Snake Bite May Be Serious So Treat Promptly

The speed with which a snake can bite and move away may leave doubt in the mind of a victim or his companions whether or not the reptile was poisonous.

A nonpoisonous snake does not leave fang marks (puncture points), only surface scratches (perhaps in horseshoe shape, and there is no swelling, discoloration, or severe general reaction. This bite should be treated like a minor scratch.

However, if fang marks are present, if there is severe pain, swelling and a purple color around the bite, or if the patient has trouble with breathing, faintness or other evidence of general illness, call a doctor, and until he arrives give first aid as follows:

Sterilize a knife or razor blade with a flame, alcohol, or iodine. Apply a hand just above the bite, apply alcohol to the region surrounding it, and make a cross cut about one-fourth inch deep in the skin directly over each fang mark. Withdraw the venom with a suction cup or with small glasses having a diameter of from 1 1/4 to 2 inches in the following manner: Moisten the bite area with water, cold cream, or petroleum jelly. Light a small scrap of paper, drop it into the bottom of a glass, and allow it to burn a moment, then drop the burning paper into a pan of water. Press the mouth of the glass over the bite area until the cooling air starts suction; leave it in place a few minutes, while preparing another glass to replace it. Continue suction until considerable fluid has been recovered or until the doctor arrives.

One point to keep in mind is that the victim of snakebite should not be given alcohol. It speeds up the flow of blood and increases the spread of poison throughout the body. It also depresses the part of the brain already slowed down by the venom.

Portable Power Plant Available

A new movable power plant, controlled by electric brakes and clutches, is in heavy demand by industries needing portable power.

The unit is a self-contained electric power plant with a 1,500-watt output and can operate on either a 110-volt current (similar to house current) or an independent six-volt system (similar to the current in the average passenger car).

Warner Electric Brake & Clutch Co. says the new device can operate pumps, compressors, hand tools and any other portable machinery.

The portable power plant weighs 1,180 pounds. Under normal conditions it is towed by a small service truck, but for short distances it can be towed easily by hand, because a lifting force of only 100 pounds is needed on the front end, the company said.

NEWS FROM STAFF

By Mrs. M. O. Hazard

The people of Staff had a close call Monday, when a small tornado struck and passed over about 10 a.m. It originated on the M. O. Hazard farm and moved in an eastward direction to the O. T. Hazard farm, where it changed its course to a northeasterly direction toward Strawn. Residents consider themselves lucky as the twister played havoc with everything in its path. It did not strike any building and no one was injured. It destroyed timber and fences. The writer watched the funnel-shaped cloud during the blow. A few drops of rain fell.

Said To Be Saddest Face In All History

NASHVILLE, TENN. — The face of Christ with his disciples at the last supper, as depicted by Leonardo da Vinci, is said to be the saddest face in all history. A new interpretation of that face is being seen by thousands of visitors to the newly consecrated Upper Room Chapel here.

The chapel, built in connection with the new headquarters building for The Upper Room, the world's most widely used devotional guide, features a great woodcarving of Leonardo da Vinci's Last Supper. Hailed as a work of art with breath-taking beauty, it is hoped that it will inspire visitors to bridge the centuries and at least for a few minutes of meditation and prayer commune with Christ as he said: "This is my body which is broken for you." The chapel is open daily for prayer and meditation.

During its first two years, Ford Motor Company assembled approximately 3,200 cars in this rented building on Detroit's Mack Avenue. Ford's 19 U. S. assembly plants, 50 years later built almost twice that number of autos each working day.

Illegal Sharks Prosper; Texas Is A Paradise

Of all the money owed to loan sharks in the United States, nearly one-half is owed by the citizens of Texas, according to a study made by the Bureau of Business Research of Western Reserve University.

Edward B. Winn of Dallas, first vice president of the Junior Bar of Texas, citing this finding, asks, "Why do Texans pay almost as much to loan sharks as the people of the other 47 states combined? He will make their home in Chicago."

Because 33 states have solved the small loan problem through legislation that is fair alike to borrower and lender—with the result that the usurers, driven out of these other states, concentrate in the remaining states, of which Texas is the chief.

"And that is why our State is known as the 'loan sharks' paradise." The Junior Bar of Texas is urging adoption of a constitutional amendment and a statute, prepared by a special committee of the State Bar of Texas, placing a ceiling on all charges, whether called interest or anything else, that a borrower has to pay. This small loan legislation also would place the loan companies under the supervision of the State Banking Department.

FHA Cash Requirements Stymie Buyers; Urge Small Downpayments

For the three out of five prospective home buyers who found the house they wanted last weekend and couldn't buy because of high down payment, the nation's builders have a few practical suggestions.

Don't get mad at your builder. He doesn't fix the downpayment tion and rehabilitation not only will make better housing available for Americans in high, low and middle income brackets, but will also create a solid bulwark against "recession" or "depression" when and if peace ends the armament boom.

But that kind of a housing program depends squarely upon the continued ability of families to buy the kind of home needed. And that, in turn, depends largely upon how big a down payment can be made.

Federal Housing agencies were set up, originally, to make it easier to purchase a home—with small downpayment and a long-term mortgage so that the monthly carrying charges can be paid out of income.

But it hasn't worked out that way for many millions of prospective buyers.

Here's what has happened to that easy home ownership idea in the past few years:

Inflation has hit just about everything in sight, including income, taxes and living costs, as well as the cost of building homes.

Ten years ago, for example, a new home built for the average family cost about $6,000. The down payment on a mortgage insured by the Federal Housing Administration was 10 per cent, or $600.

A comparable home built today for the same family would cost about $12,000 because construction materials, wages and land costs have more than doubled. But today's FHA minimum down payment on that $12,000 house is 20 per cent, or $2,400—four times as much as a decade ago!

With taxes and living costs taking a bigger bite than ever out of income, few families can put aside that much cash toward a new home, NAHB points out.

Home builders are convinced that the cash problem can be solved quickly and easily—if FHA would make a few simple changes in its down payment requirements.

Builders also have recommended that the government stretch out the repayment period on all FHA and GI home mortgages under $12,000 to 30 years instead of the present 25 years. This would cut down considerably the size of monthly payments.

School Lunches Be Improved By Milk Donations

U. S. Department of Agriculture is making available 100 million pounds nonfat dry milk solids for donation to school lunchrooms, welfare organizations in the United States and its territories and to private welfare organizations assisting needy persons in foreign countries.

According to John J. Slaughter, southwest area field supervisor, Production and Marketing Administration's food distribution branch, USDA, Dallas, the milk is being donated under authority of Section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949.

This authority specifies that receivers must pay handling and transportation charges, also any other charges as may be needed for adequate protection of the milk from point of origin to point of destination.

Milk is packed in wooden export barrels and fiber drums, each weighing 175 to 255 pounds. Ten units is the minimum for any domestic agency to order and 40,000 pounds, or one carload, for foreign use.

Milk will be available for the six month period beginning May 4. Application for domestic distribution should be made within the first 90 days.

Commodity Credit Corporation acquired the milk under the support price program.

Further details on distribution may be obtained from PMA's food distribution branch, Dallas, or from the State Department of Public Welfare, Austin.

Street Lighting Now Obsolete

Increased night automobile traffic has outmoded old-fashioned street lighting, the American Public Works Association reports.

lamps now installed throughout the country are obsolete and inadequate, the Association said. It suggested new, improved lighting be placed high enough above and over the street surface to avoid glare and to distribute sufficient light properly to make the streets safe for motorists and crossing pedestrians.

Murder she yelled

By Joseph Cavillit

THE STORY: Al Kemmer, owner of High Hill Lodge, is murdered. Edith Fields, an entertainer, is seriously hurt in an attack by an unknown person who used an axe. The violence seems somehow connected with a gangland slaying of a small-time racketeer in the vicinity. Dan Morrison, athletic director, has been trying to find clues. Now he learns that Midge Burnett, a singer, that Dan has found suspicious, has roved across the lake in a canoe and has not returned.

—nalling all his signs to Pennsylvania's State tree. Something red high up on the bank. I eased in toward shore. Half-hidden by foliage, a red canoe. I separated the bushes hiding it. The stenciled words on the bow socked me. "High Hill 7."

XXII
UNEASINESS tingled through my skin at the thought of Midge Burnett running into that excited, vengeful Griscomb or that excitable slob in the blue serge suit. I threw a couple of paddles into my favorite canoe. No. 5, untied the painter and pushed off.

About 300 yards out, I heard some dim yelling back at the dock. A man was waving at me. It looked vaguely like a cop's uniform. I waved back and kept going.

I settled down to some steady paddling. It was about a mile across the lake in a straight course, but I'd have a lot of maneuvering to do if I wanted to check all the coves and dimples in the shoreline for a parked canoe.

I cut around the eastern end of the island, faced open water again. Across the clear, milky stretch, the north shore was a dense jungle. I aimed the canoe directly north for the nearest part of the bank. It was close to 8 when I nosed up to the thickly crusted greenery. A sign was waiting for me. Nailed to a hemlock jutting out over the water, big black letters on a white-painted board said "Keep Out." Okay, I wasn't disembarking here anyway. I turned left and paddled along the bank, keeping a lookout for a stranded canoe or a shipwrecked girl.

Another sign came along. "Private." Attached, like the other, to a hemlock. I was sure this was Griscomb's work; only Griscomb would have thought of this beach

I DASHED into the tangled woods. I stopped. My eyes darted around. I saw a spot where some of the leafy carpeting was matted up. Some big shoes had been through here.

I stiffened. I'd seen it. Obliquely. It could only be seen out of the corner of the eye. A series of spots where the soil debris was darker, duller, because crushed by footsteps. I walked a few steps—and lost the trail. I twisted my head, scanning sideways—I got it again. That was the trick: walking with the head at an angle.

In five minutes I was out on a black dirt path that wound through the woods. Footprints marked the dirt in both directions. Toward the east, I guessed, the path ran into the sketchy trail leading to Griscomb's house. Toward the west... the footsteps leading that way seemed newer. I started west.

I heard men's voices, rising and falling jerkily on the wind-drifts. I heard no footsteps. I inched forward, dealing out my feet carefully, watching for pebbles. The path wound ahead with uncomfortable abrupt turns. I glimpsed part of a house through a rift in the trees. Another turn of the path—I stopped—threw myself into the brush.

Directly ahead of me, not 20 yards away, were four men, sitting around a white metal table under a big, green-striped umbrella. Nobody had noticed me. Cards were shuffled, passed around, colored chips moved here and there—it was a pretty little layl there in the shadow of a pleasant-looking, three-story, white clapboard house.

But there were some things wrong with the scene. Small things. Like one of the players with his hat on, resting way on the back of his head. And something about a couple of the faces—a kind of loose, sloppy viciousness. And the voices—I couldn't get more than a few words, but they were funny words—"ga-f." "Take a brodie," and after a little argument, a loud "can it, you yegg."

The order to can it came from the player facing me, a small, narrow-shouldered guy with a puffed-cheek squirrel face. I looked hard at that face. I had the feeling I'd seen it before. But I didn't have the least idea where. "When I figured I'd completely circled the rear, I cut in toward the house."

A MAN was seated at the sink, peeling onions. He looked up—dark, pudgy, overworked face. "Okay," he said in a cheery voice. "You just get in?"

"Just this minute." The big white apron, I could see, wasn't so white. His hands were a little on the earthy side, too, and there was a mercury-colored bandage on his forefinger that was tinting the onions. "What's on the menu?" I said.

"Duck." "Swell. Haven't tasted a real piece of duck in months." He nodded.

"Who's the little guy playing cards outside?" I said. "Cookie ran cold water over the knife to quell the onion fumes. You don't know him? That's Peanuts Morganza."

"Oh, sure—sure—I didn't recognize him with that tan." And I did—at least I'd seen his picture in the papers. Peanuts had been one of a parade of reluctant witnesses before a New York grand jury, investigation the numbers racket. "Lots of people would sure like to talk to him," I said, jocularly, just one of the boys. "Sure," said Cookie, "but how're they gonna find him?" (To Be Continued)

No doubt about it... Chevrolet trucks must be the best buy!

Ask us about our Safe-T-Way SERVICE

A public service program to promote safer driving.

CHEVROLET

This year—for the 12th straight production year—truck users are buying more Chevrolet trucks than any other make. That couldn't be true unless Chevrolet trucks offered more of what you want.

Already, 1953's official sales figures tell a remarkable story of clear-cut and decisive preference for Chevrolet trucks. But, this is not surprising, for truck users everywhere are discovering how far ahead of all others Chevrolet trucks really are.

They are discovering things like the tremendous new power in advanced Load-master engines in heavy-duty models... the remarkable gasoline economy... the extra ruggedness and strength of heavier, more rigid frame construction.

And, in addition to all these advantages, the Chevrolet line lists for less than any other trucks of comparable size and capacity. So, before you buy any truck, stop in and see us.

If all vehicles built by Ford Motor Company were placed end to end, they would stretch 110,953 miles—approximately half-way to the moon. A good bit of that distance had been covered by Jan. 18, 1937, when Edsel Ford, then president of the company, posed with the 25,000,000th Ford passenger car—a V-8 Henry Ford is seated in his first car, built in 1896.

ORGANIZED CRIME TO CEASE WHEN PRIVATE CITIZENS IN AMERICA OPEN ALL-OUT WAR

Warfare against modern mobdom was to be total warfare, asserts an article in the June issue of Man's Day, which warns that Senate, state and local crime investigations, the election of a new mayor or governor, the passing of new laws, are not enough to end organized crime.

More and more legitimate enterprises. Putting the big boys in jail is harder than it looks, says Man's Day. An example—the 23 laws the Kefauver Committee recommended to Congress. These were going to make it almost impossible for the underworld to function. All of these measures, but one, perished in Congress.

Motive Behind Speed Traps Is Cash, Not Safety

Hundreds of U. S. communities on well traveled main highways are being turned into speed traps by cash hungry officials. The result is that vacationing Americans are paying outrageous on-the-spot fines to avoid losing valuable vacation time. This charge against unscrupulous constables and justices of the peace was made in an article, prepared with the help of the American Automobile Association, which lists speed traps from Maine to California.

These "cash register justice" officials are making lawbreakers out of responsible drivers asserts the article, by stretching a 25-mile-an-hour "village limit" far out into the country. When a 45-mile-an-hour motorist enters the reduced speed zone, a local officer can slap a fine on him for going 16 m.p.h.

This situation could be erased, said the article, if every state would adopt speed restriction that conform to the Uniform Vehicle Code. This provides that rural speed limits apply except in build-up sections, regardless of the city boundary line. It also prohibits posting lower limits without permission of the state government.

The best weapon against existing traps is publicity, says the article. When the American Automobile Association gets a complaint it investigates, and if a trap does exist, the AAA sends a warning bulletin to all members.

According to the National Safety Council, the enforcement of sound traffic laws does not mean the wholesale arrest of motorists who are technical violators. A community's safety record should not be based on the number of arrests but on its freedom from accidents. The most effective deterrent to speeding, concludes the article, is the presence of traffic police on the highway—not speed traps sprung by hidden cops.

Murder she yelled

By Joseph Shalita

THE STORY: Al Kemmer, owner of High Hill Lodge, is murdered, and Eddie Fields, an entertainer, seriously wounded by an assassin. Eddie didn't see the attacker but believes the person escaped in a car afterwards. Dan Morrison, athletic director, suspects C. G. Gistrom, who hates the intrusions of resort owners on his land. Dan goes to see Gistrom and is captured. Dan overpowers Gistrom and takes his high-powered rifle and an envelope containing $500, which he says is a man in a blue serge suit give Gistrom. When Dan gives this to Sergeant Healey of the state police, Healey says Dan has gone outside the law and tells Dan he'll have to return the money. About that time, Dave Fields, Eddie's brother, arrives and says he wants to change his mind for the time of the killing. Dave says he was with only Ann Puschnick at the time. She is one of the recent guests.

just trying to figure out an excuse for dropping in. "You ought to figure out an excuse for dropping dead," said Kitty. She was wearing billowy silk louncing pajamas, a grisly memento. She was sprawled on the bed, her legs spread loosely, like a rag doll. Roslyn was sitting in the stuffed chair. She didn't see me. Her eyes stared out at air, weary but remorseless.

"Why did you do that to my husband?" she said. "What're you talking about?" Kitty said harshly. Roslyn's eyelids tightened. Her nostrils lifted. "You murderer!" she screamed, and suddenly she was out of her chair, diving into the bed at Kitty.

Kitty howled in alarm, tried to ward her off, tried to roll out of the way, but Roslyn was on her long body in an instant, her claws ripping at Kitty's chest, arms, face. I grabbed Roslyn by the waist, lost hold, then grabbed her again with both arms and hauled her off, carrying her through the air like a hissing, spitting cat.

KITTY LANE slowly sat up on the bed. She was a wrecked woman. Her black hair dangled around her face like spaghetti. There were scratches on her nose and forehead. Her silk pajamas were ripped at the shoulder. She looked bleakly at me. She didn't say a word. "What's this all about, Roslyn?" I said. I was sitting on her lap and holding her arms. "Ask her."

she lost her head and went and killed him—

"No!" Kitty yelled weakly. "—and tried to kill my husband." "I see." I let her go and got off the chair. "You got it out of your head, huh? Woman's intuition?"

Roslyn jumped up, but I stood between her and Kitty. "You'd better go back to your room and rest up," I said. "You had a rough night."

Roslyn gave up—she went out without any more fuss. I watched through the window as she went down the steps. "Kitty," I said, "what was that all about?"

She was sitting on the bed fumbling in her handbag. "You tell me," she said savagely. "You don't sound so interested—or sorry."

"What do you want me to do—scream? Am I supposed to run down the road, tearing my hair, to prove I'm sorry? And prove I didn't do it? I loved Al Kemmer more than anybody else did, anybody in the world. I stuck by him. I gave him my best, my best years. Do I have to say I didn't kill Al Kemmer and don't know a thing about it?"

WHEN the girl told me Midge Burnett was missing, nothing happened in me. "She'll be back," I said, and walked away. But the girl, whose name was Markham and who roomed next to Midge, chased after me and caught my arm and told me it was serious. Midge had taken a canoe out by herself about 10 in the morning and hadn't told anybody where she was going, and now it was getting after 5 and no sign of her. That big, handsome cotman, Leo Ritchie, had been over to the cottage a dozen times looking for her.

I walked down to the lake. The sun was edging around toward the west, and the lake was a golden shimmer, and half a dozen late bathers were splashing in blaring glory. I counted the canoes at the dock. There were three missing. I saw two on the lake, but no sign of the third. (To Be Continued)

The product of racket influence in legitimate business is more than perplexing," says Richard Carter, author of the article. "It's frightening. And it won't be solved by antique methods." While no single industry is as yet monopolized by organized crime, it is astonishing to see how deep the hoodlums have penetrated. For instance, recent hearings of the New York State Crime Commission proved that the Port of New York, through which pass about 20 per cent of our country's imports and exports, is underworld-controlled. Besides the millions which national crime syndicates siphon from gambling and narcotic rackets, they are buying into

ALLEY-UP—Johnny Coulon, former world bantamweight champion, defied Rocky Marciano to lift him off the floor. The heavyweight ruler, getting in shape for his title defense with Joe Walcott at Chicago, Apr. 10, failed, but Jim Corbett couldn't do it either. (NEA)
