What Rights Are We Prepared to Defend by Force?

It is probably mere chance that not one of the many neutral ships torpedoed without warning in the North Sea happened to be an American ship. Unless the United States has better luck than it has any right to expect, this will happen sooner or later.

The Swedish steamers Gertrud Bratt and Silcsia, the Danish freighter Vendia, lie on the bottom of the sea. The first two were carring wood products to England, the third was empty, bound for the Firth of Forth. The Germans take the position that they would not be bound for Britain unless on business necessary to carrying on the war, and that therefore they are subject to sinking; search is unnecessary; all business of nations at war today is war busi-

What happened to Sweden and Denmark yesterday may happen to the United States tomorrow. On Sept. 14 Secretary Hull gave notice that the United States "has not abandoned any of its rights as a neutral under international law." That, we take it, is for the record, for reference in some future day when international law shall again become active. Nobody knows at the moment what international law is, if indeed there is any. Professor Beard has called it "a veritable jumble of claims, assertions, treaties, pledges, and hot contentions." As a particular matter, "international law" today is what you make it, and what you are prepared to keep it.

It might be international law that American salesmen' can sell lollypops to the soldiers ap and down the Maginot I ine. But almost anyone will agree that it would be protty cilly right now to insist on any such right. Just so, there will be many who think it quixotic to insist that American freighters can deliver wheat to Liverpool, and who will wonder just how safe Americans should expect to be who sail for England on the Aquitania with her grim-looking 12-pound guns. International law, or no international law, With the drawing up of the prodoes any sane person expect that a German submarine commander is going to come to the surface, hall the Acquitania, and carry on a pleasant conversation under the shadow of those guns?

The United States will have such neutral rights dur- Lithuanian Premier ing this European war as it is determined to defend with force, and no others. It is just as well to determine now, during the neutrality debate, what rights we propose to enferce, and to insist on no others. That is the kind of a world it is, and it is unrealistic to act as though it were some other kind.

That is why Secretary Hull urges Americans in Europe to come home only on American ships. They have the treaty. "right" to come in the Athenias, but it is not now wise to exercise that right. That is why the American nations plan Ranger Youth Joins "war zone" around Europe. The "peace zone" is reasonable, and there is some chance that we may be able to en-action, and to provide a nice, quiet room in which the international lawyers can sit and split hairs undisturbed until sanity returns again to earth
