NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC

Any erroneous reflection upon the character, standing or reputation of any person, firm or corporation which may appear in the columns of this paper will be gladly corrected upon being brought to the attention of the publishers.

MOVING THE SCRAP

About one feature of the scrap salvage situation there appears to be a misunderstanding that should be corrected. A large portion of the public is worrying because automobile graveyards in particular, and junkyards in general, contain mountains of scrap while intensive efforts are being made to locate every pound that may be mislaid in somebody's basement or garage.

That is not a cause for legitimate worry, but rather for rejoicing. The old jalopies and other scrap are not lying idle. They are in a state of flux. So long as there are piles of metal in the junkyards our hard pressed steel plants can run to capacity. It will be when the junk piles get small that we should start fretting!

The ferrous metal that reaches junkyards is not all the same. It varies from plain iron to the most valuable steels, the latter containing alloying metals that are worth more than all the gold at Fort Knox so far as the war is concerned.

It is the junk dealers' job to sort these different metals, so that each can be sent where it is needed most; so that fine steels containing alloys can be reworked to salvage the alloying metals for re-use.

When you look at an automobile graveyard, it may appear to contain the same wrecks that were there a month or six months ago. Apparently nothing has been accomplished. But in all probability, if a month ago you had marked the cars there, now you would find them all gone and replaced by a new lot.

A similar warning is needed in connection with the scrap collections in smaller communities, where personal observation shows that the salvage has not been moved since the town worked to get it together.

With transportation at a premium, the government can not send trains or trucks to clean up small junkpiles as fast as each is ready. They must be added to the inventory of potential supplies so transportation facilities can be routed to pick up adjacent piles with a minimum waste of motion.

Regardless of how much scrap metal you may see in junkyards, the heat must be kept on if we are to provide American mills with the 45,000,000 tons they need this year.

Remember—the scrap salvage drive is not a one-shot affair. It must be continuous, week after week and month after month. Don't think your duty is done because you have given once, or twice, or half a dozen times.

As long as you can find anything salvageable to turn in or report, your country needs it.

On September 30, there was enough money in circulating for every man, woman and child to have $102.04. Who has yours?

LETTERS FROM READERS

The following letter, written by Robert R. Herring of Ranger, was handed in at the Times' office for publication because it contains so much matter that would be of interest to all readers of the paper: Dr. T. O. Walton,

Pres. Texas A. & M. College, College Station, Texas. Dear Mr. Walton:

It is with proud pen that I relay to a man who has so many boys on the fighting fronts of the world, News and Views of those about me. All over Australia I see them;

the ring is their trade mark; their remembrances of A. & M. is their brotherhood. The ground forces find them fine leaders and they have worthy tasks; in services of supply they are the boys who are getting it through to the troops; in the Air Corps their wings fill the air. They are fine men and great leaders. It is a grand feeling to meet an Aggie over here; but even more it's the type of man one finds in every Aggie that makes the surge of feeling more immense. All over the world one suddenly realizes are men like these men from Aggie land, men who have received the great benefit of association and learning that A. & M. affords; each one doing his job.

Though the task is great, and our opponent is strong, we are all confident that victory will be ours in days to come. We have no misgivings, we are fully aware of the necessary sacrifices, and we have seen the grim cost of war; but courage stands high and we go forth because of our training and because we believe in our cause.

But above this, we want not only a military victory from this conflict, we want supreme political and economic victory for the world as well. We want all mankind to share in the fruits of our conquest. We want the world to be as one and for that to come about, a political and economic transition must take place. All people must realize that they cannot again withdraw into their smug corners but that they must share the entire world and all of its riches; and that this in turn must be ruled by a league or council of all nations. It must be guarded by strength and the rules set up must be enforced with power.

We wonder here on this front if those at home are willing to make the sacrifices which will make us a part of this world organization, or shall we remain as before and allow these who die to do so in a somewhat futile cause. Victory shall not be complete until wars no longer occur. I pray that the victory of this war will look unselfishly upon the problem and that they will arrive at a solution that will free our posterity from future wars. — of this our greatest human degradation.

To you sir, I send my very best wishes and sincere appreciation for your help during my stay at A. & M. and later in Washington. D. C. I saw Mr. Lloyd several times, and bid him goodbye upon my orders for foreign duty. He was extremely helpful and kind.

Very truly yours, Robert R. Herring, 2nd Lieut. A. C. U. S. Army

SERIAL STORY OF BRIGHTNESS GONE

BY HOLLY WATTERSON

FRAZIER AND BECH CHAPTER XVII

"Good Samaritan you said Frazier-and-Bech as naturally as at table you said salt-and-pepper, bread-and-butter. You said, Frazier-and-Bech are in Pediatrics, or GYN, or Surgery, as they progressed through the months of their rotating services. That doctor-nurse combination had begun three years before, back in interne-probationer days, more or less by accident and it had continued by design—Dr. Peter Frazier's design—straight on into Emergency, Dr. Frazier's last service before he would go into private practice.

For the first time in months Candace found herself resenting it. In the beginning, longing to run away from anything or anybody that even remotely suggested Martin, she had fought bitterly against that enforced contact with Peter; but circumstances and Peter's quiet will had been too much for her.

She would have said that she had completely forgotten Martin. That he was to her now simply a doctor who had once been an interne at the hospital and was now a consulting staff member who appeared occasionally on important cases. That would be true again after tomorrow; but today he was more than that, much more. He was the man she had once loved, and who was to marry on the next day another girl.

She had come on evening duty a few minutes before, to find Emergency busy in the aftermath of a street fight in a nearby foreign neighborhood. Being shepherded up to a ward under the watchful eyes of a policeman was a sudden group sporting assorted handkerchiefs, wounds and blackened eyes, while on the table, wincing under Peter's probing fingers, was still another late belligerent.

Jepperson, the nurse she was relieving, was a good one as far as care and kindness went, but not particularly quick or efficient. Candace thought, Jeppy'll be all right at this time if I don't clear it, and she set quickly to work to rid the corner behind the screen of the stained swabs and gauze, leaving to Jepperson the less arduous task of passing instruments to Peter.

She was still cleaning back there, out of sight, when she heard two of the internes on ambulance duty—riding the bus, as it was called—come into Emergency, arguing cheerfully. She recognized them from their voices as Henderson, the rather flip good-looking one, and fat Quincy.

"It's three days since that baby was born in your bus," Quincy was saying. "Three days, and you haven't come across with that barrel of beer forfeit yet. The rest of us are dying of dry-rot, waiting."

That prospect didn't seem to dismay Henderson. "Y' know, I kinda wish you would," he said cheerfully. "You'd force me into bankruptcy to fork over $9 for a barrel of beer when you can get stinko tomorrow at the Harts-horne-Corby nuptials at Papa Hartshorne's expense. Papa Hartshorne, they say, is providing even champagne."

Candace had stiffened. Shut up, she thought wildly. Shut up! But Quincy's mind had already gone on to other things. "What are you doing here?" he asked Jepperson. "Where's Hi-hat Bech? Isn't she supposed to be on? Not that I don't prefer you," he added lightly. "Bech always makes me feel nine years old, unwashed, and late for school."

With the change of subject, Candace could breathe again. She emerged from behind the screen, rather pale but apparently otherwise untroubled.

Jepperson giggled nervously, and the two boys murmured confused apologies and slunk abashed from the room.

Peter straightened a moment from the wound he was dressing. "You're bushed, Jep," he said casually. "Go on, Bech will take over."

When she had gone and Candace stood beside him he grinned at her companionably. "I'd hate to see what would happen if one of the young squirts around here got up courage enough to dare say 'hooray' to you," he remarked.

Candace stared frostily, raised warning eyebrows over the patient's head. "Oh, he doesn't speak English," Peter explained. "What I mean is, he went on, 'you have every man-Jack scared of you when, if only they had brains enough to see it, you're the one who's really scared. Scared stiff that life will find you out, force you out of that hard shell you're so busily growing.'"

She had struggled hard to put their relationship on a professional, strictly impersonal basis and it had seemed that she had finally won. It was a long, long while since a really personal remark had passed between them. She was angered, and wounded, that Peter should presume today of all days. She said sharply, "You're so clever, Doctor. You read me just like an open book, don't you? But then you should, since you've seen all the pages." "Save the sarcasm," Peter advised mildly. "It's a mighty effective weapon in most cases and I've come to admire the way you use it, but I'm so thick I'd blind it. Resent it or not, it's still sound advice for you to put that perfect machine you've become under dust covers out in a while and come out for air. At least when you're off duty."

"If ever I should need or want your advice, Doctor," she said stiffly, "I'll come to you as a patient and ask for it." Her face was white and her voice shook, but the well-trained hands that furnished him with implements never wavered.

"You must know," she broke out furiously again after a moment, "that I resent this spring on me all the time. That I hate having to work with you. Hate it, hate it. Yet you've somehow managed it on every service. Why?"

"Oh, it's for a very selfish reason," Peter said lazily. "Because you're a perfect machine. With you, one never has to be considering the personal equation. It makes things very easy—for me. I'm afraid it's bad for you, though. Keep every human emotion too long in leash and one day they'll turn on you and rend you."

Candace laughed, sharp and hard. With a deliberate effort to be insulting she said, "I never thought you'd be guilty of such cheap advice, Doctor. That emotion-riding business—I thought only the cheaper internes trying to interest some nurse in a convenient affair used that one."

She had succeeded in annoying him finally. "If you're insinuating that I'm advising an affair for you—I'm not. Even in an affair one must bring something; and you're just getting to the stage where you're just an empty vessel."

"Empty vessels make most noise," she quoted. "That's what I was always told as a child when I prattled too much. But it seems to me that you're the one who's doing the prattling just now. Prattling the sort of advice that goes over big with neurotic lady patients. The type of patients who really pay. You'll be a big success at that rate, Doctor." Abruptly she stopped.

There was the familiar faint squeak of the stretcher-carriage's wheels, the muted footsteps of attendants on the cork floor of the corridor. The carriage reached the door of Emergency, paused an instant to negotiate the turn, then—Martin Corby was wheeled in.

Sea Survivors Find Brides Upon Hospital Staff

LEWES, Oel. (UP)—Seaman Velmir Leontic of the torpedoed Yugoslavian freighter Trepna waited less than a week to follow the example of a fellow-survivor in proposing to a member of the Beebe hospital staff. Both were accepted.

Leontic, convalescing from multiple injuries complicated by an emergency appendix operation, announced his engagement to pretty Jacqueline Brittingham, night supervisor of nurses.

Dorothy M. Hedson, of the hospital office staff, is now Mrs. Lawrence Frank, bride of a week, whose husband was picked up after a U-boat sank his ship.

The Pig's Trax

Published By the Students of Desdemona High School.

STAFF: Yarda, Maltby, Evelyn Joiner, Neita K. Harty. CONTRIBUTOR: Jackie Vee Duke. SCRAP, SCRAP, SCRAP

If you would have visited in Desdemona last week you would have been amazed at the amount of scrap that has been gathered by the pupils of our school. At 11.00 a. m. Monday the pupils assembled in the gym and after a very stirring talk by Mr. Skipping were dismissed from classes to hunt scrap. A race was held to see which class could bring in the most scrap. Scrap was brought in all afternoon with aid of trucks, cars, pickups, and a tractor. Junk dealers in the city have been many towns assisted the pupils by bring in scrap and telling us where we could find it. Some people who lacked ways of transportation piled their scrap by the side of the road and it was picked up by the pupils, either seniors or the sophomores have gathered the most scrap. We would also like to mention the fact that the seniors were assisted by three ex-seniors, Nora Peak, Betty Jane Clark and Marion Hiday. We have spotted quite a bit of more scrap than we didn't have time to bring in; however, as soon as we dispose of the scrap we have gathered we expect to have another drive.

Our school was one of the many who were pledged as Junior Texas Rangers.

HERE AND THERE: Due to the shortage of Olden men and boys for peanut harvest, our school has had several students absent during the last few weeks.

We would also like to mention the fact that the teachers said she was proud of her shorthand class. O. K. girls keep it up. There happens to be no boys taking shorthand.

The seniors have been assigned their parts in the class play. They will begin practice this week, as they plan to give their play at an early date.

We are glad to report that ever one is feeling relieved now that their six weeks test are over.

We were surprised when a young corporal walked in the gate last Thursday, especially when it turned out to be Junior Brown, stationed at San Antonio. He is a former student of our school.

We are proud of our former High School students who are in the armed forces of the United

We have two honorable D. L. Martin.

More than 350 artists of stage, screen and radio have toured the nation with 15 musical revues under such titles as "Hollywood Folies," "The Crazy Show," "Keep Shuffin'," "Hunky Dory Revue," and "Hot from Harlem." An expanded winter program of 79 shows, including 22 musical variety revues, 36 tabloid troupe units, 4 concert companies and 8 legitimate plays is now in preparation.

USO-Camp Shows was organized in the fall of 1941 to bring free "live" entertainment to the armed forces. Financed by the United Service Organizations, the entertainment program has now reached close to 5,000,000 men in the service. Nine trips have been made by overseas units.

Today's closing performances will cover such widely scattered points as Camp Livingston, Alexandria, La.; Camp Carson, Colorado Springs, Colo.; Fort Kearney, R. I.; Walla Walla Army Base,

Students Help Earn Way By Doing Odd Jobs

PHILADELPHIA (UP)—Do you want somebody to mind your children rake the leaves in the yard, shovel snow or wash the windows?

Students at the Mt. Airy Lutheran Theological Seminary will do those jobs—at a charge of not more than 55 cents an hour. The charge for minding children is 30 cents an hour until midnight, 40 cents an hour after midnight.

The student work committee has 33 students signed up to do the odd jobs on their free afternoons and evenings. John G. Wash, Hill Field, Ogden, Utah, and Inshore Patrol, Charleston, S. C.

Frank, committee chairman, said the jobs help the students earn their way and "keep them in touch with the outside world—in a practical way."

One woman, Frank said, hired a student to see what was wrong with her chimney.

Regular dormitories on the Women, Denton, provide college campus of Texas State College for residence for approximately 1600 students.

Holidays observed in Texas a lone are Texas Independence Day, March 1, and San Jacinto Day, April 21.

Why Bob Got A "C"

A worried teacher sat looking over her grade book with doubt in her mind. She didn't know whether to give Bob a C or a B. The grade was close to the line, and it was hard for her to come to a definite conclusion. Then she thought back over the preceding weeks and thought of the many times he had failed to have his work in on time; of the times he had talked giggled, and disturbed the class; of the many times he had not studied his lesson before class time; of the days he was absent. With a vicious jab of her pencil she put down his grade—yes, it was a C; and Bob could not understand why. The next time Bob, Tom, Mary, Jane, or what ever your name be, see if you can't make that grade an A or a B.

—Paul McDonald

The Royal Kingdom Of Hodges.

On Monday, October 19, each room of Hodges Oak Park School selected candidates for king and queen of the Halloween Carnival.

The following candidates are in the race: first grade—Shirley Townsend and Max Donley; second grade—Letty Lou Frasier and Erveta Stallings; third grade—Lida Jane Smith and Lynn Nick-son; fourth grade—Melba Maltby and Max Lyon; fifth grade—Donna Rae Sussrail and Jackie Bell; sixth grade—Gloria Rogers and B. Tony Lewis; seventh grade—Jacqueline Edwards and Jimmie Heinlin; eighth grade—Barbara Ann Stewart and Jimmie Crossley.

For one penny you can cast a vote for your choice for king and queen. Get behind those boys and girls with your pennies and help these boys and girls to elect their king and queen. The voting will stop on Monday, October 26, at 1:00.

The candidates who are not elected will be dukes and duchesses at the coronation of the king and queen the night of the carnival. Mrs. Phillips and Mrs. Robinson are working with some of our P. T. A. mothers on this coronation program.
