Traffic Accidents Remain a Major Problem

Despite the fact that the year showed a reduction of practically one-fifth from the all-time high of 39,600 motor vehicle fatalities in 1937 and, further, despite the continuation of this downward trend through the current year, Earl J. Reeder, Chief Traffic Engineer of the National Safety Council, says that the problem of traffic accidents and fatalities remains as the most acute of the national epidemic of death. This fundamental fact was presented by Mr. Reeder at a joint meeting of the Illuminating Engineering Society, San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce, and the California Safety Council and was an important feature of the annual convention of the Illuminating Engineering Society recently held in San Francisco.

According to Mr. Reeder, nearly three-fourths of the fatalities occur during the hours of dusk and darkness while less than one-third of the traffic is on the highway. Even on rural roads, night accidents constitute more than the total. Though various causes contribute to this predominance of night deaths, Mr. Reeder says that it was the conclusion of the Committee on Night Traffic of the National Safety Council that the major factor was inadequate visibility under motor vehicles must be opened after dark.

Vehicle headlights, which must be in use to be the major source of lighting on rural highways, Reeder said, "are now being improved materially. In fact, new 'single package' headlamps designed to maintain uniform correct focus and clean lenses, is being applied to all automobile models of 1940. However, on major travelled highways and on all city streets, more efficient traffic conditions are such measures alone inadequate and it is in respect to those conditions that modern safety light becomes a necessity."

At the present time, most of the highways remain unlighted and a great portion of the light on city streets is thoroughly inadequate.

"Fucks are the bunk," Mrs. Woodfield said. "I've always eaten what I felt like."

Woodfield, however, criticizes the modern girl who "doesn't know what real love means."

"When I was a girl you married a man you loved because you had to spend your life with him today, well, the girls just like it. They haven't any brains and making a good wife is just thought."

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Full support of the National Cotton Council's efforts to have the Department of Agriculture take action to raise cottonseed prices has been pledged by eleven senators and thirty-one congressmen from the Cotton Belt. President Oscar Johnston announced today. Further messages of support are being received daily.

"It is imperative that the program for increasing seed prices be put into effect as once if it is to benefit cotton farmers," Mr. Johnston said, pointing out that further delay in announcing a program can result only in greater distress to the already stricken cotton farmer.

French Tanks Make Advance In Saar

PARIS, Sept. 6.—Unofficial dispatches reaching Paris today reported a French tank advance toward Saarbrücken and raids by 300 Allied planes on the Rhineland industrial sector. These developments were not mentioned specifically in the war communiques, which merely reported advances.

A dispatch from Luxembourg said the French forces supported by tanks had penetrated the German lines in the direction of Saarbrücken, which is in the Saar basin on the Reich frontier.

GERMAN AIR ATTACK UPON LONDON FAILS

Germany's aerial armada struck at England and fell back before a curtain of anti-aircraft guns and pursuit planes.

Twenty German bombers flashed across the North Sea at dawn, heading up the Thames River toward the British naval dockyards at Chatham, and the vast metropolitan area of London beyond.

Air raid sirens wailed in London and nearby areas. The silver balloons barrage defending London swung against a windless sky.

Then, along the coast, the first line of air defense opened up and little Spitfire fighting craft charged the invading fleet.

One German craft was believed downed. A British announcement later said two British planes were disabled.

But the German fleet turned back and "did not penetrate our defenses at any point," the ministry of information announced.

Great Britain opened a campaign against Nazi submarines in the North Sea, the English Channel and along the Atlantic Coastal areas, reporting warships had attacked several U-boats. Three German ships were sunk and the British lost a merchant vessel, the Basnia, which was shelled by a submarine.

CENTER, Tex., Sept. 6.—The village of Neuville, nine miles from here, was without its postmistress and her assistant today, as funeral plans were arranged for the two women who were shot to death in the post office yesterday.

Mrs. T. P. Worsham, postmistress, was shot twice in the back as she stood at her cash drawer. She died instantly. Mrs. Albert B. Shaw, her assistant, died from a bullet wound through the heart.

Justice of the Peace John J. Carroll returned a verdict of murder and suicide.

Burglars Prefer A Round Of Drinks To $1,800 In Cash

SAINT JOHN, N. B.—The burglars who entered a government liquor store here preferred whisky to money.

There was about $1,800 in the store's safe, but they made no attempt to get it. The burglars broke through the skylight of an adjoining store and then found that a brick wall, a foot and a half thick, intervened between them and the liquor store.

They tunneled a hole through the solid wall of brick and finally made their way into the store. They ignored the safe and the cash register and centered their efforts on the shelves.

The next morning several empty bottles were found on the floor. About $10 worth of liquor was missing.

Goebbels, Tribuna, and the Human Spirit

In Venice stands the Doges' Palace, quiet museum filled with relics of a day when free Venetian citizens voted for the head of a free republic, 400 years before us.

Not long ago, Joseph Goebbels, German propaganda minister, visited the place, and intent on pleasing his Italian hosts, remarked, "This boasts a history more famous than that of the whole U. S." His Italian hosts were so overwhelmed by the tribute of the great man that a paper called the Tribuna sneeringly said that if the whole continent of North America were wiped out the history of the human spirit would scarcely suffer.

The human spirit is getting a pretty bad kicking around these days, as none should know better than Goebbels and his Italian admirers, whose most outstanding contributions would seem to be the rubber truncheon and castor-oil bottle. But that is not under discussion here.

Has all North America, as they say, contributed nothing to the human spirit? It is a fair question, and one we might well ask ourselves, had they not gratuitously done so.

Surely the conquest of a virgin continent by free men who made it and all its institutions their own, is not a nullity, nor are the Declaration of Independence, the Ordinance of 1787, the Constitution they ordained a string of ciphers. Surely the fresh, free wind that blew across the world with Emancipation, the saga of the Winning of the West, swept some miasmas from the spirit of men.

Did Emerson, and Whitman, and Poe, Mark Twain and Emily Dickinson write in vain?

Did Brigham Young, toiling to found at once an inland empire and a new religion, leave never a mark upon the world of spirit? Are they bemused who are about to make of Mother Seton a saint of the very Roman Catholic Church to which so many readers of the Tribuna no doubt belong?

Have free and open minds throughout the world been unaffected by Henry and William James, by Henry Adams, by Alfred North Whitehead and John Dewey? It is said that many, even in Europe, have not been entirely unmoved before the work of Whistler, of Homer, of Sargent, of St. Gaudens.

Trajan built well, but against the sweetish marble wedding cake of today's Victor Emmanuel Memorial one may without shame set Rockefeller Center.

Had the world been ready, and able to comprehend the dream of Woodrow Wilson for a sane, civilized world order, it might not today be plunging down to dust and the shadow.

These, among others, are perhaps not without meaning for the development of the human spirit.

And most significant of all, is the Americas we are still determined to keep open the door that leads to its further advancement, to keep the lamps alight and shield them from the blasts of Europe where, one by one, they flicker out, leaving a darkness upon the face of the earth.

They're teaching young peasant women to drive tractors in Russia. Now the poor pedestrian won't even be safe in the fields.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON
NBA Service Staff Correspondent
CONCORD, N. H.—Senator H. Styles Bridges of New Hampshire is, at this writing, the most active candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. He is also just a little bit bewildered—and he admits it frankly.

What has him puzzled is this liberal-conservative business. He says he always looked on himself as a liberal in politics; made a record here as a foe of the utilities, and got into the U. S. Senate by beating the arch-conservative, George H. Moses.

But now, after three years in Washington, he finds himself dubbed an ultra-conservative.

Bridges' liberalism is of the old-fashioned variety. He believes in strict public control of the utilities, but not in public ownership. He goes for the SEC and he approves of most of the New Deal's social security program. He is proud of the fact that New Hampshire was the first state to register under the social security act and the second state to set up an unemployment insurance law.

He isn't one of these let's-get-out-of-this-relief-business people, either. He says that "you can't just say, 'we'll turn it all back to the states,' and believes that the federal government must carry the load as long as the need exists—although he'd like to see much control by the local subdivisions.

For the rest, he says: "You go along for every-

HISTORY OF THE APPLE

The apple dates back to the very dawn of history. It has been frequently called the "Fruit of Discord," as so many unhappy disasters in history and legend have been connected with it. All are familiar with the fall of Adam and Eve. An apple is usually supposed to have been the forbidden fruit.

The apple is frequently but wrongly, supposed to be a native variety of England. There was a native variety, but it was small in size, and inferior in flavor.

The Roman conquerors brought a superior variety with them when they conquered the Britons. They having received it from the Orient. Henry the VII was especially fond of apples, and his gardener cultivated extensive orchards. Shakespeare referred to the apple as "Pippens," so called as they are raised from the pip or seed. Apple cider was first made in England and was for many years the native beverage.

The apple was introduced into New England by the early settlers. It took kindly to its new home, and its cultivation spread from colony to colony as the country grew. So delicious were the pippens of Virginia their fame spread across the water to the very ears of the king himself, and a yearly tribute to him was exacted for the Royal table.

Speaking of apples makes us think of the great American dessert, apple pie. From what particular lineage we get our pie complex we do not know. The New Englanders are probably the greatest pie eaters in the world.

The English epicure, so far as we have been informed, is also strong for pie, but its meat pie! That is not the kind we mean when we speak of pie. We mean apple pie and after that, pumpkin pie, with mince a close runner.

In my opinion apple pie perfectly made, and accompanied by a good slice of American cheese justly ripened, is about the most perfect concoction, in the way of a sweet to follow an appetizing dinner, that can be found. Apple sauce has been a favorite dish in this country from earliest days. There are so many delicious ways to serve this good sauce, and what is apple sauce if its not for fried pies, served piping hot they are really foods for the Gods.

Poland Claims To Have Bombed Nazi Capitol From Air

WARSAW, Sept. 6.—The Polish army general staff announced today, as German troops blasted their way to within 31 miles of the capitol, that 30 Polish airplanes had bombed Berlin and returned to their bases without the loss of a single plane.

The communique said that "enemy aviators yesterday continued their aerial brutality, bombing towns, stations and columns of fleeing refugees on the roads."

The general staff communique said there had been no change on the east Prussian front, that in the southwest Poles were "holding back rushing numbers of the enemy," that Polish troops still were holding the part of Gdynia and 14 German and six Polish airplanes had been shot down yesterday.

MURDER NAMED FOR DICKINSON

BERKELEY, Cal.—Robert Engers and Miss Marjorie, local muralist, had just completed a huge mural, entitled "Street Brawl," and which was all if not more than its name indicated, when Gov. Luren D. Dickinson of Michigan started his "sin-slaming." They at once renamed the mural "Dickinson's Dream of Washington."

thing in the New Deal, you're a conservative these days. If you want to go part way—admire some of the measures, but just want them modified a little—why, you're not a liberal at all, but a rank reactionary. Anyway, that seems to be the way they figure it down in Washington.

Meanwhile, he is hard at work setting up his political fences both in New England and in the rest of the country. He isn't looking for pledged delegations, believes, from work now done and contacts made, that he'll go to the convention with New Hampshire's votes and with a good scattering from the rest of New England, plus some outside strength.

"I think the important thing for this convention," he says, "is that it be not tied up in advance for some one candidate. Republican conventions have been cut and dried that way since 1920. Next year, I hope no one man will have an overwhelming preponderance of strength before the convention opens. Then the delegates can consider all the candidates, weigh all the issues and make the best choice possible."

If that choice should turn out to be Bridges, the senator naturally would be gratified. But he has no illusions about the likelihood of a man from a small New England state being chosen.

He is not interested in the chance of getting second place on the ticket, but does want to be able to make his influence felt in the direction of getting a candidate of his own variety of—well, liberalism—named.

SERIAL STORY

WORKING WIVES

BY LOUISE HOLMES

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, Marian Harpess, successful private secretary, was unable to understand why her husband, Dan, has lost his money...

CHAPTER II

MARIAN went back to the bedroom. Painstakingly, she washed her lips with tangerine...

Dolly lived in one of the small apartment houses across the hall. She was the widow of Dan's father...

"Hello, there," Marian called. She had trained the harsh tones of her voice, it was low and fluted.

"Good morning—how nice you look, Marian—but you always look nice." With cheerful envy Dolly served Marian's smart sophistication.

Dolly was short and round and very pretty in a sweet, comfortable way. Although she was 28, there was an air of youth about her...

"As long as she can manipulate figures she doesn't need a figure."

"The telephone buzzed and Marian answered."

"Marian—this is Carma."

"Oh, yes, Carma—when did you get back?"

"A week ago."

"Why haven't you called me for lunch?"

"Possibly Carma had found a suitable winter outfit for her."

"Yes, Dan told me."

"I've got to see you. Meet me for lunch, will you?"

"Of course—12:30—I'll reserve the corner table at Jaques."

Replacing the instrument, Marian attacked the mail, sifting the envelopes and glancing at the contents.

"Perhaps Sally should be given a little more opportunity," she said, putting out a feather.

"I think so."

She couldn't let it go at that. On the other hand, she said thoughtfully, "I don't know as it says to spend too much time on the young girls. You get them trained, get to depending on them, and about that time they leave to be married."

Grant Fellows was either completely sold on Sally or in an argumentative mood.

"You left to be married," he said. "You tried it out, but you came back after about so long. And you were mighty glad to get back, if I remember rightly."

"I wouldn't be here today if Dan had been able to get anywhere in the business world."

MR. FELLOWS leaned back in his chair, touching his fingers...

For an instant Marian's eyes, flashing resentment, rested on Sally. "I'll call you if we need you," she said, her soft voice betraying her feelings.

office of the Grant Fellows Brokerage Firm, speaking graciously to the telephone operator, the manager a few years back. The head of his company talked enthusiastically about him to me.

"I don't know—exactly," Marian did know, she remembered the incident with bitterness. There had been a question as to whether Dan or Sims Crane should receive the sales managership. The fact that Sims had a dependent wife and two children had tipped the scales in his favor.

"How's he getting along now?" Mr. Fellows persisted.

"Just the same," she said. "He makes just what he did when we were married. He was cut during the depression—that's when I came back to work. Now he's drawing $35 a week again."

"That's pretty good, considering the times. Mighty few of us are making what we were 12 years ago." It was a surprising observation and Marian felt something behind it.

"But we couldn't live on it—" "Sure you could. Thousands of families in this country live on much less. It just takes a little management. There's a budget to fit every income."

Marian wrinkled her nose disdainfully. "Budget—I hate the very sound of the word."

"Too many modern women feel like that. It's the answer to the ever-increasing number of women in offices and stores."

Marian stared at him. Was he paving the way to tell her that she had a husband who earned that her place should be given to a girl who was dependent upon herself? In the present economic stress there was a trend that way.

MARIAN'S heart beat sickeningly. Grant Fellows had never before talked like this. In fact, he had been quite instrumental in helping Marian out of her role as homemaker.

Had Sally Blake put the revolver...

streaked Dan would be happier, though I doubt it," she said, with an edginess in her tone which had become noticeable during the past year, the year since Sally's coming to the office.

"I've stopped up my way of living and I can't come down."

"How do you know you'd have to stay down?" He did have something in his mind. Apprehension made Marian's hands unsteady.

"I've an idea that if Dan were on his own—if it were up to him—he'd surprise you by getting somewhere."

Mr. Fellows leaned toward her, shaking a finger impressively. "Listen, my dear—you've done everything to hold Dan back. You've robbed him of his rightful place in society, the head of a home. You've shown him up, as it were, shamed him before his fellow men."

Marian could not take her stricken eyes from his face. They were stricken with fear, not self-condemnation. She refused to admit the truth in Mr. Fellows' pronouncement.

He continued. "I'll tell you something. A man will work his fingers to the bone, he'll do without everything he wants in the world, to provide for his wife. All he asks in return is that she think him wonderful—think him the big boy. Have you ever let Dan imagine for one moment that he is wonderful?"

Marian said nothing. There had been a time when she thought Dan wonderful, when she believed in him. Her memory carried her back to those happy days. Could she ever hope to have that same confidence in Dan again? That same unselfish love?

But you could only believe so long. After unending disappointment you gave up, you gave up whether you wanted to or not. Angry tears stung behind her eyes. Grant Fellows turned back to his desk.

"Let the little Blake girl take my dictation today," he said. (To Be Continued)

Dixie Gilger Named To Assist Students At John Tarleton

Dixie Gilger of Ranger has been selected by Dean J. Thomas Davis of John Tarleton College as one of the outstanding students of that institution to welcome and assist the new students during registration September 11 and 12. In this capacity those so honored will meet the new students at the trains and buses, assist them in finding their rooming and boarding places, and during the process of registration. In his letter to these student leaders, Dean Davis emphasized the importance of the assignment by stating:

"There is no greater responsibility than this student contact. New students will need a friend immediately, and this is what I am hoping you will be in deed and in truth. I am not interested in the 'slushy-washy' kind of friends; but in persons who are willing to render genuine and unselfish service to those who need it, and surely new students need a friend to get them through the first few days of school."

from Texarkana, recently spoke of Congressman Sam Rayburn of Houston, majority leader in the House, as the "strongest dark horse in the nation." Rayburn, himself, to the surprise of some persons, recently announced that he would support Garner for the presidential nomination. Rayburn managed Garner's campaign at the 1932 national convention.

As majority leader, Rayburn has been a New Deal leader in Congress, and it is no secret that a considerable portion of the New Deal phalanx thinks Garner is too conservative to follow Franklin D. Roosevelt into the White House.

Maury Maverick, former New Deal congressman who now is hitting the headlines as mayor of San Antonio, is in the anti-Garner lineup. Maverick has criticized Garner's candidacy on the ground that he is "too old" and declared that a third term for Mr. Roosevelt was essential.

Most of the state's politicians, however, are Garner men and women. E. B. Germany, chairman of the state Democratic committee, has been sounding out Garner sentiment in other states. Texans everywhere are "talking Garner"—including State Rep. Frico Danell of Liberty, president of Young Democratic Clubs in Texas.

The national young Democratic convention, prohibited from endorsing any political candidate, passed a resolution declaring that a "liberal" must be elected to the presidency.

Owlsh Vice President Garner, meanwhile, sits in the chair given to him by admiring U. S. senators, from which he can conduct a "front porch" campaign—and says nothing.

HOSPITAL NOTES

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan McGowan announce the birth of a baby girl, Judy Kay, Tuesday morning at the West Texas hospital.

Jimmie Webb, son of Mr. and Mrs. Weldon Webb, underwent an emergency appendectomy at the City-County hospital Tuesday night.

Further on, they come into the granite-laid rotunda that is open to the top of the capitol dome, and most bend over backward to get the proper effect.
Those who come to the second floor usually visit the spacious House of Representatives chamber. About 200 of them register each day in the guest book, walk back to the speakers' dia which has for a background the faded original flag carried by the Texans at San Jacinto.
After somebody explains to them the operation of the electric vote tabulating machine, they wander around the hall looking at paintings of Texas patriots and photographs of past legislatures.
The visitors come from every state in the union and many foreign countries, although the foreign tourists have been fewer this season than for any season in several years. Threat of war is keeping nationals close to their homes.
The biggest influx of foreign tourists was in 1936, the year of Texas Centennial celebrations. Despite the war crisis, the guest book of the House of Representatives has been signed by visitors from Mexico, Canada and Australia.

Inside the building, the visitors usually inspect first the painting of Gen. Santa Anna's surrender to the wounded Gen. Sam Houston after the battle of San Jacinto. Then they peer into the little niches that house the original documents of the Texas constitution and Declaration of Independence.

Paralysis Is Termed A Summer Disease By Health Officer

AUSTIN, Tex.—Infantile paralysis, like typhoid fever and intestinal disturbances of infants, is largely a summer disease. Although cases may occur during and month of the year, over half of the total number occur during July, August, September and October. To date, 109 cases of poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) have been reported to the Texas State Department of Health in 1939.

Direct contact between persons is regarded as being the chief factor in the spread of infantile paralysis. Because of the seasonal prevalence of the disease, flies and other insects have been suspected of conveying the virus or germ. Insect transmission has not, however, been scientifically proven. Although animals are subject to paralysis, they are seemingly not susceptible to the human type of this paralytic disease. Carriers are difficult to determine; this fact makes advisable the reduction to a minimum of human contacts during an outbreak.

Early symptoms of infantile paralysis comprise headache, fever, vomiting, intestinal disorder, drowsiness and irritability, followed by neck or back stiffness. Prompt medical care, early recognition and reporting of cases to health authorities make possible the use of valuable preventive and control measures.
