Uncle Sam Can Take Care of His Own

America learned a lot of things from the first World War. Generally they were things that the people of this country could have learned without the terrific expense in lives and money, if they had just taken the trouble to tackle some of the war problems in peace time.

One of the things the people of this country discovered was that the United States was far more nearly self-sufficient than had been commonly believed. When trade routes were cut off in 1914 and warring nations couldn't afford to export materials they needed badly at home, the hrows of industry were creased with worry lines. Many needed materials and the benefit from many valuable manufacturing secrets were rapidly becoming unavailable, and the United States looked sadly toward the day when certain industries, particularly chemicals, would have to close and the public would have to do without commodities to which they had become accustomed.

Then the laboratories got busy. They learned how to make optical equipment and they produced dyes which had suddenly become unobtainable. New chemical formulae for manufacturing processes were evolved and industry as a whole began gradually to understand that American genius was equal to the new problems.

The problems we looked at with horror in 1914 we approach today with calm self-assurance. The shock of the first World War was not quickly forgotten, and scientists have been experimenting constantly since then in an effort to find new substitutes for standard processes.

It was once believed we could obtain rubber only from distant tropical places. Stoppage of this supply would have been serious enough to sprout gray hairs on the heads of all automobile executives and industrialists who need rubber for their products. But today, concern over this situation is only slight. Laboratories have produced synthetic rubber. It is not yet generally in use, and it probably has not been fully developed; but threat of a shortage of the natural product would hasten research in this field.

Minerals which this country now imports are probably lying imbedded in the rocks of America or Alaska, geologists believe. If certain ores cannot be found, scientists will probably find a way to get along without them.

Self-sufficiency is not a healthful state of affairs for the United States. Economic intercourse among the nations of the world is necessary, and the United States should share in this commerce.

But it is comforting to know that this country is not helplessly dependent on other nations to supply materials in times of emergency.

Another psychologist has contributed support to the theory that the masculine I. Q. is higher than the feminine. If this keeps up, husbands will talk themselves into believing it.

SERIAL STORY 5 WOULD KILL BY TOM HORNER

Yesterday, Joey di Torino admitted he and Benthoorne were "associated" in several racketeering schemes. Benthoorne believes the gangster killed Benthoorne to silence him, but Benthoorne insists it was after midnight. He also reminds Dawson of one other thing that will prove his innocence—ballistics.

CHAPTER VII
PATROLMAN DAN FLYNN'S feet hurt. It was bad enough, he told himself, to stand half the night in the rain, but to have a murder piled on him, to have the captain sore at him, and to have to find a will-o'-wisp taxi driver at 4 a. m. was asking too much of his even Irish temper.

How the devil did Dawson expect him to locate one taxi driver—Nick Smith—in a city full of taxi drivers? The taxi company had been a great help—yeah! "Smith reported in tonight," the office clerk told Flynn. "He's on cruising service, reports in if business is slow, but goes on his own if business is good." That helped a lot, yeah! They'd be glad to have Smith come in if he called, but Flynn knew that Smith would stay out just as long as he could. Probably halfway to Florida by now, with the cab parked on a deserted road.

Smith wouldn't show up at home either—too smart for that. Smith was just too, too smart. Dawson was too smart, Benthoorne was too smart. Everyone was too smart—everyone but Dan Flynn. And he was just a dumb cop. And his feet hurt.

Well, there was no use pacing up and down the sidewalk in the rain in front of a deserted taxi stand. There was a chance that Smith might, from force of habit, return to his usual haunts. But it was a small chance. Flynn knew. A cab hurried by. Flynn whistled, but the cab sped on. Another taxi, hurrying down the opposite side of the street, whirled around and the door swung open before Flynn. "Just drive," he ordered, and slumping in the seat, kicked off his shoes, wiggled his toes in damp socks and promptly went to sleep.

HE awakened half an hour later. The cab was stopped, even the meter was silent. Flynn looked around, saw he was parked in front of an all-night lunch stand. Driver evidently decided he needed a cup of coffee. Coffee might go well, a yawn thought. And ham and eggs and maybe some pie. He bent over, fumbling in the darkness for his shoes.

A car paused beside the cab, then pulled in front to park. Flynn grunted as he tied the laces, raised his head just in time to see another driver climbing out of the car. was just a couple of getting said to just drive around and talked for a while. "Finally the fellow said I know where there's a girl. Then they argue some more. It seems like the girl is dead of the talking. Then she stops. "Driver," she says in his voice, "will you help me to my fiance and I want to get to him but his father don't like it. Now me, I'm sort of a guy, and I like to help out a lot of kids." "You can tell your love to the captain, Nick," Flynn shortly. "Right now I know one thing. Where the girl live?" "I swear—I swear I don't know. I let her out at a—honest— "There are ways of getting your memory, Nick," Flynn rapped. "I hope we don't use them." * * * * *

THE girl with the milk tugged at the strap of a battered suitcase, pulling it finally under the key in the door. She rose hurriedly, moved dresser, slammed drawers and closed as she was passing the mirror caught her eye as she passed to light her hair. Her dark hair needed to be applied lipstick hung her firm, full-lipped mouth. Her face, her eyes tired at the moment lacking fire. "Tomorrow I'll be here. The thought of him no longer pause, stare at her own in the mirror. John had kind, so helpful, without in. He had asked no question manded nothing. He was with her—wholly, helpfully. Perhaps he would burst. No—he would return to the he had first met her—she would never go back. It was just as well. The no place in her life for him. The buzzer interrupted thoughts. Someone at the ment door. The prior bags. She hurried to open Dan Flynn was fumed doorway. He was smiling glance took in the room, the packed suitcase door. "You going somewhere, Johnson?" he asked. Christmas Season Stirs Up Interest In Craft Classes

The approaching Christmas season has stimulated great interest in craft clubs and classes recently organized on the playgrounds. The girls' clubs are making embroidered pet litters in the shape of cats, owls and frogs. Some are crocheting dollies, and nearly all are looking forward to knitting instructions which will be given by the directors in the next few weeks.

Boys' clubs are doing woodwork. They are making wall plaques and what-not shelves. Leatherwork will be started soon.

In December an exhibit of the work of the different schools will be given at the Community Center. All boys and girls are invited to join these clubs.

March of Time On U. S. Farmer to Be Shown at Arcadia

B. E. Garner, manager of the Arcadia theatre, today announced that he has booked the latest March of Time film, "Uncle Sam - The Farmer," which tells a forceful and dramatic story of the work, hopes and problems of the 32 million Americans today living on six million U. S. farms.

This newest March of Time shows in detail the work of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and its county agents throughout the country, vividly depicts the origin of the "farm problem," and shows the operation of the Federal Government's ever-normal granary plan designed to protect the farmers from ruinous low prices. New problems created by the war in Europe and facing the U. S. farmer today are also thrown into sharp relief in the March of Time film.

"Uncle Sam - The Farmer" will be showing at the Arcadia Theatre for two days from today through Thursday.

Therefore, we ask you to please watch your trash cans and try to keep all surplus papers in them. It has been called to our attention that quite a few people have

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON NEA Service Staff Correspondent WASHINGTON - If statistics mean anything, passage of the Wagner labor relations act has brought about an increase in industrial disturbances.

The New York Chamber of Commerce recently issued a survey showing that that was what had happened. Figures printed in the May, 1939, Monthly Labor Review, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, show the same trend.

The number of strikes in the United States stood at 921 in 1929, fell to 637 the following year, rose to 1695 in 1933, went up to 1740 in 1938 and dropped off to 272 last year.

CLAIM MERE FIGURES NO YARDSTICK THE reply of friends of the Wagner act is that the effects of the law cannot be measured statistically.

Senator Elbert Thomas of Utah, chairman of the Senate committee on education and labor which conducted extensive hearings on the Wagner act, takes that position.

"We haven't a problem in statistics at all in the Wagner act," he says. "It's a problem in social evolution."

A breakdown of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' figures on strikes brings out some interesting points. In 1928, for instance, there were 604 strikes as compared with 272 in 1938. But the number of workers involved in the 1928 strikes was 314,000—nearly half as many as the 688,000 involved in the 1938 strikes. The number of "man-days" of idleness caused by strikes along the side of the road which is close to other people and makes their property look unfavorable. "We know that it is not the intention of any of our citizens to cause their neighbors hard feeling, so we take this opportunity to ask the cooperation of everyone, in both their residence and in public property to please put their trash in proper trash cans and do not let it get on the streets any more than possible. "C. J. MOORE "Street Commissioner"
