Big Business That Is Really Big

The growth of insurance, especially since the World War of 20 years ago, has come so gradually and is so generally accepted, that few people have realized how tremendous a factor of the national economy is here centered.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, therefore, is not the only one who was "amazed" and "startled" at some of the facts brought out by the recent hearings of his own Temporary National Economy Committee.

These hearings were no muck-rake. For once, no scandal was evoked, none sought. O'Mahoney himself made clear that "nothing whatever was developed at the hearings to reflect on the integrity or the ability of the men who administer these huge organizations. I am personally satisfied," he continued, "that there is not a single responsible official of any of these companies who is not as sincerely interested in restoring and promoting economic prosperity as is any public official."

That is certainly reassuring, and a welcome change from the usual investigation, which plumbs the depths of human sordidness.

But O'Mahoney's committee has sought to go deeper, and to find out something about what makes economic life tick in America today, and what makes it stop ticking occasionally. And its revelations of the tremendous part played by the insurance companies in that economy today will be indeed startling to many beside himself.

How well understood is it, for instance, that at the end of last year total assets of legal reserve life insurance companies stood at $2,650,000,000? Or that this is an increase of seven and a half billions in the past seven years?

That staggering figure is greater than the national wealth of any state except New York or Pennsylvania. It crowds close to the entire national income in the depression year of 1933 ($44,420,000,000).

The comment of Frederick H. Ecker, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, that these assets are being held for 65,000,000 policy-holders and thus affect directly perhaps 100,000,000 Americans including beneficiaries, only makes the figures more staggering.

An increasing proportion of all private and public debt is slowly drifting into the hands of the insurance companies. The committee found that the 49 largest legal reserve companies now hold 11 per cent of all the direct and guaranteed debt of the federal government, and 9.9 per cent of all municipal, state, and political subdivision debts, to say nothing of 11 per cent of all farm and 14 per cent of all city mortgages.

To cite these things is not necessarily to criticize either the insurance companies or the way they are run. It is simply to point out that so tremendous a concentration has become a key to factor in both private and public business.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

NEA SECTION NEAR WITING

DRIED fruits lead a useful life from breakfast on through dinner. They are economical, packed with flavor and excellent for food value. In minerals, especially iron, they outshine the corresponding fresh fruits, weight for weight.

Dried apricots are very rich in iron. Dates, figs, prunes and raisins also supply this essential mineral. Figs are a good source of calcium.

Dried fruits are also rich in vitamins. Prunes are an excellent source of vitamin A, and also supply riboflavin (vitamin G). Dates furnish both vitamin A and thiamin (vitamin B). Dried apricots and yellow peaches retain part of their original rich store of vitamin A, and figs supply thiamin and riboflavin.

Do not attempt to cook all dried fruits the same way. Generally the most satisfactory procedure in cooking prunes is to wash them carefully in hot water first, then drop them into boiling water and allow to stand an hour for them to plump up.

Next, simmer the prunes in the same water for half an hour, adding a little sugar, if desired, during the last few minutes of cooking.

For dried figs, start the cooking in cold water and simmer 20 to 30 minutes.

Always use the soaking water for cooking, to save every bit of the fruit flavor. Most dried apricots require no soaking. Simply start the cooking in boiling water and simmer 30 minutes.

For dried figs, start the cooking in cold water and simmer 20 to 30 minutes.

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Dried prunes and apricots with lemon juice, dry cereal, French toast, plum jam, coffee, milk.

LUNCHEON: Grapefruit juice, frankfurters in rolls, stewed dried peaches, cookies, tea, milk.

DINNER: Tomato juice, sauerkraut, boiled potatoes, beet, green bean and lettuce salad, steamed dried fig pudding, hard sauce, coffee, milk.

30 minutes to tenderness. Dried peaches are best if soaked in cold water for half an hour and cooked 15 to 20 minutes.

For variety, add a slice of lemon or orange to prunes, or cook and serve apricots and prunes together. Spiced prunes are excellent with meat.

For spiced prunes, simmer part of the time with a bag of whole spices—allspice, cinnamon and cloves—and add a little vinegar during the last few minutes of cooking.

Steamed Fig Pudding (Serves 4 to 6)

One-fourth pound suet, 1.2 pound figs, 4-5 cup sugar, 1-4 cup flour, 3 cups bread crumbs, 1 egg, 1 teaspoon nutmeg, 1 teaspoon soda, milk.

Wash figs, place in cold water and simmer 20 to 30 minutes. Drain and chop. Chop suet. Combine chopped figs and suet with bread crumbs. Add sugar, sifted flour, nutmeg, and well beaten egg.

Use enough milk (with soda dissolved in it) to make batter the consistency of cake batter. Turn into buttered mold and steam for 3 hours.

LONE CEDAR EXPRESSION

Editor-in-Chief Mrs. Todd
Associate Editor D. R. Holliday
Business Manager Juanita Fox
Reporters-Billy Joe Ogden, Sue Smith, Stuart Utley, Nellie Seay.

Contentment A contented mind is desired by all, but seldom if ever, attained. A question that cannot, or has not been answered, either collectively or individually, is wherein is found the contented state of mind.

The writer's opinion are pointed to offer some philosophical views to the essence of contentment. Contentment has no established measure, that can be applied collectively speaking, to the masses. Each individual has his own desires, ambitions, likes, dislikes, and initiative, which in numerous ways governs his actions and conduct.

How he does the task before him is partly an answer to his partial contentment. If he handles the task purposefully, enthusiastically and happily, realizing his ability and his reliability upon supreme guidance in the deliverance of the task, he is more apt to find contentment at the end.

Another answer to contentment might be this: When we are in the last foot of the last mile, we are found at the post trying more purposefully to attend duties' demands.

Sometimes we fear our searching for true contentment is in barren and foreign soil. We do not know from whence comes true contentment. We strive to content ourselves by accomplishing worldly ends, which fades with the setting sun and vanishes into the realms of forsaken oblivion. We are more interested in the category of systematically supplying our material ends, than in what we are and what we will eternally be.

If we fasten our attention on what we have; being more considerate of what we are; less attentive to the things we lack, materially speaking, we are more apt to see a truer purpose of our being. It can be truly said that he who is not contented with what he has would not be contented in what he would like to have.

In summing up we can best present the measure of contentment by offering this quotation: E. Ferrell an dthree children; Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Thomas and Otha; Mrs. G. O. Smith and three children; Miss Jewel Seely; Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Strickler, Ranger; Mr. Burl Griffith, Desdemona.

New Rear Door Safety Catch

Many sedan drivers, whose minds are never completely at ease when children are alone in the rear of the car, will welcome a new rear door safety catch which has just been made available to Chevrolet owners. The tiny device is simple and inconspicuous but effectively prevents the opening of the rear door from the inside until the front door has been opened. The little unit is fastened with a set screw to the edge of the front door but has no effect on its operation nor upon the closing of the rear door from the outside.

SERIAL STORY

'MRS. DOC' BY TOM HORNER

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

The characters and situations in this story are wholly fictional.

Yesterday, Dr. Peterson reveals to Alan in St. Louis that he is a country doctor.

CHAPTER IV

ALAN'S life and his future are here, in Summer," Dr. Farrell continued. "Here among the people who know him and love him like they knew and loved his father before him. He's more than an ordinary physician—he's a friend and adviser, a comforter of the old and an inspiration to the young. He's just what his father wanted him to be—a country doctor."

facts he might lose sight of his goal. Oh yes, I've seen it happen before, and so have you. Think back a few years. Just recall a few of the ideals you carried into your first office at the school. "You've been inspiration to many a student, and your guidance has been responsible for innumerable successful medical careers. But are you as interested in each individual student now as you were ten years ago? You have too many other interests, and whether you want them or not, they're taking your time away from the work you set out to do. That's why you want Alan to share that work. Here Alan's work is his and his alone. If he lives he can pass it on to his son, even as his father willed it to him. "And there's another factor—Emily. In St. Louis, would she become the dominant personality? Alan is very much in love with her, lets her have her own way as much as he can. She's been a spoiled child. If she stays here and finds herself, she will share in all her husband's success. In St. Louis—

"I sure will, Doc." John Carroll's face shone in the early dawn with the light of proud fatherhood. "He's a fine little fellow. And the wife's all right too. We can't ever repay you Doc. Comin' out in this blizzard last night." "Nothing, John. That breakfast you just gave me will settle for the blizzard. And don't forget me if you butcher again. That country sausage was fine."

"You're quite right, Dr. Farrell, that's why the school needs him. It's not only bolster the staff as a professor of obstetrics, he'll be constantly on hand to guide and inspire students, to help stiffen the good from those who will never make it. That sympathetic understanding which has been so valuable to him in private practice will be of added worth in molding the life of not only one 'country doctor' but hundreds of them. "You admit the importance of the country doctor. You admit that schools are turning out too few men of that caliber. With your own school will produce more than that work considered."

"But, Doctor, Alan's success is guaranteed. He'll make ten times as much in St. Louis as he ever will in Summer—"

"The blizzard was over, but deep snow covered the highway and fields. He was already at the new fire at Price's. As he slowed down to make the turn he thought he could make out tracks leading to the edge of the deep embankment. "If those are my tracks, I was luckier than I imagined," Alan chuckled as he considered the danger he had escaped, unheeded. But were those his tracks? For an instant there flashed back into his mind the memory of glaring headlights speeding toward him, of his turning sharply to avoid them. Maybe that car— He jammed his brakes, skidded to a stop, and jumped from the car, leaving his motor running. At the edge of the deep embankment he stared down, gasped, and muttered a fervent "My God!" Below him was the car, a black coupe, upright on its wheels again, but Alan could see scars in the snow where it had turned over at least once. Clambering through the drifts, he pushed his way to the battered car. Snow covered the windshield and windows; he jerked himself in amazement as the body of a man slipped from the seat into the snow at Alan's feet. (To Be Continued)

SERIAL STORY

'MRS. DOC' BY TOM HORNER

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

The characters and situations in this story are wholly fictional.

Yesterday, returning from a monument case, Alan finds a wrecked coupe on the highway. He will open the door and find a man tumbling to Alan's feet.

CHAPTER V

AUTOMATICALLY, Alan had his gloves off and was reaching for the man's wrist. The pulse was faint—very faint. Alan figured quickly. The car had passed him before 8, and it was now after 5. Nine hours, unconscious in that blizzard. No man could live. Even if he had escaped injury when the car overturned, he should have frozen to death.

must have kept him warm for a little while. He should be ready now, if Dr. Jones hurried. Coming up?" "Just a minute, Alan," Dr. Farrell's voice was kind, fatherly. "You've been up all night, son. Why don't you go home and get some sleep, and I'll look after your snow victim?" "But Doctor Farrell—"

"We'll see. Now scoot, honey, while I dress. Man, am I hungry," Emily left the room but with a quiet determination burning in her eyes! Alan did not see Dr. Farrell upon his return to the hospital and he soon forgot both his half-crown man and Dr. Peterson's offer in his work in the delivery room. He came home at midnight to find Dr. Farrell waiting for him. "Your 'snow man' is getting on fine," he said, when Alan joined him at the fireside. "He wasn't so badly banged up as we thought at first. He had a nasty bump on the head, and slight concussion, but no fracture of the skull. He's suffering from severe shock and exposure, but he'll make it, unless pneumonia sets in."

The hum of the electric heater, still running, answered one of Alan's unspoken questions. But there was no time for delay. This man must be taken to a hospital, at once. Half dragging, half carrying his heavy burden, Alan got the man up the embankment and into his own warm car. There was a chance, but even minutes would count now.

"I'm not tired; I'll be all right," But Alan knew that Farrell was right. Reluctantly he gave in, slipped into his overcoat again. "He's all yours, then, Dr. Farrell. Let me know how he makes out, will you?" "It was afternoon before Alan awakened. Emily was sitting on the side of his bed, when he opened his eyes.

"Did you find out who he is?" "Yes, a young man, Eric Kane, chief engineer in charge of that federal dam and reventment project up on the river. He stayed up there until late to be sure that the blizzard wouldn't do any harm, and then missed the turn there at Price's. "He'd been out in the storm all afternoon and that's probably what saved his life. He had on a jacket and sweater underneath his sheepskin coat, boots, and woolen socks and underwear. He stayed warm twice as long as the average man would have. He's got a rugged constitution too, being out in the open so much. He'll be up and around in a day or so. "Kane was asking about you—I told him you'd probably drop in. He wants to thank you for saving his life."

Price's farm flashed by. Pity Price hadn't seen that wreck. Price had probably gone to bed as soon as he saw Alan safely by. A. interne and a sleepy orderly answered his ring at the ambulance entrance of the hospital. "Get that man upstairs, quickly," Alan ordered curtly. "Get him out of those clothes—Lord knows he has on plenty—get stimulants. We'll have to work if we're going to save him."

"It's snowing again; not like last night, but softly falling, huge flakes. The papers says the cold wave is general over the whole country. One of the biggest snowstorms in years."

BUT Alan did not stop at Eric Kane's room in the hospital. He told himself, when the thought occurred to him, that it was because he had little time or opportunity to visit this wing of the hospital, and besides, he said, he had turned the case over to Farrell and he had no more to do with it. But the real reason was that he was afraid—afraid of the embarrassment the grateful man's thanks might cause him.

"No, no trouble at Carroll's. That was easy. Ran into a young fellow in a wrecked car. Evidently been there most of the night. He's half, or completely frozen. But he's still alive."

"I'm not much good at guessing. Probably he wants me to pay up my alumni dues."

"Come in, come in," Alan said as he opened the door. "Thanks," said the stranger, "I will. My name is Eric Kane."

"Never saw him before, or his car either, but he almost hit me head on as I was driving out last night. I wondered then if he'd come the turn safely—and he didn't. Car turned over. Heater

Solons Often Are Not Allowed to Vote On Measures

By United Press AUSTIN, Texas.—Literary enforcement of the Texas constitution would deprive a large part of the members of the state legislature from voting on most of the controversial topics that are decided in the House and Senate. Article III, Section 22, of the constitution says that a member who has a personal or private interest in any measure or bill proposed or pending before the legislature shall disclose the fact to the house of which he is a member and shall not vote on it. House rules cite the constitutional provision and add this parliamentary explanation: "This is a constitutional provision embodied in the rules of the House with which each member is left to comply according to his own judgment as to what constitutes a personal or private interest." Under this ruling, precedent has established that the interest must be more personal than that which the legislator has as a member of a class or profession. Doctors vote on bills regulating their practice; lawyers vote on bills to give them a lien on judgments for their services; farmers vote on agricultural bills and ministers vote on moral issues. In rare instances goes a member disqualify himself from vot-

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON.—When Attorney General Murphy recently appointed a committee to study the practices of quasi-judicial federal agencies, he took the first step toward clearing up one of the government's major headaches. These agencies are numerous, and no two of them are alike. They include such diverse organizations as the National Labor Relations Board and the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Communications Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission. They are organized differently, they function under different rules, and the things you can do with the rulings they hand down are different. All in all, they form a complex and bewildering reason for the acute dislike which the ordinary citizen entertains toward the word "bureaucracy."

WASHINGTON.—Not that it will make the paying of your current income taxes any pleasanter—but this year if you have a row with Uncle Sam about the sum you are going to collect from you, it will be easier, simpler and less expensive to get the thing settled. Ordinarily, most income tax disputes are settled by the Technical Staff of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Formerly centralized in Washington, the staff is now being scattered all over the country. By May 1 the work of setting up 10 regional divisions will be completed, and the 600 technical advisers on the staff will be out where the taxpayers can get at them without taking a long trip to Washington. Income tax returns are already starting to come in, but for the present they are simply being divided into two piles—returns or incomes under $5000, and returns on incomes over that amount. When the March 15 deadline arrives, Internal Revenue Bureau deputies will begin checking the returns to see that everything is on the up and up. Disputes over taxes in the less-than-$5000 bracket don't cause much fussing. The sum involved is small, and mostly a deputy can get things settled by simply making a call on the taxpayer and having a chat. It's in the over-$5000 bracket that things really happen. First of all, the returns are checked for obvious mathematical errors and mistakes in computing the amount of tax due. (You might be surprised to learn that a great many citizens pay more than they need to—or try to pay it, anyhow. They're always set straight, painlessly.)

Ad Made Car Price Really A Bargain

It really pays sometimes to read all ads very carefully.

There was a big mistake in the ad of C. J. Moore last Sunday, but thanks to us the correction was made before anybody appeared to really buy a bargain.

The Sunday paper carried an ad on a 1936 Hudson 4-door sedan. It is really reduced this week $50, which is a lot but the ad read the car was for sale for $225, and it should have read $325.

"I am glad no one came in to get the car at that price," Moore said today, "because we just would have most, passed out to have to take $150 loss on a car the first week we have it on the floor."

"Our gain is your loss better watch carefully next time and maybe you will make some money."
