SEA WARFARE IN WIDE AREA HAS QUICKENED

By United Press
BUENOS AIRES, Oct. 2.—Embassy officials said today that 13 survivors from the steamship Clement had been picked up by a coastwise ship and would be landed at Bahia Bahin, probably tomorrow. The Clement carried 48 or 49 men.

By United Press
BAHIA, Brazil, Oct. 2.—Advice received here today asserted that the British steamer Clement had been sunk by a German pocket battleship.

The report would indicate the Nazis had succeeded in slipping through the British blockade. Messages from London expressed belief that if a pocket battleship were in the South Atlantic it might be the Admiral Scheer.

By United Press
LONDON, Oct. 2.—The admiralty warned all ships in the South Atlantic today to take precautions against attack by a mysterious German sea raider after the steamer Clement had been sunk by an unidentified heavily armed vessel.

It was understood the Clement was sunk by gunfire 70 miles off the Brazilian coast.

By United Press
STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Oct. 2.—The Swedish steamer Dan was torpedoed and sunk Sunday off Jutland and her crew of 18 was rescued by a Danish steamer, it was learned today.

By United Press
COPENHAGEN, Denmark, Oct. 2.—Eleven men were killed Sunday when a German submarine torpedoed the Danish steamer Vendia, 1,150 tons, in the North Sea. Six men were saved.

EUROPE READY FOR WAR ON A BIGGER SCALE

By United Press
Europe's belligerents, anticipating failure of the German-Soviet peace ultimatum, settled down to war with all their resources.

As the second month of war got underway a perhaps final bid for peace by Hitler, probably through Italy, was expected, but Britain and France already had turned it down.

On the fighting fronts every move intensified determination of both sides to fight to the finish.

On the high seas a German raider appeared in the South Atlantic and sank the 5050-ton British freighter Clement.

On the Baltic front Russia moved to consolidate its hold on Estonia by "inviting" the foreign minister of Latvia to Moscow to discuss leasing naval and air bases to Russia. The invitation accepted immediately, indicated that Latvia would follow the course of Estonia.

Turkey, at the opposite Russian frontier, apparently was maintaining a middle course. Although long a close ally of the Soviet, Turks went ahead with an alliance with Britain and France.

Adolf Hitler, who addresses the Reichstag this week, was scheduled to deliver a final "peace ultimatum" to the allies. The next step, assuming the allies turn down their peace offer, would be war with all the German strength and all the aid Hitler may be able to get from Russia and Italy.

Britain let the world know she was ready, except the allies believe Russia will grab what she can, and fail to give Hitler military support. King George summoned 300,000 more men for military training.

On the Western front small scale operations continued, with the French pushing ahead at strategic points.

At Silverton Herbert Street, a WPA foreman and his father-in-law, C. E. Wilson of Lubbock, were burned to death. Mrs. Street and her daughter were burned, the elder woman seriously. Both were taken to a Plainview hospital.

PITTMAN SAYS EMBARGO IS BIG HANDICAP

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—Sen. Key Pittman, declared today that the present neutrality law handicaps America in her determination to stay out of the war.

Opening a momentous senate debate on neutrality law revision, Pittman centered attack on provision of the present act which prohibits American ships to carry any goods except arms to the warring nations. He urged repeal of the arms embargo, which he said was not a true symbol of American neutrality.

"The danger to this nation lies not so much in the type of goods it exports, as in the fact that American vessels are used for shipping," Pittman said.

Primed to answer Pittman was Sen. William Borah, Republican, Idaho, who, 29 years ago, helped lead a successful battle against another president's foreign policy, the league of nations fight against Woodrow Wilson.

"There is no cause for fear now that we will be drawn into the brutal and widening conflict," Pittman said. He added he was "impatient" with the arguments the United States entered the last year to collect debts owed by foreign governments to our citizens. He said submarine warfare brought America into the war.

While We're Talking in Big Figures

We have been talking in astronomic figures for some years, $45,000,000,000 national debts, $4,000,000,000 budgets, and the like now with the war on in Europe, millions pour out on the unproductive earth every day, and no one is alarmed or shocked.

But while we're talking in big figures, let's talk for a moment of the biggest figure of all $200,000,000,000

Two hundred billion dollars! That is the loss to the national income during the depression, according to a report just submitted to President Roosevelt by the National Resources Committee. That is the cost to the American people of the idleness of men and machines resulting from our inability to use to the full our vast resources during the past 10 years.

In other words, had we been able to contrive ways of employing all our idle workers, ways of keeping all our machines spinning at full speed, this breath-taking sum would have been added to the national income.

Beside that figure, the national debt looks small, and the cost of the World War could have been quickly absorbed.

Of course any such estimate of lost national income is a pretty theoretical thing. Neither machines nor men ever run without waste under any conceivable system of government. All this figure does is to point out to us rather convincingly our central problem. We must, whatever else happens, find ways of increasing that unemployment. We cannot forever continue to run a fine eight-cylinder engine on five cylinders and not expect strains and backfires.

Several of the countries of Europe have solved the problem by putting everything under military dictatorship, thus increasing the national production, all right, but dumping it right back into destructive war preparations, and now war itself.

That works for a time, but there is no future in it. Wars end. And when they end, back comes the problem, stronger than ever, of attempting to continue in peaceful, productive activity the pace set by the delirium of war time.

The problem must be faced, not by the cocaine-stimulation of a war boom, but in its basic specifics. The National Resources Committee admits quite frankly that it doesn't know how to get this machinery going and these men to work. But neither does anybody else.

The basic thing to remember is that we must never lose sight of this fundamental lock barring the door to our future, and never for a moment cease trying to find the key.

Robert Montgomery rode across from England in a ship's swimming pool because of crowded conditions. That's even a better stunt than a publicity man could think up.

The Army forbids its privates to marry. Officials evidently prefer recruits to confine fighting activities to the field.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—The Japanese government is trying to get back into America's friendship again. Both formal and informal overtures are now being made, and the goal is an "understanding" which would permanently remove the danger of war between the two countries.

So far, the Japanese idea is for an "understanding" on Japan's own terms, including acceptance by the United States of Japan's conquest of China and Manchukuo. Since this country's official position has been that it does not recognize territorial changes made by force and in violation of treaties, that hope is perhaps somewhat remote.

Nevertheless, the campaign for a settlement of Japanese-American difficulties is being pushed. Publicly, it recently took the form of renewed conversations between Secretary of State Hull and Kensei Horiuchi, Japanese ambassador. The ambassador presented no proposals, but simply discussed various aspects of the two countries' relations. It is understood further talks will be held later.

Unofficially, Japan's point of view has been presented here by the visit of Toshi Go, Japanese commissioner to the World's Fair in New York. A private citizen, Mr. Go is understood to have been acting informally to sound out sentiment and present his government's point of view. During a week's visit he conferred with a number of government officials, representatives, and senators.

The general tenor of Mr. Go's message can be summarized, briefly, thus: Japan does not want to take over the Philippines when America gives them up. Japan is willing to see American trade rights in China continued—for selfish reasons, if for no other, since the full "development" of a pacified China will take many generations and will be a job far beyond Japan's unaided resources. Japan feels that it ought to be possible to come to agreement on spheres of influence in the Pacific satisfactory to both countries.

Beyond that, Mr. Go represents the signing of the Russian-Japanese agreement as a development favorable to Japanese-American harmony. The Japanese attitude on that goes like this: The sooner the war in China is wound up (by a Japanese victory, of course) the sooner can Japanese-American friendship be restored. The agreement with Russia will help Japan win the war, and hence will bring a final understanding with America that much closer.

So far, Mr. Go has had a pretty noncommittal reception here. Although the outbreak of the war in Europe has created a good deal of sentiment in favor of doing whatever can be done to lessen the danger of a clash in the Pacific, the proposition to date is pretty largely a simple proposal that America okay what Japan has done in China.

The general understanding here is that two factors led to this effort to restore friendship. The more immediate one was the signing of the Russian-German treaty, which left the Japanese feeling very much isolated.

That, it is believed, has been pretty largely counteracted by the more recent agreement between Japan and Russia.

Aside from that, however, it is reported here that the Japanese navy had a hand in the move for a new understanding. Japanese navy heads are understood to have decided that their feet would be pretty likely to come off second best in a fight with the United States navy, and to have advised notice that Tokyo would be well advised to see to it that such a fight did not occur.

SERIAL STORY WORKING WIVES

BY LOUISE HOLMES

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday Dolly is happy in her preparations for her wedding...

CHAPTER XXIV MARIAN found an apartment on the Near North Side. It was small and at the back of an old building...

Dolly, deep in her own quieting, was easily put off. On the last day of October, Marian went to a small church and stood at the altar while Dolly and Randy were married...

The weeks dragged themselves over jagged stones of discontent and growing antagonism toward life. Sally Blake took on more, and still more, of the secretarial duties while Marian tolled over wearisome charts...

Marian accepted for the simple reason that her tired mind could find no logical excuse for refusing. Afterward she wondered what might have happened had she not gone to the Sands for Thanksgiving Day...

SOMEHOW, for months, years perhaps, she had been drifting through chaos, clinging to the spar of her own belief in her own conclusions, afraid to let go... ing form in the back of her mind, arguments which she refused to face. She was ready to be convinced, she needed only the unaffectedly joyous spirit of the Sands family to tip the scales toward saner thinking...

They were utterly themselves, happy together, glad to share their happiness with an outsider. Amy Ellen kissed Marian warmly upon arrival. Bill also kissed her, saying he did it for Dan. The children were natural and unspoiled...

Janie, aged 3, took a decided liking to her, bringing her dolls and books, leaning against Marian's knee, looking up with trusting eyes. Marian was flattered beyond measure...

When, after a hilarious dinner, Janie climbed sleepily to Marian's lap, she held her with a fierce tenderness. The little girl went to sleep in her arms, her golden head pressed against Marian's breast...

It was 8 o'clock when all the Sands bunched into the family car and drove Marian home. In parting, Janie presented her with a battered doll. "So you'll remember us and come again," she said...

SHE and Dan had lived in one apartment much like this one when they were first married; a square, unimaginative room, a door on one side, two windows opposite, a little kitchen beyond...

had opened charge accounts and recklessly taken advantage of them. She hadn't told Dan, working out a system by which she could pay the bills from her allowance...

She had made fair progress until Dan came home with the news that his salary had been cut. Thirty dollars from now on. Oh, well—what did they care? He had kissed her and she had been less responsive than usual...

By this time collectors were calling at the apartment, hard-faced, hard-voiced individuals who accepted a dollar or two and promised not to tell Mr. Harkness. At last, in desperation, Marian had suggested that she return to her job...

She had said, "Things are getting pretty tight, aren't they, Dan?" They were both sitting in a big chair and she twisted a button on his coat...

"We'll get by—it can't last forever—my work is steady."

He had pulled her head down on his shoulder. He didn't know about the bills and the collectors. "Hold on, Glad," he had said. "Just hold on and do without things for a little while. It's fun if you only think so. We're in a bottle, the world against Glad and Dan Harkness. Are we going to be licked? I'll say we're not."

She kept on twisting his button. "Until the depression—I mean the battle—is over, maybe it would be a good idea for me to go into the trenches."

"What do you mean?" scowling down at her. "I want to help, Danny. Mr. Fellows said there would always be a place for me in the office—please—just until we beat the enemy."

He had swung her to her feet, standing over her. "Men don't take their wives into battle, Glad. They want to go alone—they glory in the fight because they have someone to fight for."

Remembering, Marian pressed a hand over her eyes. Why hadn't she listened? Why had she been an obstinate fool? When she dropped her hand, the fingers were wet. They had been so young—they'd had such a wonderful chance—and muffed it.
