About Inflation

Perhaps one reason why the American people have not worried enough about inflation is because they have an exaggerated notion what it is.

The spectacular way to present the idea is by citing Germany's experience, culminating in 1923, when in December it would have taken 1,200,000,000 marks to buy what one mark—23.8 cents—bought in 1913.

Translated into American money, that would be equivalent to having to pay $132,044,000,000 (one hundred thirty two billions, forty-four millions of dollars) for the loaf of baker's bread that cost 11 cents today.

We all know that there is not going to be such inflation as that in the United States. We are convinced that there will not even be inflation such that bread will cost $1000 a loaf, or a stamp to mail a letter $250, which is about where Germany was in July of 1922, before her notorious inflation really got its second wind and started running.

Assured that such fears are silly, we dismiss warnings as the academic nightmares of overworked economists, and refuse to be worried.

A bird in the hand, we love to say, is worth two in the bush. Let's eat, drink and be merry, and let tomorrow take care of itself.

Unfortunately, inflation does not have to get to the one trillion, two hundred billion stage in order to do incalculable harm. At the two-to-one stage it can work hardships. At the four-to-one it can wipe out the savings of a provident lifetime. At eight-to-one it could ruin the American economy and put this nation through the wringer of effective bankruptcy.

Inflation may sound academic, but really it isn't. Inflation means merely that money has lost some of its value. It won't buy as much, in the way of useful goods, as it did or should.

Inflation means that the value of money is going down. We buy enough insurance and put enough in the bank to finance old age. Money loses value. Then we can't live on our savings.

We buy gilt-edged bonds, and save for a home of our own. When we sell the bonds, we collect their face value. But they will pay for only half of a house, if money has lost half its value.

That is all inflation is. The German fiasco, merely illustrates how far inflation can go. We're not safe, merely because we know inflation never will go as far in this country.

LETTERS FROM READERS

Ever since the world began, women have played their part. When a crisis come they can always do something, even though it seems an insignificant thing at the time. We can and must get busy.

Let's search the house from attic down to the ground floor for the small metal parts and keys. Those old keys, the lock for which was lost or broken long ago, are pushed back in drawers taking up space when they can be used for ships and fighting equipment. Let's get together every useless gadget, ornament and anything that we can find. They are lying around in every conceivable place.

Many of the best keys and locks are made from nickel silver, an alloy that is needed by the navy to the extent of 12,000,000. Old-fashioned door keys are plated different metals. However, they are composed mostly of brass, copper, nickel, silver and zinc, all of which are urgently needed by the war industry plants.

The idea occurred to me that it is high time for our women to rise up in the name of womanhood and help these children that they may be able to unlock the door into a new world, where freedom, justice, and peace will reach out to protect them from the everlasting barbarism that is forced on the entire womanhood of Germany at this time.

Places An Ad In Paper To Find Out Just Where He Lives

NORFOLK, Va. (AP)—T. C. Steele is a forgetful sort of cuss—but maybe it's just that he's so busy in the war effort that he can't be bothered with unimportant details. Like losing a rooming house, for instance. At any rate, Steele came here from Durham, N. C., and got a job at the Norfolk naval operating base. He rented a room, and set the address on a scrap of paper and then rushed to the job.

While working, he lost the newspaper office to run a classified ad. He wanted the landlady to call in and tell him where he lived! The ad placed, he left the newspaper office—leaving the Steele work clothes in his wake. So then the paper had to start looking for Steele.

THE PAYOFF

BY HARRY GRAYSON NEA Service Sports Editor

NEW YORK—Comdr. Gene Tunney's cracks about professional athletics—football especially—in the services strike Dick Anderson of Evansville as being in extremely poor taste. For one thing, Commander Tunney in World War I did the same things he sees fit to criticize now. It was the boxing he did as a member of the armed forces in France that led Commander Tunney to the heavyweight championship and fame and fortune.

"Tunney got a great number of athletes to join up with his 1-2-3-4 calisthenics department. I assume that some are in the thick of the fighting and others are helping to condition young men who will be called upon to enter the fighting. "If they can add a game or two of football to their programs, I can't see anything wrong with it. Not a single one of them would shirk a call to active duty.

SERIAL STORY

LUCKY PENNY

BY GLORIA KAYE

COPYRIGHT, 1942. NEA SERVICE, INC.

"THEY WOULD!" Penny Kirk has returned from Kirk town to learn something about the great steel mills she owns and the people who work in them. She gets a job as waitress, under the name of Penny Kellogg. A fight breaks out in the restaurant between a waitress and the Castro, a gang of rascals who prey on the milk-walkers. Later she meets Jim Vickers, local newspaper editor whom she had met in Paris but who doesn't recognize her. She learns from Bud Walsh, a steel worker, that the mill is being dismantled with the mills' present management.

cause of Jim's warm smile of welcome. PENNY swung easily into the routine of work. Before long, the office lost its dusty, disorderly appearance. Jim wondered how he had managed so long without her.

"It's all too unnecessary," Jim protested bitterly. "A new bridge should have been put up two years ago. The money was appropriated. Blueprints were drawn up. Castro's crooked politicians pocketed the funds."

A NEW JOB CHAPTER VI SUMMER nights crowded with pleasant memories warmed Penny's friendship for Jim. She could hardly wait for the end of the day, when Jim would drive up in his nondescript car. They found rutted roads that lead nowhere except to hilltops crowned with the glories of the setting sun.

Perhaps because she herself was bursting with news and with a vitality that reflected her good will toward everyone, she found it easy to extract dozens of interesting news items.

"For weeks I've heard about corrupt politicians and gangsters and raw beautiful girls. For years Kirk town has been run by a bunch of rotten crooks. Isn't there anyone in this place with backbone enough to run them out and see that the town gets a decent break? Are you going to put up with this sort of thing forever?"

"Mr. Vickers! Mr. Vickers!" he shouted. "A terrible accident. The bridge. Come quick." Jim shot upstairs. Penny followed swiftly, helping the tired youngster to negotiate the last steps. Jim's car was already rattling impatiently.

"No, Penny," Jim replied grimly. "This time we will do something. We've been cowards. We've already waited too long."

"There's something else that's troubling me, Jim," Penny chose her words carefully now. "That bridge ran over company property. Doesn't the Kirk management care at all? Don't they know what's happening in Kirk town?"

"I mean," Jim was struggling for the words, "I need someone like you on the Courier. We'd make a winning combination, you and I." He had wanted to say something quite different—something about the way he really felt. How he missed her. How he longed to have her near him. He hesitated only when he thought of the struggle ahead for anyone who would share his threadbare existence. Her anger, spontaneous and swift, was like a fist that held them enraptured for a long moment.

"The Kirk management! That's good!" barked Jim. "They sit back in their beautiful offices in the prettiest building at the county seat, and don't know or don't care about anything except black figures on the profit reports." "Then it's high time they learned a few things," flashed Penny.

That is the theme of the 31st National Safety Congress and Exposition, to be held in Chicago October 27-29, the National Safety Council announced today.

The War Production is seeking to obtain from industry and commerce $5,000,000 needed to do the wartime safety job.

"We regard the 1942 Congress as the most important ever held," said Ned H. Dearborn, executive vice-president of the Council. "It will give safety leaders the country over their first opportunity since the war began to meet for a mass attack on accidents that are delaying victory.

"Many of these safety men will bring to the Congress definite proof that accidents can be stopped in the factories and on the highways, despite the rush of war production. They will pass along their effective safety programs to others who have not been so successful. The result will be that those who attended the Congress will go back to their jobs better prepared to stop wartime accidents.

"The slogan, 'Save manpower for warpower,' sums up the purpose of our campaign and of the Congress.

"Safety has a wartime assignment in the world. Attendance averages 10,000, and safety leaders from all parts of the country assemble to exchange ideas, experiences and problems. Delegates this year will work overtime to cram the program into three days instead of the usual five, and thus avoid week-end travel.

The 1942 Congress comes in the midst of a nation-wide war emergency safety campaign being conducted by the Council at the direct request of President Roosevelt.

An exhibit of all types of safety appliances and equipment will be a feature of the Congress.
