrs. W. Lee O'Daniel hopes to maintain the monthly "formal" open house at the Texas executive mansion while her husband is governor, but she plans to add three times a month an informal party.

The governor's wife, who conducted his campaign from the dining room of their home in Fort Worth, said that one "dress" affair would be held each month at the mansion. On that occasion her guests can wear their latest, most formal frocks.

For the other three weekly affairs, however, the guests can dress informally. Molly O'Daniel, daughter of the state's first family, will assist at these functions.

Mrs. O'Daniel said that being a hostess was a pleasure for her, but that she intends to remain first-of-all a dutiful mother of her three children. Pat and Mike are students at the University of Texas, and Molly expects to enter that school next fall. Many of the mansion's guests are youthful friends of the children.

The silver-haired, slender "first lady" found that her new responsibilities made it advisable to retain a social secretary, so Miss Noble Wilson, who served in that capacity for Mrs. James V. Allgeier, has been chosen.

Mrs. O'Daniel's other interests include gardening, of the real "dirt farmer" variety, the family church work; and a limited amount of women's club work. One of her first spring tasks, she said, will be to plant some rose-bushes sent by a friend in Tyler.

Cattle Stampede Once Nearly Ended Life Of A Village

By United Press

STEPHENVILLE, Tex.—Tales of cattle stampedes in the early days of Texas are numerous among old timers, but a pioneer of Erath county has a story about a stampede that nearly demolished the frontier village of Stephenville—and it was a pet parrot, of all things! His story follows:

"During the '70's, some of the cattle herds being driven north passed through the frontier village of Stephenville. The town consisted of several log cabins with shed rooms of rawhide lumber. They also had porches of the same material, covered with boards made of pin oak.

"The central and largest structure served as a courtroom, and one of the others as a saloon where for a quarter of a dollar a purchaser could get 'a fair-sized drink,' drawn from a spigot in a 50-gallon barrel into a tin cup.

"Usually there was a group of cowboys in town, and there were more dogs than there were inhabitants. Dog fights furnished the chief amusement. One of the county officers owned a large parrot which usually perched on the roof of the courthouse porch. Naturally, the bird had picked up a considerable amount of cowboy lingo, including profanity. One of the parrot's chief expressions was "ye-oh-sie 'em" which usually started a dog fight.

"One day a herd of about 1,500 Longhorn steers was being driven through town. The parrot flapped his wings, gave out a cowboy yell and screeched 'ye-oh-sie 'em'. In a second all the dogs in town charged the steers, which stampeded and knocked down all the porches along the 'street' and even demolished the interior of some of the shacks. The town looked like a cyclone struck it—and it took two days to get the herd back together again."

IMPORTANT! Good personal appearance means so much in every way to a man these days. And neatly trimmed hair is necessary to good appearance. Have your hair trimmed frequently — and have it done here where we know how to make it look its best.—GHOLSON BARBER SHOP, L. E. Gray, Owner.

Engineer Claims Work On WPA Is Without Rhythm

By United Press

PASADENA, Cal.—Harvey W. Hincks, city engineer and psychologist, has found out what's wrong with the WPA, or rather why the public persists in making that WPA workers do it work as fast as they ought to work.

It is all due to a lack of mechanical rhythm, according to Hincks.

Recently Hincks had occasion to watch a group of WPA workers excavating for a 14,000-foot dam. His observation was that the men worked at average speed without interest in their work.

A little later he inspected the same group engaged in laying concrete walls and base for the dam drain. This time they were working rapidly and efficiently.

Curious, Hincks delved deeper into the problem. Investigation showed that a gasoline cement mixer, an air compressor and three pneumatic tampers were being used to rush along the job.

It was the rhythm set up by the noise of the machine, he decided, that was responsible for increasing the tempo of the men's work.

Only one little flaw was found in this final deduction and that was when he investigated the two men who were running with their wheelbarrows.

Jade Treasure Decorate A Home

By United Press

PITTSBURGH — A $750,000 collection of Chinese art treasures stands casually on tables in the home of a retired Pittsburgh business man.

Jade bowls, two of them forming one-sixth of the total known treasures of this type, porcelain vases and delicate ivory carvings, finer than most museums can boast, are owned by George H. Taber, retired oil company executive.

In an upstairs room of his home stands a table holding delicately carved jade screens and bowls. An incense burner, filling the room with its heavy odor is the "whitest, purest piece of jade ever imported into this country," Taber said.

On another table are the two jade bowls, a deep glowing green. He explained that they were of Yunnan jade. Only 12 known pieces have ever been cut from that particular kind of jade.

Value, however, is not Taber's criterion of his collection. He said he collects Chinese treasures as he would books, because of the enjoyment he gets from studying them.

Taber has never been to China. He formed the hobby when he was a small boy. Two young cousins of his returned from China, where they had been living. With them came an old Chinese nurse. Taber remembers the nurse wove for him a pair of embroidered slippers, his first Chinese possession. He still has a portrait more than half a century old that shows the Chinese nurse with one fair-haired cousin on the nurse's lap.

Big Cucumber Is Grown In Bottle

By United Press
BENNINGTON, Vt. — George A. Robinson says that the best way to preserve cucumbers is to grow them right in the bottle. He has one 5 inches tall and three in diameter which nearly fills its soda-bottle greenhouse. All he has to do now is add sugar and vinegar, snip the vine, cap the bottle, and keep until ready to serve.

United States Is Far From Providing Education For All

By United Press
FORT WORTH, Texas.—The United States is further from providing equal educational opportunities for all its children than it was a century ago, according to Dr. Reuben T. Shaw of New York. Dr. Shaw, president of the National Educational Association, told a meeting of school teachers here recently that 780,000 children went to school daily in building which had been condemned as "unfit for use." He said a study made by the advisory committee on education, appointed by President Roosevelt, brought out that there were 800,000 children between 7 and 13 years of age who were not in school.

Pet Alligator Is Proving a Problem

By United Press
AMARILLO, Feb. 17.—When Vernon Gunn, district manager for Transcontinental and Western Air, wrote a friend and casually mentioned that he would like to have an alligator, he really didn't mean it—but now he has one and doesn't know what to do with it.

About a month ago, Gunn wrote Roy Harding, a pilot for the Texas Company, that he thought little alligators were cute. Harding, never one to disappoint a friend, United States, he said, received salaries less than the wage worked out by a federal commission as a answered by sending an alligator from Miami, Fla.

Now Gunn is keeping his pet, which has been named "Kakky," in a goldfish bowl at his hotel, but how orders what he is going to do with it when Kakky outgrows those rather small quarters.
