They scored one hit Tuesday when wheat market prices reached out to try to attain the alltime high of $3.25 which follow-ed World War I. And just as sure as shooting some of these skyrocketing market prices are going to bring about some crashthat will be equally as spectacular and as devastating as anything that happened in the period between the two wars.

· And speaking of prices, this little story represents the same kind of vengance that most of us would like to experience a minst excessively high prices.

TREATY OF DUNKERQUE

Very few who are now alive would ever have forgotten Dunkerque, anyway. That sleepy little city on the Channel coast of France was the scene of the most disastrous, and at the same time perhaps the most glorious incident in World War II. As such, it must have lived forever in history and long in every individual memory.

In May of 1940, while still most of us spelled it Dunkirk and were uncertain where it was, 335,000 harried and bedraggled soldiers gathered on the Dunkerque beach in utmost peril. Most of them were British. And they constituted most of what few Britons were trained and equipped for warfare. Behind them a jubilant and apeparently invincible enemy rushed in for the kill.

If these were lost, Britain was lost. If the Germans could destroy or capture this fleeing remains of the British Expeditionary Force, nothing could keep Hitler out of London , Edinburgh, Dublin

The Belgians were beaten. The Dutch were whipped The French were on the verge of surrender. Poland was occupied. Russia was Germany's ally-

It was a disastrous situation, but it was turned into a glorious one. The indomitable Churchill said gloomily that Britain would be lucky to save 10 per cent of that personnel. Yet through a frenzied national effort unmatched in fact or fiction most of the 335,000 were brought home alive

No, we never would have forgotten Dunkerque. But now We have a new reason for remembering that historic little town and beach. It was there-where France and Britain almost split in 1940-that these two nations put the capstone on an alliance that, twice in modern times, has saved the world from final ravishment. However tired both nations may seem today, that alliance is indispensable to the happier world we are trying to create.

A treaty can be just a scrap of paper, if that is how its parties feel. But this treaty is a concrete expression of an interdependence that no sane person in either nation can ever question again.

Both countries have made it very clear that this is not another old-fashioned bloc alliance directed against Russia. They want the Soviet Union-and the United Statesto join. In fraternity parlance, they propose not only to "tap" Russia for membership, but to "rush" her to the limit.

The Treaty of Dunkerque will go down in the records as one of the vitally important documents of 20th century diplomacy. And in that treaty, Dunkerque village and Dunkerque beach will have added historical prestige and increased affection in the world's heart.

BY HARRY GRAYSON NEA Sports Editor

NEW YORK-(NEA)-Like many another trained observer who has been close to the situation, Lew Byrer is surprised only that pro-fessional boxing didn't land in the sports gambling expose sooner and "More than any other sport, the manly art of modified mayhem seems to attract unsavory charac- 9ters," points out the veteran sports editor of the Columbus Citizen.

"You'll usually find a plentiful sprinkling of professional gam-blers in ringside seats. In prohi-bition days there were also usublers in ringside seats. In prohibition days there were also usually quite a few bejeweled and gaudily-dressed sellers of illicit gigglewater down front. The promoters were often bootleggers on the side or vice versa. It used to moters were often bootleggers on the side or vice versa. It used to astonish this observer how often a manager looked like the Holly-

"When you add to that con-glomeration the facts that most fighters are a bit punch-drunk by the time they attain prominence are made up of political hangers-on, you understand why boxing might be an easy field for the sure-thing manipulator.

"A fix is also comparatively easy in boxing. You only have two guys to fix. In some cases it's only necessary to fix one.

"The amazing thing is that more instances of attempts to fix fights have not come to light."

"The "The amazing thing is that more instances of attempts to fix fights have not come to light."

RYRER reminds you that there are three kinds of fixed fights. They've been fixed for gamblers, ers and to preserve draw-as in wrestling, sometimes And, as in wrestling, sometimes a well-fixed fight is more entertaining than one on the level.

I have known well-known fighters to engage in series that excited the stomers and which were noth-4 more than a series of acts, and nothing much was said or written about them in that light,

I saw two famous welters turn in one of the most exciting and bloodiest "battles" on record, and knew it was a Barney.

The fight was satisfactory to the trade. If the majority of New York sports writers covering the "show" suspected anything, they didn't show it in print.

BYRER recalls one of the greatest fights he ever saw. It wasn't until years afterward that he heard that the fight between Harry Greb and Tiger Flowers at Fremont, O., some 20 years ago was staged to build up a return.

ring showmen.
"They can fight plenty if the occasion demands, but they can make better money more often with less wear and tear through putting on a show instead of trying to kill each other off."

If competent boxing commis-sions everywhere would do an adequate job of policing the events they're supposed to supervise, and drive and keep out undesirables, they might keep the beak-busting business clean.

As it is, it's the poorest money'sworth in America.

handed her a package. Sherry was interested in the feel of it. She pened it quickly. It was a beau-tifully bound volume of Byron, and Kris had written on the fly-leaf "Sherry" and then a word in Danish and then, "from Kris." The Danish word meant "the lovely," she found out. Sherry was touched and a little thrilled.

DINNER was a success. The turkey was golden brown and the champagne cold and sparkling. They all ate a great deal and talked and laughed a lot.

It was dark when they finally finished and Sherry lighted the Christmas tree. Mona seemed restless and looked at the clock frequently. After a while Sherry asked her what was the matter.

Mona said, "Why, nothing at all. What do you mean?" But her voce had an edge to it.

Marcia said, "That tone of voice always means a man."

Mona was annoyed. She said. Marcia laughed good-naturedly,

"How Can You Help Prevent War?"

Americans generally had very specific ideas on how they, as individuals, could do their bit for the war effort. But nearly two-thirds of them can think of no way in which they can do their bit toward eliminating future war, according to a recent survey made by Denver University's National Opinion Research Center. As Newschart above shows, 64 per cent answered "No" when asked if they could think of anything that they, personally, could do to help prevent another war. The suggestions offered by the 36 per cent who answered "Yes" are shown at right.
