What Is the World to Be Like After the War?

Is it silly to begin to wonder, even now, what the world is to be like after the European War? The fighting has scarcely commenced, and, except in Poland, there really hasn't been any on a large scale. And yet, even at this stage of the game, it may be wise to begin fixing our eyes on the world that is to be afterward. This war, like all wars, must end some time. The world will go on. What will have been accomplished?

It depends, of course, on who wins, if anybody can be said to win a modern war. It is more than possible that nobody will win in the sense of the elimination of the whole races and peoples. All the root-problems of Europe will remain to be solved.

Up to now, neither side has published official summaries of "war aims" in the sense of a program it hopes to accomplish after the war. The British White Paper and its German counterpart are simply the usual efforts to say, in involved diplomatic language, "He started it!" and "No, he did!"

Th ifs and might-have-beens are all past now. It has started, and the world is where it is. The British-French position is simply that a world is intolerable in which there is no international law and only naked force and the threat of it govern the relations between nations. The Germans' position is that they were unjustly oppressed after the World War, denied their natural position in the world, and that they are going to achieve it by whatever force is necessary. Behind these high-sounding statements lies the simple fact that the Germans and the French-British alliance are rivals for the control of Europe, and that neither will be satisfied until the other is eliminated.

Does either side extend even a valid promise that after peace comes it will help to construct a peaceful Europe run on a sane system, in which justice will be available to every country without fighting for it? Not that we have seen thus far.

It is probably too early for that. Yet it is a thing not to be forgotten. The men who settle this war must do better than Versailles. There is something to the German contention that after Versailles they could get no justice from the League of Nations because of British-French domination. Neither is there anything in German policy during the past 10 years which promises Europe and the world anything better than a continual international dog-fight.

It is certainly clear that Europe must be reorganized after this war.

Is it to be done by a victorious Germany to suit itself? Or by a victorious British-French coalition to suit themselves? An example of the second alternative has been seen since 1919, and it hasn't worked very well. An example of the first could scarcely fail to be even worse.

If the people of Europe, let alone peoples across the seas, are to be expected to support a long war, they must be offered something better—something very much better.

So far no such hope has been offered by either side.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON.—Although retail food prices are shooting up, the farmer is still getting a good deal less than the "parity" price which the Department of Agriculture has set as a fair level. Price rises to date, as the department experts see it, are justified only by a war psychology. These experts assert that: There is no shortage of any important foodstuff in America. If there is going to be a big increase in demand due to the war, it has not shown up as yet. There is, in fact, a surplus of food in practically all lines. The war psychology is working in two ways, as the department figures it. It causes consumers to buy heavily, either in fear of a shortage or in fear of further price increases; and it causes retailers and distributors to mark up their prices for much the same reasons. If you have been affected by this war psychology, consider these facts: 1.—Right now the department officially lists as "surplus commodities" butter, shell eggs, corn meal, dried prunes, dry beans, flour (both white and whole wheat), rice, cabbage, fresh tomatoes, fresh green peas, onions (except green onions), fresh peaches, and fresh pears. To dispose of these commodities the government is spending huge sums, through the famous stump plan. In other words, there's a glut and some of your tax money is being spent to remove it. 2.—The department's latest estimates of prospective supply, domestic consumption and probable exports show that this country has more than it needs of these staple foodstuffs: fresh meats, poultry, eggs, butter, lard, wheat, corn, rice, sugar, canned fruits and fruit juices, dried fruits, potatoes, and beans. 3.—If the war abroad is going to lead to an increased European demand for American foodstuffs, the demand is not to appear for some time—longer by the course of things in the last war, at least. Then the price of U. S. farm products actually went slightly downward during the first year of the war; not until 1916 did European demand increase enough to send American farm prices above the 1914 level. Furthermore, while retail prices are going up, the farmer is still far under parity. The average July price for wheat, for instance, was 55.7 cents a bushel; average July price for 1910-1914, inclusive, was 86 cents; parity (which is simply the level which the department figures would be fair all around) is $1.11. Since July wheat prices have gone up, so that now they are around the 1910-1914 average—still a long way below parity. Much the same thing is true of the other staples. And while the department a good deal of concern, the department would hate to see any rise in farm prices checked unless and until parity is reached. On Sept. 19, Secretary Wallace's Agricultural Advisory Council meets here to see what can be done about the retail price situation. The secretary hopes to avoid any arbitrary price-fixing program. What he is looking for is some co-operative plan reached by agreement with farmers, processors, and distributors to keep prices within reasonable limits. Meanwhile, the Department of Justice is studying the situation, to see what legislation may be needed to check "profiteering." With the laws now on the books, there is very little the department can do about excessive mark-ups.

Deere's First Plow Is In Smithsonian

WASHINGTON - One of the first three plows made by John Deere for the corn belt has been added to the agricultural history collections of the Smithsonian Institution. It is exhibited as representative of an important forward movement in development west of the Appalachians. In 1837, a Vermont blacksmith, destined to become a influential farm implement manufacturer, followed the westward flow of pioneers to Grand Detour, Ill. Upon opening his shop there, John Deere found the settlers discouraged by the difficulty they had breaking tough prairie land with soft plows designed for New England and Virginia soil. Deere improvised a new plow, able to withstand prairie conditions, out of a steel sheet cut from an old mill saw—the only steel available. He attached the share to handles and a beam cut from white oak rails. As news of the new plow spread over the expanding territory, orders poured in in such quantity that Deere and his partner soon gave up general blacksmithing for plow manufacturing. The business grew until in 1846 Deere supervised production of 1,000 plows. The new industry mushroomed so rapidly Deere found it impossible to obtain enough steel in the United States, and was forced to order large shipments from England. Meantime, the plant was moved from Grand Detour to Moline, Ill. Soon after, Deere's negotiations with Pittsburg steel manufacturers brought about the first manufacture of plow steel in the United States.

"OUT OUR WAY"

Answers to FOOD PROBLEMS

Since Hitler has marched, the price of many commodities entering into our store for the consumption of our many customers, have risen with a tendency to soar. We think this is unwarranted, certainly at present. We wish to resist it by any means available. Still we feel sure that the people of this community whom we serve can readily see that any single concern serving the people cannot definitely cope against a hysterical mass movement.

Therefore, we would like to impress upon our good friends and customers that although we would be loath to do so, yet present prices are as low as our usual policy of 'SAVE AT PIGGLY WIGGLY' can make them, we may be compelled to increase them when repurchasing from the manufacturer.

At a time like this when all the world is keyed to a high pitch of expectancy, it is no time to suggest hoarding, yet the average needs of any family can rightfully be protected. With this in mind we extend our sincere cooperation by giving you values today that may seem like tremendous savings to you tomorrow. Our present excitement as to commodity prices has only been agitated and incited by what all of you are familiar with through the columns of your newspapers and radio announcers. PIPKIN'S PIGGLY WIGGLY WILL ALWAYS HAVE IN MIND THE BEST INTERESTS OF OUR CUSTOMERS WHO HAVE MADE OUR BUSINESS SUCCESSFUL AND ASSURE YOU THAT WE WILL NOT CONDUCT OUR BUSINESS ON A SPECULATIVE BASIS AT THE EXPENSE OF OUR VALUED CUSTOMERS.

CHAPTER XV

MARIAN waited for Dan to come back. He'd walk over to the lake, around several blocks, and back.

With his departure, her anger had turned to miserable ashes. She remembered her insane statements with horror.

Dan returned at the end of an hour. Quietly, he hung his hat in the closet.

"I'm sorry, Dan," she said. "It's all right." He passed her and went to the bedroom.

She longed to talk to him, to tell him about Sally Blake who was slowly, but surely, making headway with her subtle oyster methods.

Did she want that? Did she honestly want to start again where they had left off 10 years ago?

Warily, she laid her head against the back of the chair. No, that wasn't the answer.

What had Dan said? She had told him he was a spineless worm who never turned.

Turner's office. Marian left a message for him to call her.

CHAPTER XVI

MARIAN opened her eyes and looked dazedly about. She was lying on the red leather couch in Mr. Fellows' conference room.

Miss Herrod was leaning over her, sympathy in her pale eyes. She was holding a bit of cold wet gauze to Marian's temple.

Marian tried to sit up and weakly dropped back. "Well, for goodness sake," she said, half laughing.

"Shall I call the doctor, Mr. Fellows?" Sally asked breathlessly. "She's terribly white, she looks sick."

He hesitated and Marian caught at Sally's hand. "Don't send for the doctor," she said firmly. "I'm all right."

"I don't like it," Mr. Fellows growled. "I don't like it at all. You've never fainted, Marian."

"She laughed, smoothing her hair. "And I never celebrated a 12th wedding anniversary before. It lasted all night—you know how those things are—"

He sent Miss Herrod and Sally from the room and sat down beside Marian. "Was it something I said this morning? Fraid I was pretty tough on you."

"Absolutely not, G. F. I was pretty saucy myself." "Maybe you need a rest."

"If you'll keep it a secret, I'll tell you what ails me," she laughed. "I didn't eat my breakfast."

"So that's it." His tone showed his relief. "Shall I have something sent in? I'll be glad to."

BREAKFAST was a tense meal. Dan speaking politely when necessary, offering nothing. Marian did not touch her breakfast.

"I guess he was in a hurry. Have a good time last night?" "Simply won-derful," Dolly sighed.

"Oh, hello, I didn't see Dan go down." So Dan was that low in spirit, too low for a greeting to Dolly.

"I told Florence she couldn't have a raise," Marian said quietly. It was the wrong thing to say.

"And who has a better right?" Marian leaned toward him, her eyes spitting fire.

"Of course, I'm fine." She went slowly down the stairs and out into the murky morning.

"Dan waited and she got into the car. Not a word was said on the drive downtown.

EVERYTHING went wrong at the office that morning. Sally Blake was too radiant, too young and joyous.

"Your wedding anniversary—nice—how many years?" "Twelve."

"Gracious." Mr. Fellows nodded without his usual smile.

"Anything wrong, G. F.?" she had brought her back, instinct made her chin go up, squared her shoulders.

"No, I've been right here." Marian put her hat in the transparent box.

"What goes on?" he asked. "I told you to take a rest." She glanced up brightly.

"He gave me a nasty nerve tonic, wrinkling her straight little nose." "He said I was just about the 'wildest' person it had ever been his privilege to meet."

"The doctor had said something like that. He had said, 'You are in excellent condition, Mrs. Harkness. There's no reason why the young man's coming should disturb you much.'"

"Without thinking, she had said, 'But it must be a girl.' The doctor had roared.

"So the young man's coming wouldn't disturb her much—so she'd take what the gods sent—Marian bit her lip until pain broke across her thoughts.

"So the young man's coming wouldn't disturb her much—so she'd take what the gods sent—Marian bit her lip until pain broke across her thoughts.

Italy Will Speed Up Natives' Return

By United Press
ROME.—While the program initiated by Foreign Minister Galeazzo Ciano for the repatriation of Italian living abroad has not been as successful as it was originally hoped, more than 11,000 families have returned to their homeland since last February.

They have come from countries classified by the organizing committee as "Zone A," that is, countries nearest to Italy and territory being actively pushed further ahead now. It is hoped that 100,000 families will have returned.

The special measures designed to take care of those who are repatriated are said to be entirely satisfactory. Upon returning to what is called the Duce's bounty, which amounts to $50 for every

Historian Declares Stars Upon Barns Is Not A Hex Sign

TELFORD, Pa.—A popular belief that a star painted on Pennsylvania-Dutch barns put a "hex" on cattle has been denounced by John D. Soaders, 75, Menonite historian and president of the Pennsylvania Historical Society.

"The Menonites and other early settlers of Pennsylvania came across the sea for religious reasons," Soaders said. "The barn symbols are nearly all derived from the star or tulip design. The tulip is a simplified version of the Rose of Sharon."

"From the Bible the early settlers took literally the quotation of Christ's statement, 'I am the Morning Star and the Rose of Sharon.' Thus, they interpreted him as saying these beauties of nature are shining examples of divinity in everything."

"The settlers felt their religious urge so deeply that they wanted to advertise it to the world. Here was their first chance. Living in a free country they could paint their bold symbols in bright colors upon their red barns. They are not hex signs."

Manufacturing In Texas On Rise

AUSTIN, Tex.—Even before war clouds rolling in from Europe electrified American industry, Texas manufacturing concerns speeded up their output and boosted August weekly payrolls 5.9 per cent above July and 3.3 per cent over August last year.

Reports to The University of Texas Bureau of Business Research show payrolls of Texas factories totaled $2,534,532 last month.

Briskness of all the gains was recorded in furniture manufacturing, payrolls in that bracket jumping 25.7 per cent above July and 40.5 per cent above August.

Other manufacturing industries showed smaller increases—planing mills 2.6 per cent and 13.5 per cent; paper products 6 and 19.2 per cent; brick and tile, 8.8 and 12.3 per cent; cement 4.1 and 11.5 per cent; and foundries and machine shops 19.3 and 12.8 per cent.

Petroleum refining gained 6.1 per cent over July but shaded down 1 per cent below August last year.

Non-manufacturing groups made much less favorable showings, bringing the total weekly payroll increase for the state to only 2.2 per cent above July and 1.8 per cent over August, bureau statisticians said.

Bulldogs Win Over San Antonio Tech By 13-0 Thursday

Ranger's Bulldogs got over the second hurdle of their 1939 football schedule Thursday night at San Antonio, when they defeated San Antonio Technical High School by a score of 13 to 0.

The game was played earlier in the week than originally scheduled because of conflicts in the schedules at San Antonio. Last Friday night the Bulldogs won from Ysleta at El Paso in a driving rain, then, with only a few days of rest, took on the San Antonio team.

W. T. Walton, superintendent of the Ranger schools, telegraphed the score at the conclusion of the game, adding that all scores were made in the last half, and none was injured.

Federal Loans On Homes Aggregate Many Millions

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Loans aggregating $17,114,276 have been made at 8,587 Texas home owners since January 1st by the 121 insured savings and loan associations in the state. Approximately one half of the funds loaned were used by Texans to build new homes, according to the report of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Little Rock which serves the home financing institutions in this area.

During August the associations loaned $2,117,981, which was a half million dollar increase over the volume of lending done in August 1938. Month by month, the Bank reported, the lending volume of the Texas associations has been steadily growing, and the first eight months of this year shows an increase of $3,428,000 as compared with the same period a year ago. Included in the review prepared by the Bank are the figures of the First Federal Savings and Loan Association in Ranger by which the local area is served.

The value of the savings and loan associations to the state was stressed by officials of the Bank in pointing out the widespread service the institutions render. They stated that the 8,587 loans made since January 1st were for an average amount of approximately $2,000 and are repayable over a long period of time, secured by homes of modest size. While half of the loans were made to assist Texans to build new houses, other loans totaling $4,078,000 were granted to help purchasers pay for existing dwellings. Additional loans aggregating $3,071,000 were made to 1,780 borrowers who took advantage of the lending terms offered by the insured associations to refinance their existing loans on a more favorable basis.

Even though the volume of lending has shown a marked increase, the associations are reported to have ample additional funds available for more home financing loans. Their cash receipts from savers and investors have been steadily gaining for the past two years and their collections on loans are excellent, the Bank report stated.

Funds placed in the insured associations are guaranteed against
