AXIS LEARNS PLANS FOR 1943

REPORT SAYS HITLER OFFERS TO WITHDRAW 'TEMPORARILY' FROM COMMAND IN RUSSIA

Generals in conference demand that he assume an ornamental role as did the Kaiser in World War I

By JOHN A. PARRIS
United Press Staff Correspondent
LONDON, Eng. Feb. 13.—(UP)—Neutral advices from Berlin to Stockholm said today that Adolf Hitler had called a conference of his foremost generals including Field Marshals Fedor Von Bock and Walther Von Brauchitsch, and offered to withdraw "temporarily" from active command of Axis armies in Russia.

But Hitler wanted to remain commander-in-chief, the dispatches said. The generals, seeing he was looking for scapegoats, demanded that he give up his ambitions entirely, it was said, and resign himself to a purely ornamental role, as the late Kaiser Wilhelm had occupied during the world war.

Hitler was reported to have indignantly refused this demand, and presumably was left to bear responsibility for Nazi disasters in Russia alone.

Brauchitsch once was commander-in-chief. Hitler, moved by "intuition," fired him, and took his job. He also fired Bock, who once was commanding Axis armies on the northern Russian front.

The problem of defending himself against the coming Allied invasions of Europe concerned Hitler no less than the fate of his armies in Russia, these advices indicated as various Axis radio broadcasts.

A German trans-ocean agency dispatch, broadcast by radio Paris, said the Germans would begin evacuating 22,000 men, women and children from Brest, France, Monday, to "protect" the population against British attack. 22,000 persons was almost half the peacetime population of Brest, an excellent point for invasion.

The Norwegian government-in-exile said the Quisling district leader, Dr. Herold, had complained to his bosses that no policemen in the important southwestern Norwegian counties of Rogaland, Westagda and Eastagda could be trusted in case of invasion. Herold suggested that reliable Nazis should investigate the police thoroughly, that most should be sent off to prison, and replaced by Norwegian quirlings.

The Germans recently claimed to have unearthed a conspiracy to aid a British invasion in Southwestern Norway, and arrested many in a coastal town.

Japs Continue Their Flight From Island

By DON CASWELL
United Press Staff Correspondent
Gen. MacArthur's Headquarters, Australia, Feb. 13 (UP)—Japanese troops are continuing their flight from the Wau area of Northern New Guinea after suffering a humiliating and damaging defeat in a two-week battle with Australian Infantrymen, it was announced today.

About 1,000 of 3,000 enemy troops who had tried to capture Wau and with it an important Allied air base were dead in the jungles; the remainder were making their way along twisting trails toward Mubo, on the coast 12 miles southwest of the large Japanese base of Salamaua.

Announcing this success in five words of his communique—"the enemy continues his withdrawal"—Gen. Douglas MacArthur reported also the death of 225 additional Japanese in the North New Guinea area.

Of these 135 were killed by Allied combat patrols and 90 were found dead in the Kumusi-Opi River zones down the coast from Mubo. Among the dead were some who had starved. They were stragglers from the Gona mission area, where part of the Japanese Papuan Army was destroyed before the climactic battles of Buna and Sanananda.

Planes Roar Over Channel For An Unknown Target

By SIDNEY J. WILLIAMS
United Press Staff Correspondent
LONDON, Feb. 13 (UP)—Allied planes roared toward the continent in an almost continuous procession for hours over the southeast English coast today, and it was indicated that major raids were being made, on enemy territory.

The planes were in unusual force and flying at tremendous height, observers reported from the southeast coast, as they made toward Calais on the French occupied coast.

It was believed that American as well as British planes might have been among the many formations.

"Though there was brilliant sunshine along the coast, the planes flew too high to be seen, United Press Watchers reported.

The first planes returned after 45 minutes, coming from the Boulogne direction, bombers escorted by heavy forces of fighters.

Railroad junctions and industrial areas were believed to have been among the targets.

Enemy planes made a hit and run raid on a southwest coast town shortly before noon. Bombs caused considerable damage to shops and homes. Some planes machine gunned the streets, and it was feared that there had been numerous casualties including fatalities.

Rescue squads worked to extricate persons buried under the debris.

Germany reported that isolated British bombers had made nuisance raids last night over Western Germany and said that slight damage was caused at one place by isolated bombs.

Texas City Tin Smelter Being Enlarged Now

AUSTIN, Texas, Feb. 13.—Now the most modern establishment of its kind in the world, the tin smelter at Texas City is now in the process of being enlarged to the point where it will also be the largest.

Governor Coke Stevenson called attention to this fact today in discussing the contribution which Texas is privileged to make to the war effort and the potentialities in the State for a significant post-war development.

In 1940 the contract was signed for Holivan ore to be used in this smelter. Early the next year, the construction contract was awarded to N. V. Billiton Company and on April 5, 1942 the first tin was produced from the new plant.

The smelter is now being greatly enlarged to meet increasing demands for tin war purposes and definite plans have been made to continue the tin smelting business here after the war.

Low fuel costs and cheap hydrochloric acid were particularly important considerations in locating the smelter in Texas.

Governor Stevenson revealed that research bureaus of State educational institutions and various departments of the State government were working together very closely in laying plans for maximum utilization of the State's natural resources for peacetime purposes.

A very important meeting of the Retail Merchants Association will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the Association's office.

The instructors expressed their appreciation to the women workers and to everyone who had any part in setting up the room and to those who contributed anything toward the work.

Reds Gain Center As Report Spreads Rostov On Fire

The Axis powers learned today that the great Allied offensive of 1943 would strike at Japan as well as Germany and Italy—but a more immediate development in the swing of victory toward the Allies was the steady deterioration of the Nazi hold on Russia.

The German high command acknowledged the loss of Krasnodar, the Germans last railroad junction in the Caucasus, assuring the Soviets of reclaiming all of that rich land and confronting the enemy armies there with a choice of fleeing across the Kerch Straits or submitting to liquidation.

Moscow broadcasts received in London said the Germans had also abandoned hope of holding Rostov on the Don, gateway to the Caucasus, and had set the entire city afire.

Only in Tunisia was the Axis on the offensive today, and even there the Allies were holding firm.

The Germans launched an attack with tanks in an attempt to widen the Axis corridor on the Tunisia east coast but British forces hurled them back.

President Roosevelt's speech last night made it clear that Japan is included in this year's offensive plans. He said Allied armies would march through the streets of Berlin, Rome and Tokyo, and that the enemy would be hit so hard from so many directions that it would not know "which was its bow and which was its stern."

News From Washington

BY PETER EDSON NEA Service Washington Correspondent

A new lot of poppycock has been put out lately about the Army's School of Military Government, set up by Provost Marshal and Judge Advocate General Allen W. Gullion at the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. Criticism of this enterprise has tried to make it something sinister—a college for would-be "gouglers" to run things when the Army "takes over."

Edson

Part of this trouble may be the Army's own fault for talking in generalities about the school instead of saying in simple language that graduates of Charlottesville, far from being political deep-dish intriguers of the State Department variety, were in reality intended to be nothing more than the equivalent of U. S. state, county or municipal highway commissioners, public health officers, directors of public utilities and so on in occupied areas.

For reasons of security, the Army is not yet ready to reveal where some of the Charlottesville graduates have been assigned. But it can be told that few were sent to Africa and if there had been more such assignments, General Eisenhower might not have run into all the difficulties he encountered with French colonial officials there. The Charlottesville school is intended to train men for just such jobs.

Simple facts and an examination of its curriculum, records and enrollment seem to indicate that the principal function of the Charlottesville School of Military Government is to provide a four-month short course in public administration, contemporary history and economics for hand-picked civilians.

When these men graduate they will theoretically be ready to move in with an expeditionary force and as that force advances, take over supervision of the local government.

The Charlottesville trained officers will relieve the military commander of keeping order behind the lines, restoring transportation and communication systems, water systems, sewage systems, looking after public health.

The third class at Charlottesville has just begun its courses. Each enrollment is limited to 150, but it has been so difficult to find qualified candidates for the school that no cadre has been full.

The Charlottesville school is only one part of the Army's program for training administrators. These will be the senior officers whose average age is about 45, which the Army thinks is too high-probably assigned to corps or Army headquarters.

At Fort Custer, Mich., which is Army training center for military police and M. P. officers, special courses are given to junior officers who will be assigned to subordinate military government posts in occupied countries. The job of the military police, of course, is to maintain order behind the lines. In every case, they are to use existing local government machinery, superimposing American direction.

In addition to that, the office of the provost marshal general, working with other civilian agents of the federal government, is picking out some 2500 men now in civilian occupations, both public and private, such as superintendents of streets, sewage disposal, water works, and industrial and utility engineers, and is commissioning them as officers in the active reserve. These officers will be given two months' special training in courses now being established in various colleges and universities to familiarize them with the customs, geography and local affairs of a particular area.

The whole job is one of good general staff planning for future developments.

Cadettes Will Start Engineering Classes Today

AUSTIN, Tex., Feb. 11 — More than 100 college girls from all parts of the country will arrive Friday, Feb. 12, at the University of Texas to begin a ten-month training course as Engineering Cadettes, so that they may take over technical jobs in the Car-the-Wright Aircraft Corporation's war plants.

The University is one of eight schools in the entire nation selected to train these cadettes, because of the caliber of its new aeronautical engineering department.

The cadettes will be housed in the Campus Guild, a recently built student-owned "cooperative house" and will take their courses in the University's engineering building.

Defeat Of--

"It's over boys," they cried. "We chased those yellow (unprintable) back to Japan."

Old friends from the two forces recognized each other despite the dirt and beads on their faces and the camouflaging of their uniforms. They greeted each other uproariously.

One said "Jeeze, men, I wish we had a bottle to celebrate. I'll bet my mom will be glad when she reads this back home."

Exhausted, the men toppled on the ground for the first relaxation since the offensive to drive the Japs from the island was renewed Feb. 1 by landing troops at Vornhu, 18 miles beyond Cape Esperance behind the Jap lines and trapping the enemy between two columns rushing along the coast.

The historical battle for Guadalcanal, which began six months and two days ago, 35 miles to the east down the coast near the mouth of the Tenaru river, ended at 2:25 p. m., about 100 yards west of the deserted native village of Enanba, near the Tenaraba simultaneous drives of the two American columns ended completely the Japanese occupation of the island and for the first time in the Pacific war, the Nippons were forced to retreat from previously conquered territory.

Except for a few hundred who escaped in small boats from the northern part of the island in the past fortnight, the Japanese army and Marine units on Guadalcanal were utterly annihilated or taken prisoner.

In their haste to evacuate the then untenable island, the Japs left great quantities of booty behind them. This included two complete radio stations and scores of Sampan and landing boats, about 200 collapsible boats and dozens of outboard motors, field pieces, machine gun coastal guns, ammunition, food and medical supplies. Few Japanese officers were captured, but everywhere there was evidence of their exodus. Behind

SOMETHING went out of the Yankees when Vernon Gomez was shunted to the Braves—the life of the party.

Because of his greater variety of stuff while he was winning from 21 to 26 games a year, not a few trained observers rated Lefty Gomez the superior of Lefty Grove, but the gray caballero will be remembered for whoops witticisms. Light-hearted Lefty, inventor of the revolving bowl for old gold-fish, tells a story better than he knows, has a million of them. He even made Ed Barrow laugh. El Goofy weighed no more than 152 pounds when he came up. President Barrow suggested that he put on 20 pounds and make them forget Jack Chesbro. "I put on 20," explains the senior, "and almost made them forget Gomez." ASKED what his ambition was, Gomez replied that it was to ride from the bullpen in deep left field at Yankee Stadium to the pitcher's box on July Fourth, dressed in armor and wearing a red, white and blue straw hat. While the Giants were rallying in a World Series game in 1937, Gomez held up the festivities to gaze at an airplane overhead. With the bases loaded, he paused to inspect a diamond ring on the finger of the umpire at second base, told him to come in the clubhouse afterward and see a better one. In 1941, Art Fletcher advised Gomez to throw harder. "I'm throwing twice as hard as I ever did," said Gomez, "only not as fast." JOHNNY MURPHY relieved Gomez so frequently in '41 that scorekeepers had the urge to record them as a combination. Joe McCarthy asked Gomez if he felt ready to start. "Better find out first how Murphy feels," suggested the pill-popping Pagliacci. "I don't know how much pitching the Braves will get out of Lefty Gomez, but they'll get many a laugh. Perhaps that's why Casey Stengel bought him. With that pair on the same club, the broadcasting should be done from the dugout. It would be the funniest program on the air."

FRECKLES AND HIS FRIENDS

BY MERRILL BLOSSER

• SERIAL STORY

'I AM A MURDERER'

BY MORRIS MARKEY

PRENTISS—DUNBAR CHAPTER XXV HAD made Henry Prentiss, during that year, with all the ethereal care which a sculptor would devote to a major work, had begun by writing down, after the fashion of a novelist, the all and complete story of his life—an imaginary life which began in a home of pampered wealth, and led through many adventures, all amusing and a few even dangerous, to the quiet of his pleasures on the Pacific coast. I carefully recounted his whims and his idiosyncrasies. And I rev, with all the skill I could command, the presence which he flered to the world: his physical appearance, his interests, his humors and his graces—or lack of them. Then I set to work to bring that character into existence; to take him live and breathe, as vividly and as strongly marked as I possibly could without going to the length of caricature. Polo was a savagely difficult art of it. But I must play polo! I was to enter fully and smoothly into the way of life of Gull Point. In the first place, I had a natural aptitude for games, excuse the struggles to keep alive in my early years had left no time for them. And certainly I had no aptitude for a game demanding a high degree of horsemanship. Added to this was the fact that I had always been left-handed, and already the polo associations were frowning upon left-handed players because they were a source of danger on the field. It required not weeks, but months and months of hard, daily schooling under the coach whom employed before I was good enough to seek an invitation to one of the club games at the Riviera Club. I never really enjoyed single moments of any of the ones that I played. Almost fantastic luck played to my hands, the only real stroke of luck that ever appeared in my low pursuit of the plan. That was when Fred West came to California to play two or three times at the club there. My inquiries at Gull Point had already put him among the people I must know, and cultivate. And could hardly believe the turn of fortune which made him an acquaintance, if not a friend, even before the time when I would make my appearance on Long Sand. It was an acquaintanceship of sudden worth to me. PERHAPS it would be well, here, to explain somewhat more clearly the way in which I proposed to carry out my purpose—and at the same time run no risk of detection, or the bleak humility of capture. Henry Prentiss would become a fully active partner in all the life of Gull Point: an amusing, and indeed an interesting addition to the idle life of the community; well-to-do, not burdened with too much of brains, generous, warm of nature, as obvious as a thousand of his kind in like communities all over the world, and no more mysterious than a shower of rain. Becoming a fixture within the scene, he would become, so to speak, his own accomplice. For, after gaining an intimate knowledge of the pattern of life in Gull Point and at Stone House, he would be able to choose the moment and call the cue for the entrance of that second character, the executioner. You will observe, I am sure, the manifold advantages of the double impersonation. The existence of Henry Prentiss, his patent innocence and harmlessness, would become firmly established. When the execution occurred, nobody on earth would even think twice about good old Hank. But, being on the inside as it were, Henry Prentiss could choose the moment of the climax at will. He could bring on the executioner, in whatever shape the latter was, at precisely the right moment. The executioner would vanish when his work was done, but Henry Prentiss, good old Hank, would still occupy his own familiar niche in the society of the neighborhood. Furthermore, he would be able to follow the course of the chase for the executioner, to know precisely how that chase went, to learn instantly of any mistakes that might have been made. For more than a year I lived at Gull Point without thinking seriously at all of the executioner's character, when, finally, the time would come for him to reach the scene. Needless to say, I was quickly invited to Stone House. I had so immersed myself in the character of Henry Prentiss that I could sit with Norman Tinker or with my sister, called Cynthia Merrivether, and never suffer a least qualm, either of conscience or of fear. I chatted many a time with Norman Tinker, knowing well that he was in my hands, and that I should dispose of it when the fitting moment came. I did not gloat, I felt neither unholily joy nor foolish anxiety. I was at work upon a job. (To Be Continued)
