'I Had, One Time, a Lovely Fatherland ...'

Everyone who has known or sung the infinitely sad and tender songs of the Germany of the Brothers Grimm, of Hebel, or of Schumann, knows the one that begins "Ich hatte einst ein schoenste Vaterland" (I had, one time, a lovely fatherland).

It is filled with that haunting, melancholy, sentimental longing for an idealized homeland that is one of the most ingratiating things about people of German origins. They seldom think that perhaps, like the mystic fatherland of the song, "It was a dream."

Hence it is particularly repulsive to see this feeling being deliberately used as a wedge by organizations in Germany to gain information about Americans of German origin which could easily one day be used against them or their relatives or friends, and which most certainly is being used to prejudice them against the country of their adoption.

The technique by which those who respond with fan-letters to German short-wave stations are all cataloged for purposes best known to the German propaganda service, is well known. But a further development of the technique has now been revealed in pamphlet material being circulated by organizations in Germany to Americans who left that country as long as 40 years ago, and who have perhaps been good American citizens for almost that long.

To a one-time Swabian comes, for example, from Stuttgart, an attractive brochure, describing in nostalgic terms the beauties of Germany, especially since 1933. It contrasts an assumed indifference to these people's welfare in their present lands, assures them of the continued solitude of Germany. Playing on these chords of sentiment which lie hidden in every German-blooded person, the propagandists work up a mood of longing and reminiscence. Then comes the catch.

Included in the brochure is a questionnaire, which the reader is asked to fill out and return to Germany for somebody's files. It wants to know things like this: full name, exact address, calling, when and where born, religious faith, name and birth-date of children, ancestry of wife, names and dates and place of destination of other relatives who emigrated from the same region. And last but not least, what real estate does the family possess?

It is not likely that very many American families of German origin will return any such information as this to any German bureau for filing. For it is hard to imagine any legitimate reason why anyone in Germany should want it.

But there are other reasons which can be easily imagined. It might be used in "tracing Jewish blood," in blackmailing families still in Germany, in engineering the confiscation of property. And it unquestionably is being used in building up a vast anti-American propaganda machine in this country.

SERIAL STORY

DATE WITH DANGER

BY HELEN WORDEN

Yesterday Mary wrote her first story, playing down the death of Justice French. Then she decided to return to the "live night club" but she is up against a couple of kids.

CHAPTER IX
The dining room of the Plaza was deserted when Mary and Ladd walked in. Bus boys had not yet finished setting the tables. "Good morning, Mr. Ladd," the headwaiter hurried forward. "It's quite all right. We have just opened the doors." He smiled apologetically. "But our guests seem to follow the Continental custom of breakfasting in their rooms."

He led the way to a table overlooking Central Park. "That man's a diplomat," commented Ladd. "He didn't bat an eye at your evening clothes." Mary smiled. "He used to work at Zelli's in Paris. He still thinks Americans wear their evening clothes at breakfast."

"But they've usually been for a drive through the Bois. And we've come from the morgue." Ladd studied the menu. "What about kippered herring or broiled kidneys? I think we've earned a man-sized breakfast after a night like that." "All right. I'll break my rule," Mary smiled. "I never take anything but orange juice and black coffee, but kippered herring is a weakness."

Ladd gave their orders to the waiter, then leaned back in his chair and lit a cigarette. "I'm at peace with the world," he said lazily. "Even if we haven't solved the mystery of Justice French and Duke Martin?" "Yes," he paused. He didn't know why but Mary seemed exceedingly pleasant to rest his eyes upon. "That doesn't mean I won't be raising the devil in another hour over it, but right now I'd rather think of you."

MARY didn't question his remark. Instead she looked out the window. Then she turned her eyes full on him. He had never appreciated their beauty before. They were like serene, dark, cool eyes. "And I would rather talk about you," she said. "I can't get her out of my mind." He liked her voice. It was rich and deep and throaty. "Talk about anything you want to," he said good-naturedly. "What do you think started Janice on her double life?"

BITTER as his thoughts were, they seemed constantly to be receding. His most vivid interest was not himself. Instead, he was ing drug from the Orient, called chaulmoogra oil. Some Carville inmates take it three times a day, others less frequently. All but a few of the 370 men, women, and children have taken gallons of the liquid. It is agreed that the oil in some cases retards the disease, but still more important in the doctors' minds are the old requisites of god health—rest, sun, fresh air, and nutritious food. At Carville the word "leper" is never heard. Besides being the United States' only leprosyarium, it is considered the best equipped in the world. Even with skilled medical minds devoted to the study of the Biblical scourge, definite progress in its cure has been long slow. Experiments with the rodents have only started. It is not known how the germ is contracted. The nearest theory to the answer is "through close contact, repeated over a long period." A child is born without it. However, if it remains with the mother a week—even at day—it may become afflicted. Babies Are Saved At the "sanitarium" new-born babies are taken away from their mothers. The "chain of contact"

But when he said goodby an hour later in front of her home it was with a curious sense of dissatisfaction. It did not comfort his ego that she had entirely forgotten him in the excitement of the French story. While her enthusiasm was a credit to her, it was hardly flattering in this instance. He repeated to himself that he was not in the least in love with her. No man could love a girl like that. They might be friends but never sweethearts. He was annoyed with her for making him realize this truth. Yet he could not get her out of his mind. Instead of taking the taxi to his apartment, he dismissed it and swung toward Fifth Avenue. He would walk home. He reached in his pocket for his pipe. As he puffed on it, he decided that he was suffering from nothing more than wounded vanity.

The morning air felt cool and crisp. He took a deep breath. It was going to be a lovely day. Cool, perhaps, but healthy after that stormy weather. He had not walked down Fifth Avenue in the morning for years. It recalled to him those first struggling days when he had come to New York a shy, eager boy, impatient for success. Women had not been different to his charm then, but could he say as much today? He frowned and reviewed his past. Born in Philadelphia, 40 years old. Unmarried. Set in his ways. Quick-tempered. Life started for him when he skipped the senior year in Harvard to enlist. Barely 19, he saw a month's fighting before the Armistice. He stayed in Paris and drifted into journalism. His first job was on the Herald. Then New York—the old World. The Sun.

He thought of the nights he'd worked till three and four in the morning as cable editor. He saw the copy desk. Heard the click of telegraph instruments and felt dog tired again as he recalled those tramps across town to the subway in the dawn, after the cables closed down. He remembered the sudden despair that had driven him to ship as a sailor on a boat bound for Syria. And he thought of the day two years later when he returned, tough, hardened and healthy, but broke, and slept in City Hall Park. The Gazette had taken him back. It gave him no satisfaction now to know that he was managing the paper. He puffed on his pipe. What had life made him—a misanthrope—a recluse?

Thoughtfully he began to undress, and then while he was still at the collar-removing stage, he reached for the telephone which connected directly with his office. "Hello, give me the city desk. Crossie, this is Ladd. Put in a call for Fenelon at 11:30. Have the operator switch it to this wire. If we're going to get Duke Martin, our game is the offensive from now on. He paused. "I've changed my mind. I want Mary Franklin to write a follow-up story on this French case for tomorrow."

While Carville waits on science to find a cure, the leper's lot is being improved in another way. A newly-instituted system of parole permits freedom to an ever-increasing number of the diseased. Fully a fifth of the inmates of Carville have passed through the gates again—their disease arrested. Meanwhile the tests go on—not to arrest the disease, but to cure it. Those who were once inside and now are outside are waiting on science, too, to keep them from returning to the cloistered oblivion inside the gates of Carville. Doctors here estimate that for every leper confined, there are two unconfined. They call this a conservative estimate.

Morris Ballew Is Moved To Bailinger Morris Ballew, who has been in the employ of J. C. Penney Store in Eastland for the past several years, has been transferred to Bailinger to act as assistant manager in the Penney store there. Ballew will leave Sunday to begin his new position Monday, it was announced today.

still thinking of Mary Franklin. There was that vague irritation in the back of his mind. He was curious about her life. It gave him a momentary pang to realize he knew little of it. Still thinking of her he started, as a familiar voice wished him good morning. The elevator man of his apartment house was speaking. His thoughts had carried him to his own door. His home, a four-room apartment on Lower Fifth Avenue, was pleasant but unpretentious. It had a large living room, bedroom, small study and kitchen. They contained nothing that was not essential but everything in them was right. Only the books he cared to keep were on the shelves. The furniture gave the same impression of having been selected with discrimination. The coloring of the rooms reflected his personality. In the living room, which ran the full length of the front of the apartment, the predominant tones were warm rust reds and deep browns. There was a great deal of crimson in the study and the walls of his bedroom were a light, cool, remote blue. He flung open the front windows. The atmosphere was stuffy after the fresh air he'd just filled his lungs with. Impatiently he started toward the kitchen. "Sam," he called. A door at the rear of the hall opened hurriedly and a black face appeared. "Yassuh, Mr. Tom."

"I'm going to bed. I don't want to be disturbed for two hours." A row of white teeth gleamed as a cheerful grin spread over Sam's black features. "Yassuh, Mr. Tom." Ladd smiled in appreciation of Sam's good-humor and the amount he learned. Now if he, Tom Ladd, had a wife she would train Sam in the little things that made a servant professional. Thoughtfully he began to undress, and then while he was still at the collar-removing stage, he reached for the telephone which connected directly with his office. "Hello, give me the city desk. Crossie, this is Ladd. Put in a call for Fenelon at 11:30. Have the operator switch it to this wire. If we're going to get Duke Martin, our game is the offensive from now on. He paused. CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SERVICES

Sunday School, 9:45 a. m. Morning worship, 11 a. m. Wednesday, testimonial service 8 p. m. Public cordially invited. "Soul and Body" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Church of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, May 21. The Golden Text is: "If thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day" (Isaiah 58:10).

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of darkness" (1 Thessalonians 5:5).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "As light destroys darkness and in the place of darkness all is light, so (in absolute Science) Soul, or God, is the only truth-giver to man." (page 72).

Paul Thinks in World Terms

Text: Romans 1:1-17

BY WILLIAM E. GILROY, D.D., Editor of Advance THE title of this lesson is in itself both suggestive and challenging—"Paul Thinks in World Terms." It ought to be easy to think in world terms in our day, when the world has become a world of closely related countries and communities, so brought together by transportation that around-the-world tours of fantastic imagination have long become a reality, and is bound still so much closer by intercommunication that the whole world can be sketched with a message in a few moments.

Yet, despite this bringing of the world into one community, how few of us think in world terms! "Isolationism" is a term in very common use, and it suggests an attitude that deliberately refuses to think in world terms. One should add, of course, that this is occasioned by the warmness of the world and the sincere questioning of many in this country whether we can help by becoming embroiled in the rivalries and conflicts of other nations.

BUT was Paul right in thinking in world terms? And if Paul was right, can the Christian ever be right unless he does think in world terms? Obviously, that Paul should have thought in world terms was much more wonderful than that anyone should think in world terms today. It was true that the whole world was unified under the Roman Empire, but travel and means of communication were slow and difficult. There was everything to make one, born

BY BRUCE CATTION WASHINGTON, D.C.—By the time the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice gets through with its investigation of the building industry, the general public ought to have a much clearer idea why it costs so much to build a house.

Most of the explanations so far offered are all right as far as they go—except that they are incomplete, as Justice Department officials see it. The high price of building materials is partly responsible—but only partly so. The same is true of the high cost of labor. The same is true of various other factors that are occasionally cited. And the whole investigation is something in the nature of a test case for a theory currently held at the department—that the way to restore competition and flexible price structures to any given industry is not by reaching out and bating down the heads of some single group of wrongdoers, but by making a concerted, all-around-the-line drive that will take all factors into account and strive to apply correctives to all simultaneously.

At least four fronts in the industry are under scrutiny. First, there are materials. The Federal Trade Commission is just now completing a case alleging a price-fixing agreement in cement. A year ago it made a similar study in respect to plate glass. Restraints of trade to keep material prices up has been alleged in a number of other cases at various times. Next comes distribution. The Federal Trade Commission has devoted a good deal of time to this field, also. Agreements to confine trade to keep material prices frequently charged. A manufacturer, for instance, may want to sell materials direct to large buyers. A local dealer's group may prevent it by threatening a boycott. Or it sometimes happens that such a local group will establish a list of "recognized" dealers, and bring pressure on any manufacturer who trades through any others.

Thirdly, there are the contractors. In some cases, contracting "rings" have been formed to exclude outside bidders. In others, contractors have maintained boycotts against direct-to-consumer sales. Sometimes bidding groups are organized, with all bids on a given job figured in one central office, and with advance agreement on which contractor is to be favored. The sort of thing occasionally has odd ramifications. In certain localities, it is said, it may be impossible for the architect to know the price of an appliance which he wants to specify for inclusion in a building; all he can find out is what the thing will cost installed by the contractor, and he has no way of knowing how much of that quoted price is the price of the appliance and how much is the contractor's fee. Lastly, there is labor. Here the number of complications is limited only by the limits on human ingenuity. Building trades unions in some localities reach understandings with contractors' rings, it is said, so that an outside contractor either cannot get labor at all or cannot get good labor. Unions frequently have restrictive rules forbidding work on certain sorts of material, the use of which involves less labor. The administration has a double-edged interest in this investigation. For one thing, it wants housing to lead the march toward business recovery, and it suspects that high building prices are delaying matters. For another, it has invested millions of dollars in the effort to get building financing costs down. Getting those costs down is more or less futile if all of the other costs go up.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD By William Ferguson

New Research To Aid Lepers Now Is A Possibility

CARVILLE, La.—There is revived hope and a new note of expectancy in this village, huddled behind a Mississippi river levee, for a fresh attack on leprosy has been started at the Carville leprosyarium. New experimentation has been made possible with the comparatively recent discovery that a Syrian rodent is susceptible to leprosy. Before there had been little chance to study the disease for there were no "guinea pigs" for scientific research. At the leprosy congress in Egypt, reports were made that this one animal is susceptible. A box filled with the squaking rodents was brought to the laboratories here—and the fight was on again, with a new method of attack. But, still, the fight has just begun, scientists say. For centuries the chief weapon in the fight has been an old-tast-
