They Have Forgotten Pearl Harbor

Washington had his sunshine patriots and Lincoln his copperheads. Today we have a new and equally obnoxious breed—false front patriots. They erect with loud talk and a great fan-fare of activity a magnificent structure of patriotism. But it falls flat with the first stiff breeze because it has a false front.

Specifically these big talkers and small doers noisily buy defense bonds and stamps one day and very quietly cash them the next. Obviously this sort of thing is about as helpful to our war effort as is Hermann Goering.

For instance, the Cleveland postoffice reported defense stamp sales of $274,093 one week but it gave back $75,900 to persons who did not wish to keep these stamps or trade them in on defense bonds. This was a net sell-out of Uncle Sam. General MacArthur, Admiral Nimitz, the thousands in front line fighting and the millions on the home front of 27 per cent.

Reports of such redemptions, some more and some less come from other sections of the nation and piled up to a total of $6,646,712 stamp redemptions in December. That is enough money to equip a fleet of flying fortresses and slap the Japs with a punch their honorable ancestors would hear.

Some of these stamps undoubtedly were redeemed in bonds. Some persons were forced to cash them because they lost their jobs or suffered other financial jolts. Nevertheless, the percentage remains too high if we are going to do much about Pearl Harbor other than throw out our chests and predict dire things for the enemy.

Such fair weather patriots not only defeat the purpose of the stamp program—to sharpen the ax for the axis—but they cost the Treasury Department money because stamps turned back must be canceled. Thus a tremendous amount of printing and paper goes down the drain. Furthermore, the redeemers are tossing away the very best investment in the world.

Possibly the Treasury may do something about it. It would be a far better thing, however, if we all would resolve to build and perpetuate our patriotism on solid ground, and issue a sort of moral building code outlawing false fronts.

Capital Will Have New Greenhouse

Framework of the old greenhouse has so rotted that it has to be propped up at various places. At other spots, glass from the roof has fallen through and the holes are patched with cardboard or light pieces of wood.

The new greenhouse will be at the northeast corner of the Capitol grounds, occupying a depression. The present greenhouse is directly opposite the east entrance of the Capitol, and north of its vast driveway gate.

THUMBNAIL BIOGRAPHIES

This is another of a series of articles, which will be published weekly, each Sunday, in the Ranger Times, giving interesting facts, figures and information about the leading business and professional men of Ranger. The next article in this series will appear in the Times next Sunday.

Probably the most trying period in the life of Colonel Brashier is the most interesting to relate, now that it is all over and is only a memory. The reason it is interesting is because it is a living example of facing adversity with confidence, and winning out in spite of heavy odds and insurmountable obstacles.

COLONEL BRASHIER

It was back in 1920, when Brashier had been in the real estate business for two years that the bottom literally dropped out of real estate, leases and royalties, with banks closing their doors and practically everyone connected with either of these businesses seeing their resources being wiped out.

Colonel Brashier was not alone in having many troubles thrust upon him, all at one time, but he was determined that conditions would not get him down. And he succeeded.

With all his assets gone, with the exception of $200 in War Saving Stamps, he soaked them out of the books, sold them, rented the building he now occupies and started into business with nothing to sell.

At the time many people were leaving Ranger and others were moving in, so he began buying household effects from those moving away and re-selling to those moving in. From this humble beginning, with no assets, no stock, and just an empty building and a lot of determination he built up the present, thriving business, which now occupies four times its original space.

But that was not Colonel Brashier's first experience as a merchant. Prior to 1908 he was in the mercantile business in Arkansas, and moved to Ranger, where he conducted a business until 1914, when he moved to Strawn and went into the grocery business with Joe Britton. In 1915, after oil was discovered in Ranger, he returned and went into the furniture business as an employe of C. L. Williams, in a store located back of what is now Traders Grocery. From this he branched out into the real estate business, as previously mentioned. The store he operated in Ranger from 1908 to 1914 was located about where Williams Hardware store is now. While he was in the real estate business he built two houses, and from the sale of these he accumulated enough to build his present home, in Cooper Addition.

Colonel Brashier was born in Mississippi, near Water Valley, where E. A. Ringold also lived before coming to Ranger. When about 10 years of age he moved, with his parents to Arkansas, where he lived until he moved to Ranger.

He was married to Miss Cheaney Lyons, and the two have five children, three sons and two daughters. They are H. P. Brashier of Sherman, Felton Brashier and Bill Brashier, associated with him in the Ranger Furniture Exchange, Mrs. Chambers of Dallas and Mrs. Walker of Cape Girardeau, Mo.

Colonel Brashier has been a member of the Baptist Church for many years, and was a member when the church was located on what is now the Gholson Hotel parking lot on Pine Street. He has been a deacon of the church for 30 years.

He has also been very active in many civic movements, is an active member of the Ranger Lions Club, of which he is a past president, and served for six years on the Ranger City Commission, as street commissioner. His three terms were during the worst years of the depression, when city finances were at a low ebb and keeping the city operating was enough of a task to try any man, but his previous experiences stood him well, and he was able, with the help of the other commissioners, to see the city through this trying period.

In recent years the Ranger Furniture Exchange has secured the

SERIAL STORY

KINGS ROW

BY HENRY BELLAMANN

TIME IS SHORT
CHAPTER XVI
SAY—when are you going to Europe? Not soon?
In September?
Why don't you tell me?
I didn't know it until today.
Say—that's tough! I'll be darned if I know what I'm going to do without you.
Drake thumped Parris resoundingly to lessen the sentiment of the remark.
Parris, you and me have been in pretty much the same kind of boat so much of the time. You remember I said that right here at this corner about three years ago. We still are, in lots of ways. My girl can't see me, and won't, and yours can't come out in the open either and go around with you like other girls and their fellows.
Cassie's not exactly my girl, Drake. Dr. Tower is very peculiar.
I should say he is. I think he's kind of crazy—keeping Cassie shut up all the time away from everybody. But Dr. Gordon's not crazy. He just don't like me.
Drake, you take on like everything's fixed up all right.
Oh, let me alone! You don't know how I feel. Don't talk to me, Parris, I—I just can't stand any more. He turned quickly and almost ran up Federal street.

and thin now she scarcely dented the heaped-up pillows. Each day she smiled and spoke casually to Parris. Then she gave over to the interminable hours of incredible horror—one minute at a time until tomorrow.
During the next two weeks, Dr. Gordon came every day. Each day she was covered with medicines. A hypodermic case was lying open; the needle and piston evidently freshly dried had not been replaced. He picked up the tube of white tablets and read the label. Just then Anna returned. He pointed at the hypodermic case. Anna blanched a little.
How long has—has this been necessary, Anna? His voice shook slightly.
For several weeks, Parris. He waited as if he could not say the next word. He picked up the shining hypodermic needle and laid it down again.
Cancer? He was surprised that he could say it.
Anna answered in the same tone of voice. Yes, Parris.
Why wasn't I told?
Madame wished it, Parris. She wanted you to finish your work without worry. She insisted, Parris; she made me promise.
Yes, yes, I guess so. So that's it! But why did she make plans for me to go to Europe in September? Didn't she—doesn't she know?
Yes, of course she knows. She thought she would live through September.
The last tinge of color left his face. Anna moved instinctively nearer.
And—she won't. Is that what you mean?
It is impossible that she should live more than a few days. I had made up my mind after Dr. Gordon's visit yesterday to tell you.
He turned and left the room without speaking. Anna heard the door of his room close softly.
PARRIS! Cassie's voice over the telephone sounded hurried and anxious. Listen, Parris, I've got to see you.
Oh, I can't now, Cassie.
Parris, I wouldn't call you if it wasn't important!

All right. Nine o'clock at the corner of Aberdeen campus. Of course she couldn't understand what was happening to him just now. He'd have to tell her.
But Cassie had come to tell him. You know—well—you love your grandmother terribly much, don't you?
She's all my world, Cassie.
Everybody's been trying to keep you from knowing how sick she is.
Parris did not reply. Cassie's words struck through him.
Parris, she took hold of his arms and shook him slightly. Parris, your grandmother is dying, and they don't tell you!
Who told you? He asked the question roughly.
Papa talked to Dr. Gordon, I guess. You know you're the only person I ever saw Papa be interested in. Your grandmother is dying of cancer. I know how you feel about her—and Parris, darling, I was afraid of what the sudden shock might do to you. I guess it's been just as much of a shock the way I've told you.
No, it's all right, Cassie. I know it.
They sat in silence for a long while, watching the fireflies, and then talked in gentle voices of other things.
I'll have no one when you leave, Parris, Cassie whispered.
You're not like anybody else, Parris. Do you know that?
I don't know. How, Cassie?
Of course, I don't know anybody. But—I just know you're altogether different. Even Papa says you are.
Does he? I've wondered what he does think about me. I like him an awful lot, Cassie. He's taught me everything.
I wouldn't want you to be different. When I think about you, you seem kind of mysterious, almost. Just kind of enigmatic. Papa talks about you sometimes—not often.
What does he really say about me, Cassie?
Well, he said one day that you were—now, let me see, I want to get it just right. He said you were a very rare personality.
What do you suppose he meant by that?
I don't know. He said you were going to be a great doctor someday.
Parris stopped and held her by the arms. Listen, Cassie: I want to be a good doctor—a great one if I can. When I come back—maybe, somehow the time'll pass quickly—when I come back will you marry me?

FOR the first time Parris drew back a little from Drake to get a better perspective. He realized, as he never had, that Drake could be completely illogical and inconsistent, and then feel terribly hurt because he was misunderstood.
A new and deep fear for Drake arose like a physical ache in his heart. Drake was the best friend he had, probably the best he would ever have. But even as he thought about it he knew that his hopes for Drake had always been untried.
The chances of terrible frustration lay deep in Drake's character—chances, even, of disaster.
PARRIS worked hard. He read night and for the first time digests for his readers.
There was a conspiracy of silence among Madame's older friends. Most of them knew of Parris—almost fanatical devotion to his grandmother. They looked at him a little pityingly, but said nothing. Even Drake seldom asked about Madame, but he knew.
Anna looked with wide, dry, wondering eyes at the seemingly unbreakable old woman, so slight and thin now she scarcely dented the heaped-up pillows. Each day she smiled and spoke casually to Parris. Then she gave over to the interminable hours of incredible horror—one minute at a time until tomorrow.
