THE PARITY FORMULA

One can hardly consider the renewed battle over the farm parity formula without conflicting sentiments, Professionel farmer spokesman on the one side and provincial city-dwellers on the other may be able to see one argument as indisputably correct and the other as utterly wrong. But the matter is much less sim, be than that.

For many years the farmers have been in the economic dumps. For the first time since World War I they now have a market for all they can raiser at executer to prices. But they are unable to get help to plant, cultivate and harvest nor can they buy machinery.

Certainly the wages paid for labor constitute just as valid an element in the farmer's production cost as in that of the manufacturer or the merchant, and this should be true of the wage-allowance which the farmer makes for his own long day and that of members of his family.

So it would seem wrong for anybody to dogmatically condem farmers for asking to have wage costs made an element in the formula on which the ceiling prices of their products are to be based.

On the other hand, economists warn that if the parity formula is revised upward we must expect the entire price control, anti-inflation program to collapse.

Stabilization Director Byrnes has moved the farm wagceiling up to $2400 a year, which is little enough to compete with factory wages but which does open the door to a big lift in farm production costs. This increase, on top of wage boosts already effective, will push up the ceiling on farm prices if the parity formufa is amended to include! wages as an element.

Inevitably the price of foodstuffs to wholesalers and retailers will go up, and the distributors either must raise their prices or be ruined.

But foods are important elements in the cost of living. Any substantial boost in food prices will be ground for wage raises, which will increase the costs of what the farmer buys and the wage of the labor he hires. Thus, say the Bowl, Jan. 1, and the $90,000 or California and Oregon, or a dipsyeconomists, victous spiral will produce inflation.

The only method suggested by which we can avoid the Waterfield to spark what Coach alternative of doing injustice to the farmer or of producing inflation is a system of subsidies which would have to neld does all of the Bruins' passbe paid out of taxes levied on farmers factory workers, and ing. kicking and signal-calling. A DRIFT toward the creation of a much stronger war cabinet is discernible in the reorganization of government war agencies ansounced by the White House in recent executive orders, Heretofore, whenever there has been a new war job to do tendency has been to set up a new agency to do it. Practically all of these new war agencies have been set up outside the old line executive departments such as State, Commerce, Agriculture and so on. The result has been a confusing complicity of co-ordinators and such. But in four recent reorganization orders new

3. Control over food production and distribution, WE Edson Instead of being set up as a separate food administration, is given to Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wick

4. Problems of non-military administration of foreign laws occupied by U. S. troops are given to a new Office of Foreign Territories, OFT, likewise set up within the Department of State, under Paul Appleby, former under-secretary of agriculture,

A FIFTH indication of this trend A toward stronger cabinet con-trol might be listed in the current ment.

trol might be listed in the current Senate move to place funds expended by the Board of Economic Warfare under more strict control of Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones.

In the exception is, of course, the new order on manpower, transserring control over Selective Service to the War Manpower Commission under Paul V. McNutt. WMC is left within the organizational framework of the Office of Emergency Management, the big over-all war agency holding company. But the original plan was to put manpower contrel in the Department of Labor.

If this shuffling has any significance, it is that a lot of war jobs which were originally considered temporary are now being sized up as jobs that will have tup be carried over into the post-war period, and therefore they are being assigned to the established.
