FORT WORTH MAN WINNER

After Two Months of Life Convention Came to End in Clubhouse Yesterday Afternoon - Defeated Aspirants Made Speeches - Welcome at Home

For Gillespie: Comanche, Erath, Hood, Parker, Somervell and Tarrant Counties, 50.
For Poindexter: Johnson county, 12.

(Special to the Telegram)

Cleburne, Tex., Sept. 6.—The wheel of fortune turned and Gillespie is the man.

The deadlock in the Democratic convention of the Twelfth congressional district was broken at 11:30 o'clock yesterday morning when the roll was called on ballot 701.

The first session was held in Weatherford beginning July 7, the second in Dublin and then here.

There were numerous rumors during yesterday morning of a withdrawal and upon reconvening after a recess Judge W. J. Oxford of Erath county, door manager for Riddle, announced the Riddle and Gillespie forces had relegated the matter of choice to a lot, and Gillespie had been successful. He withdrew Riddle's name, requesting the counties to vote for Gillespie.

The same Riddle phalanx which had been in evidence on all questions from adjournment to nomination, remained intact in this instance.

The next roll call—7201—resulted: For Gillespie 50, for Poindexter 12 (Johnson county).

Judge S. C. Paddelford, manager for Poindexter, caused the nomination to be made unanimous. Mr. Gillespie was escorted to the hall and spoke briefly, thanking the convention for the nomination and accepting the same in good faith. At the afternoon session responses were made by Lee Riddle and Judge Poindexter, both of whom pledged loyal support of the nominee.

HOW IT WAS DONE

When the final decision was announced by the Poindexter people on Friday night that the Johnson county candidate would not be withdrawn and that the delegation would support neither a blanket primary or a free-for-all in the November election, a conference of the Gillespie and Riddle people was held with a view of reducing the number of candidates. At 10:30 o'clock the record reached 7200 ballots, when an hour's recess was taken.

Previously, however, propositions came indirectly from Poindexter supporters to the Riddle faction to decide the matter by lot and rather than see the possibility of the nomination go to Tarrant county, Riddle would be offered an extra inducement or two draws to Poindexter's one, the candidate being selected to receive the vote of the other. This overture did not receive serious consideration.

In the conference between the friends of Riddle and Gillespie, it was agreed that a nomination should be made and a common lot was accepted to determine who would out the race. Each faction named two representatives to conduct the drawing. R. L. Carlock and Mike E. Smith of Fort Worth were named for Gillespie and Collin George of Stephenville and George W. Riddle of Rosburg brother of the candidate, acted for Riddle.

GEORGE DREW THE PRIZE

Collin George wrote the name of each candidate on separate bits of paper and passed them to Mr. Carlock for inspection and arrangement. Mr. Carlock retired and returned with the papers crumpled into separate balls, placing them in a hat, extended them to Mr. George who drew deliberately the one bearing Gillespie's name. Under the call of counties Judge Oxford said the balloting had continued 7200 times without change and as party men, a nomination should be made. He believed the office should be above the man and no opportunity given for the opposition to take new hope against the organized Democracy. Riddle's friends had agreed, Judge

New York, Sept. 6.—American dressmakers in convention next week will lay plans, it is reported, for an invasion of Europe, in relation for the manner in which the modistes of Paris and other European cities have been making inroads upon their customs.

NEGOTIATIONS ARE BEING COMPLETED

Washington, Sept. 6.—Negotiations for the settlement of claims against Germany against the United States are being completed. The German government has agreed to pay $100,000,000 for the claims against Germany. The settlement will be made in three installments of $33,333,333 each, the first to be paid immediately, the second in six months and the third in twelve months.

ENDORSES CHICAGO PLATFORM

A committee presented Mr. Gillespie, who after accepting the nomination, spoke in part as follows: "I don't say that I rejoice at the ending, but will say it is my ambition to go to congress. My friends were local in the contest, and there was nothing in the test of strength just ended to cause cause. I pledge to you and the Democracy to give all I possess of body and mind to its success and promise a true and faithful study of all questions coming before the body for membership of which I have been nominated."

THE SPEAKER SAID HE HAD LEARNED TO

grieve for rather than censure the faults of men, but that a government safer and best for the people is one of their own making. Democracy elevates the people, and says they are capable of self-government, and of prescribing the limits beyond which a servant should not go. Contrary to this principle the Republican party regards administration as did the rulers of former times, that to rule is a divine right.

Referring to the many declarations of the Democratic party, Mr. Gillespie said he stood the same today. "We ought not to abandon a plank of the Chicago platform. The questions are not dead, and the principle that power should be placed with the government, and not with institutions in commercial life will live as long as does the government itself."

He declared against trusts, and imperialism, and favored reduction of the tariff and according to the Filipinos' self-government.

"To these principles," he declared in closing, "I subscribe with all that is within me."

RIDDLE AND POINDEXTER

The convention adjourned after selecting a chairman and an executive committee, and hearing from Lee Riddle and Judge Poindexter.

Mr. Riddle said in part: "I saw your work and it is satisfactory and acceptable to me. The situation I accept without any draws and drawbacks, and my heart and hand and all I possess are ready for the Democracy to make this nomination successful in election. The idea that something should be done has been presented to me so often that I believed I was standing in the way of a nomination, and my friends chose for me the solution by lot."

"I will say the star of my ambition has not set. Those who believed I was too young to be given the responsibility of a congressional mantle, in a few years, I hope, will agree 'Riddle is now old enough.'"

Judge Poindexter said: "Victory is sworn to him who seeks office at the gift of his party, but defeat always brings esteem not only to be felt but remembered as well. While I stand here in defeat, I bow to the result and enjoy the belief there is more in the Democratic party than office, and more in life than a dollar, and pledge co-operation with the Democratic leader you have chosen to attain success. My services are at your command at any time, and toward no one do I bear animosity."

Roosevelt and party arrived over the Baltimore and Ohio at 8:30 this morning from Washington. He was greeted by a vast crowd at the depot and smiled appreciation, despite his badly discolored face. His right cheek was rather badly swollen and contused, and his left eye showed signs of dislocation. Mayor Sweeney, President Landon and Secretary Birch of the board of trade, Postmaster Hall and Commodore Waterhouse, formed the committee which received the president. The entire party, which included Secretary Cortelyou, secret service men and staff of correspondents, entered vehicles and were driven to the house, headed by a military band.

Throughout the entire route enthusiasm was rife, streets being lined with people from western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio and West Virginia. At the hotel the chief executive met a delegation of citizens of Wheeling, introduced by Senator Scott. President Roosevelt seemed in a very jovial humor and joked with his newly made acquaintances. He addressed an enormous crowd from the balcony of the hotel, standing at the northwest corner, where he had a range of four different states. He spoke long beyond the schedule, which necessitated a curtailment of the regular program.

R. B. Hawley, Republican national committeeman from Texas, arrived yesterday afternoon and has apartments at the Delaware, Henry Terrell of San Antonio, one of the six candidates for state chairman, also arrived yesterday and is registered at the Delaware.

Last night Mr. Hawley made public the following statement: "The condition over the election of a state chairman is due to a wide difference of policy, one represented by Mr. Lyon, as I interpret it, of exclusion and contraction, the other of expansion, progress and growth; whatever else our party speaks for it is primarily tolerant and generous towards every patriotic element in our country, and any other position is a violent assault on every tradition and every page of the party's history. How are we to build a party in Texas? Plainly, it must be from without."

"In the campaigns of 1896, 1898 and 1900, thousands of patriotic men in Texas abandoning their party joined

A MURDER MYSTERY IS SOLVED AT LAST

(Special to the Telegram)

Chicago, Sept. 6.—The body of William J. Bartholin, charged with killing his mother, Mrs. Anna B. Bartholin, and his sweetheart, Miss Minnie Mitchell, has been found near Lowther, Iowa. He had committed suicide by blowing out his brains. In his pocket was found a written confession, describing in detail how he had killed the two women. The discovery of the body clears what has been one of the most puzzling mysteries the police of Chicago have ever been called upon to solve.

The Man of Destiny

The above characteristic photograph of President Roosevelt was taken shortly after the beginning of his recent tour throughout the East. It shows the president as he appeared while making one of his characteristic speeches and clearly indicates his intense concentration of mind while speaking, how ever briefly. The president with his wife, and younger members of the family, is traveling in a special train to Chattanooga, Tenn., where he will deliver an address before the National Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen.

GILLESPIE NOMINATED

Crane, then a resident of Cleburne, entered the primaries and carried Johnson and Ellis counties. He withdrew before the convention was held, and Abbott of Hill county was nominated. In 1894 Judge Poindexter, defeated here today, went to the convention with Johnson, Ellis and Boone counties, 28 votes. Burke of Dallas, Hardy of Navarro, being candidates. W. F. Ramsey of Cleburne was the permanent chairman. The balloting continued two days without a nomination, when the vote of Dallas and Kaufman and Johnson united for Gossett, being sufficient to give him the nomination, but before the result could be declared Dallas county switched to Ramsey as a dark horse candidate being followed by Navarro, Ellis and Johnson, the latter being uninstructed, sufficient vote to give the Cleburne man the nomination. Mr. Ramsey, appreciating the situation, refused to accept the nomination unless it was made unanimous. Gossett thereupon withdrew from the race and cast Kaufman county's vote for Burke. Dallas county seeing a ray of hope, took its vote away from Ramsey, voted for Burke, was followed by Ellis and Navarro counties which gave the Dallas man the nomination. Thus it was in less than three hours, the convention nominated three different people for congress.

LOT IDEA IS NOT NEW ONE

Law Authorizes It in Several Well Known Instances (Special to the Telegram) Cleburne, Tex., Sept. 6.—There was considerable concern on the streets here tonight of the method adopted in declaring the nominee for congress by the convention here today. Judge Poindexter's friends declare to have been a gambling scheme in which they disclaim any part. Judge Poindexter made the statement that he refused to consider the idea of relegating the nomination to a matter of chance when presented to him. Although it is stated his friends were willing and first broached the idea offering to give Riddle two chances to his one. The candidate states most emphatically that it was none of his doing.

The idea of determining a contest by lot is by no means a new one and finds its sanction in the law governing the makeup of the supreme court, the courts of civil appeals, and the railroad commission. Where the members of these bodies draw lots for the long and short terms in the selection of long and short terms by members of the state senate, the law prescribes it shall be done by lot.

He is 82 years old and a grandnephew of President Van Buren. Some of those in the convention danced to "Uncle" Van Buren's music 25 years ago in Bosque county. Among them was Dr. Barry, convention chairman.

Lattimore, introduced Mr. Riddle "as one of the fairest and most honored Democrats in all Texas," declaring that the Democracy of Tarrant county would remember him in the future.

NICK OF TIME

A Discovery at the Right Moment The importance of finding the right food is invaluable when the stomach revolts and the nourishment of the body becomes a problem.

Mrs. Fannie Hall of Orleans, N. Y., was an invalid for over 10 years, hardly able to drag herself around the house and nothing she ate seemed to nourish her. She had chronic diarrhoea, her food did not digest and she was so nervous she could not bear the least noise or excitement.

She writes, "About a year ago I was looking over a paper when the name of Grape-Nuts caught my eye and I determined to try them. I sent for a package and I have never been without them since; they seem to be the thing I need."

When I commenced eating Grape-Nuts I weighed 115 lbs. and now I weigh 145 lbs. and am well and do my own work.

My children think they cannot get along without them. I use a package a day.

My whole family eat them for dessert with cream, in preference to anything else. When I go away I always take a package with me as no other food agrees with me as well. I always call Grape-Nuts the "lucky food" as I think I owe my life to them."

CAME NEAR BEING FATAL.

A MAN SWALLOWED POISON MISTAKING IT FOR MEDICINE

Prompt Action on Part of Physician Prevented Fatal Results and at Last Accounts the Patient Was Resting Easy

Yesterday about noon a man named Henry Porter, connected with the saloon and restaurant on Main between First and Second streets, came near passing over the Great Divide as the result of mistaking poison for a medicine he had been in the habit of taking.

Mr. Porter had occasion to take a dyspepsia tablet, and near the box containing them was a box of biliousness tablets, similar in size and color. He swallowed the latter by mistake. Realizing what he had done he ran across the street to a drug store. A physician chanced to be in, and at once set about to relieve Porter's stomach of the poisonous draught. In a short while this latter purpose was accomplished, or nearly so, and the patient removed to his home. Later in the afternoon he was reported to be a very sick man, and will probably be under treatment for a week or ten days.

TEACHERS OF THE COUNTY

INSTITUTE MEETING HELD YESTERDAY IN FORT WORTH

Officers for New Term Elected, and Course of Study Mapped Out—The Attendance Was Large

The Tarrant County Teachers' institute met for the first time since the closing of the county schools for the last term yesterday in County Superintendent Moore's office. Among other things done was the election of officers for the present term. There was a good attendance, many of the lady members being present.

Jesse R. Smith, principal of the Grapevine school, was elected president; H. C. McCauley of White's Settlement, first vice president; W. T. Hammond, Manchester Mills, second vice president; Miss Ethel Potts, Haslett, recording secretary; W. M. Trimble, principal Marine school No. 1, corresponding secretary; L. M. Hammond, treasurer.

The expenses of the institute are to be covered by volunteer contributions. The officers of the institute will have charge of the programs for each meeting.

The institute will meet in Fort Worth the first Saturday in October, and it was decided to meet at least three times during the term at some places other than Fort Worth.

The meeting was a most enjoyable and satisfactory one.

CATARRH DESTROYS THE KIDNEYS.

JAS. M. POWELL.

Mr. James M. Powell, 633 Troost street, Kansas City, Mo., Vice Grand of I. O. O. F. of Cherryville, Kan., writes: "About four years ago I suffered with a severe catarrh of the bladder, which caused continued irritation and pain. I was miserable and could not stand up or walk for any length of time without extreme weariness and pain. I began taking Peruna and it greatly relieved me, and in eleven weeks I was completely cured and felt like a new man."—James M. Powell.

GRANVILLE M. HOY, Sheridan, Ind., Past Grand, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Lodge 661, in a recent letter says: "I suffered for years with liver complaint, causing me severe pains and a peculiar weakness across the small of the back, so that it was hard to stoop, and sometimes very painful to walk about. I had used so much medicine without deriving any help that I just let it go, until a neighbor was cured of Bright's disease by Peruna. That led to my using it, and before I had used ten bottles I was cured. I consider it almost miraculous."—Granville M. Hoy.

Hon. Louis E. Johnson, son of the late Beverly Johnson, who was United States Senator from Maryland, also Attorney General under President Johnson, and U. S. Minister to England, and was regarded as the greatest constitutional lawyer that ever lived. In a recent letter from 1003 F street, N. W., Washington, D. C., Mr. Johnson says: "No one should longer suffer from catarrh when Peruna is accessible. To my knowledge it has caused relief to so many of my friends and acquaintances that it is humanity to commend its use to all persons suffering with this distressing disorder of the human system."—Louis E. Johnson.

A NAVAL RECRUITING OFFICE. Young Men Wanted for the Mechanical Departments. Tomorrow morning a recruiting office for the United States navy will be opened at 504 Main street by Lieutenant J. R. Morton, who will be accompanied by Naval Surgeon H. C. Curd, James Wilson of the engineering department and J. B. Leake, an apprentice of the first class, arrived in the city on Friday and began preparations. These officers have been recruiting at Dallas, Waco and Austin, 62 enlisting at Dallas, 59 at Waco, and 30 at Austin. Applicants must be in sound bodily health, and between the ages of 15 and 35. Minors will not be accepted without the consent of parents or guardian. Men are now especially desired for the engineering department, machinists, coal passers and apprentices. Also some for clerical positions. Recruiting for the navy in the interior of the country is a recent departure from old methods and so far the experiment has been found very satisfactory. The plan was adopted after representations made by congressmen from interior states that young men could not enter the naval service from their sections without first taking a long and expensive trip to the seaboard with a good chance of being objected to upon making application and turned down. It is believed a good number of recruits will be secured here. Hot days followed by cool nights will breed malaria in the body that is bilious or costive. An Interesting Journey Through Mr. Mead's Tunnels Which Are to Be An Important Factor in the City's New Water Supply.

TOOK a walk yesterday with Mr. Lakin. We walked over a mile. The walk was 180 feet underground. It was also through water running like a mill race that covered our feet and at times reached half way to our knees. The march was in Indian file. Mr. Lakin walked in front. I covered the rear. We did not walk "straight as an Indian," but were lumped over at an angle of 45 to 20 degrees. This was because we did not want to loosen the ceiling by pounding it with our heads. We fell into this walk through Mr. Mead's 201-foot hole just back of the waterworks pumping station on the Clear Fork. When we looked around after the 180-foot drop we could see by the gleam of electric lights the openings of several tunnels extending away in different directions. We entered the one running west towards the river. Planks are laid on the floor between the rails where cars have been running to haul the rock and debris out and the timbers and lumber in. And there is almost enough track in the tunnels to lay a street car line from the courthouse to the packing houses.

I ducked my head and followed Mr. Lakin industriously. It was no boulevard promenade. A coating of mud on the planks made it slippery and when planks were not laid or were missing, the mud rose round one's boots with a clinging embrace. I had put on a big pair of rubber boots that came up to my thighs in the office above, together with a jumper and a mud-caked hat that were offered me, so I felt quite comfortable while splashing along in the wake of my friend Lakin and how the splashing reverberated and echoed along the passage into a great roar.

TUNNEL 1,200 FEET LONG. This tunnel is 1,200 feet long, and at the end of it we found where all this water came from. In a little nook sat two men, one holding an electric light and the other with hammer and chisel was cutting through the outer casing of one of the artesian wells, while water was spouting fiercely through the slits already made.

It was necessary to cut through this casing in order to tap the inner pipe. The gushing water came from outside of the pipe now forming part of the city's water supply. While walking in the park with Captain Scoble before going down the shaft I could plainly hear the blows struck 180 feet below the surface, and that, too, at a considerable distance from the well.

WATER AT HIGH PRESSURE. Retracing our steps to the shaft we passed the mouth of several laterals that run to other wells, but we did not follow them up. From the foot of the shaft we dove down another tunnel extending to the southward 1,700 feet to a new "water" bridge across Clear Fork. "Down" is hardly a correct term, however, for there is a considerable ascent in this direction, and the volume of water streaming down is double that in the one we had just left. The straight walls on each side which can be touched by the hands are formed of solid planking, each plank being four inches thick and twelve or fourteen inches wide. When completed these tunnels will be full of water having a pressure of 80 to 100 pounds to the square inch, but being constantly merged and with no contact with air the planks will last forever, no decay taking place. About half way through this tunnel my foot slipped in between a plank and one rail of the car track. The more I pulled the faster I stuck. Lakin instantly noticed that the splash of my fair foot falls ceased, and stopped to inquire if I was "done up" (for it's no holiday excursion waiting for a mirage humped over like an inverted letter "T"), but a few more yanks with both hands and a wiggle of my foot set me free again and we resumed the splashy, splash-splash again. Towards the end of this run we entered a lateral and followed it until we came to one of the artesian wells that had been abandoned several years ago. The casing had been cut through with a cold chisel and water was gushing out in great quantities through the narrow slit. In fact, the torrent we had been wading through came from this well alone. The tunnels are perfectly dry—that is, there is no seepage of water coming in from the solid rock through which they have been blasted. Over 20,000 pounds of dynamite have been used in digging them, and more than 350,000 feet of lumber in lining them.

FRESH AIR FOR WORKERS. Just after turning back towards the main tunnel I saw a two-inch iron pipe partially submerged; there was nothing singular in that for there are several pipes of various sizes running along the walls or on the floor of all of the tunnels—but this attracted attention by an intermittent bubbling at the end. Mr. Lakin remarked that that was a compressed air pipe and turning a valve the air gave a scream as it escaped and blew a spray of water to the end of the tunnel. The pressure is 100 pounds to the square inch. This is what furnished fresh air to breathe and also power for the air drills while at work in the solid rock.

THE PUMP ROOM. As we reached the shaft again Mr. Lakin pulled a switch and the electric lights which were hung along at long distances along the route we had traversed went out. Then we stepped into the elevator and went up ten or fifteen feet to the "pump room." This is an alcove or room where three pumps and an engine are temporarily located. At present they are engaged with the task of pumping out the water that is flowing in from the two wells above described, the water collecting in a pit underneath, which is in fact but a continuation of the shaft. When the work is completed this machinery will be taken out and a massive iron door, weighing upwards of 5,000 pounds will close the shaft at this point and confine the water below. Again the signal cord was pulled and we began the ascent of the four-square shaft, which is lined with solid walls of heavy timber, behind which, however, is a ladder by which the surface can be reached if anything should happen to the elevator. As a matter of fact the men have had to climb out this way several times. The top of the shaft, from the surface down to the bedrock is round and is cased with a strong brick wall that will prevent caving or the influx of surface water. We were wringing wet with perspiration, as if we'd been in a Turkish bath, when we emerged, and although the day was hot the breeze felt cool.

TAPPING THE WELLS. There are two more main tunnels, with laterals, which we did not explore on this trip. The laterals have been extended to within a few feet of eight of the fourteen wells of the water works system, that being as many as Mr. Mead thought would be necessary to furnish the amount of water desired. The others can be reached later if desired. The work of tapping these eight wells will be finished in two or three weeks and then a test will be made of the water supply procured. The city's contract with Mr. Mead calls for 3,000,000 gallons daily, with a bonus for a greater amount up to 5,000,000. It is confidently believed that the test will show nearer the latter figure than the former. A reservoir will also have to be built, and other work will bring the first of January around, probably, before everything is completed, even though the test at this time should show that the supply of water is adequate.

C. C. Lakin is superintendent of the work and has been in charge since the beginning on November 7 of last year.

RAILWAY COMPANIES DEFENDANTS IN DAMAGE SUITS

Pleas of Guilty in County Court — A Jury Disagreed — Suit Against Insurance Company — Other Court Proceedings

Suits amounting to over $75,000 were filed in the district clerk's office yesterday afternoon, two against railway companies, both of which were by Charles F. Orthwein's Sons.

One of these suits was against the Gulf and Santa Fe Railway company for damages to a shipment of wheat to Galveston, and $50,000 was asked.

The other was against the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway company and asked for $15,000, also for damages to a shipment of wheat to Galveston.

The third suit is styled Emma Shepherd vs. William Shepherd, action for divorce.

The fourth suit is styled David Dow vs. Jibron Naggar, action for debt.

The Seventeenth district court convenes Monday.

COUNTY COURT. In the county court yesterday the jury in the C. H. White case was unable to agree after nearly 24 hours out, and Judge Harris discharged the body. White was tried on an assault charge brought about by what was alleged to have been too much familiarity used toward a young lady stenographer in his employ. It was learned in the county attorney's office that the jury stood five for conviction, with heavy fine and imprisonment, and one for acquittal.

This makes two juries dismissed during the week, being unable to agree. S. J. Ward pleaded guilty to betting and was fined $10 and costs.

Tom Shed pleaded guilty to betting; $10 and costs. Will Poe, selling liquor to minor; $25 and costs.

Adolph Johnson pleaded guilty to theft; $10 and ten days. Will Hunter, vagrancy; not guilty.

SUIT FILED IN SHERMAN. It is learned here that a suit had been filed in the district court at Sherman by G. L. Reiser against the Continental Fire association of Fort Worth, a mutual association. Plaintiff asks for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the business and assets of the company. He alleges liability of the company to pay him on account of a policy issued in the year 1901 and a destruction of the insured property by fire during December last.

MAY CARNEY IS HERE. May Carney, the degraded specimen of feminine humanity who a few days ago escaped from the county attorney's office while waiting there to be transferred to the county poor farm, has again been captured by the city police. If possible, she presented even a more unsightly appearance than she did ten days ago, when under arrest. So abbreviated was her wearing apparel, top and bottom, with other transparent effects that the policeman having her in charge declined to walk with her to the patrol wagon, but sent her out of the city hall alone. He then closed the door and mounted the footboard. She pleaded for "coke," and to put a stop to her wallings she was provided with ten cents worth, half of which she gulped down in an eager, nervous manner, restraint being necessary to prevent her from taking it all at one swallow.

Other books were "Bramble Brae," by Bridges; "Spanish Settlements," by Lowry; "Held for Orders," Frank H. Spearman; "The Lady Paramount," Harland, and Edmund Clarence Steadman's poem, "Mater Coronata."

TOBACCO AS A NECESSITY. A Miesoury Judge's Ruling in a Sunday Closing Case. Justice Brown of Joplin has rendered a decision which will win for him the gratitude and admiration of every man who uses the weed. The city is trying to compel its merchants to keep their stores closed on Sunday. The law permits the necessities of life to be sold on the Sabbath. During the trial of a test case it was proved that a grocer had sold chewing tobacco. His attorney immediately raised the point that chewing tobacco was a necessity of life, and the court sustained him, and said the man had a right to keep his store open to sell that indispensable commodity. Oh, wise judge.—Kansas City Journal.

Raised from the Dead. C. W. Landis, "Porter" for the Oriental Hotel, Chanute, Kas., says: "I know what it was to suffer with neuralgia, and I did, and I got a bottle of Ballard's Snow Liniment and I was 'raised from the dead.' I tried to get some more, but before I had 'deposited' of my bottle, I was cured entirely. I am telling 'de truth' too." 25c, 50c and $1.00 at H. T. Pangburn & Co's.

MRS. BASIL WHITE, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN. Vice-President Home Forum Club. 218 Herman Building, MILWAUKEE, Wis., Feb. 27, 1902. I had ill health for seven years; nothing helped me and I had about given up hope. I dreaded every month as it came around, as I knew it meant suffering for me. I grew thin, my complexion was bad, my temper was worse and everything irritated me. A friend advised me to try Wine of Cardui and as she urged the matter so strongly I followed her advice. I found it pleasant to take and not like most other remedies that are disgusting nostrums. In a short time I began to improve in health and my digestion was better. It made me regular and reduced the pain and finally it disappeared entirely. I gained ten pounds in two months and now I feel in excellent health, and much relieved to be restored to perfect health once more. Mrs Basil White. Wine of Cardui benefits the young girl just entering womanhood by properly starting the menstrual function and keeping it regular through life. It relieves barrenness in the wife and stops all bearing down pains, ulcerations, inflammations and drains. It makes childbirth easy for the mother and safely carries her, at middle age, through that dangerous period, known as the change of life. When Wine of Cardui can be secured so easily in every town in this land health is within the grasp of almost every woman. The Wine of Cardui treatment can be taken privately at home by any lady without the advice of a doctor or without a doctor's local examination, yet so thorough and complete is this treatment that thousands of cases which doctors would submit to the operating table have been cured by this simple medicine in the home. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

Do Not Trifle with Them! Paine's Celery Compound

Permanently Cures Sick and Nervous Headaches that Make Life Miserable

Sick and nervous headaches are among the worst ills of life. The man or woman who is subject to headache at irregular intervals, goes through life bearing a load of misery and wretchedness that is terrible to think of.

Headaches as a rule, result from a disordered condition of the nervous system. Mental excitement, loss of sleep, bodily fatigue, and disordered digestion are exciting causes. When the brain becomes tired and debilitated, the whole nervous system is weakened, and headaches result. If the liver is sluggish, the kidneys inactive, and digestion deranged, headaches invariably follow. To cure and prevent headaches, the nervous system must be strengthened and vitalized.

The most persistent cases of headache, nervousness, and sleeplessness, are permanently cured by Paine's Celery Compound; it is the great reconstructant of the nervous system. Mrs. Henry Westrick, St. Clair, Mich., tells of her release from suffering as follows: "I have been troubled with dyspepsia and sick headache for a number of years. About every week I would have a bad spell of sick headache, but since I began using Paine's Celery Compound, my dyspepsia is gone, and I do not have any more headaches. I feel better than I have for years."

D. WAGGONER, VETERAN STOCKMAN, PASSES AWAY

A PIONEER OF TEXAS

At Colorado Springs For Benefit of His Health When Death Came—Prominent in Northern Texas for Years

Word was received here yesterday from Colorado Springs of the death of Daniel Waggoner, which occurred there Friday afternoon. Mr. Waggoner was a prominent stockman of Northern Texas and had gone to Colorado Springs for the benefit of his health. He was about 74 years of age. The body was taken to Decatur, his late home, and the funeral will be held from there this afternoon at 4 o'clock. A number of the friends of the deceased went from here today to attend the funeral.

The news of Mr. Waggoner's death was received with expressions of sorrow in this city, and there are few of the older business men with whom he had not at some time or other had business relations. Even in spite of his 74 years he kept an acute grasp of the details of his immense business and he was busy till the last, disposing of many problems that came up for his attention.

Probably no man in Northern Texas had more to do with the history of that part of the state than Mr. Waggoner. He was born in Lincoln county, Tenn., July 7, 1828. His father was a native of South Carolina, of sturdy German stock, and by nature a practical business man. He was a farmer and stock raiser and dealt in horses, cattle and negroes. He moved to Hopkins county, Tex., while Daniel was a young man and remained there till the time of his death in 1848. Daniel Waggoner, then 21 years of age, shortly after his father's death, moved to Wise county. His possessions consisted of 242 cattle, six horses and a negro boy about 15 years old. He lived near Decatur about two years and then bought a ranch and 200 cattle near Cactus Hill, between Jackson and Wise counties. He had many a skirmish with the marauding bands of Comanches, Apaches and Kiowas and lost much stock because of their depredations. Once in 1866 he with a party of seven was attacked by the Apaches and two of the little band were seriously wounded.

Mr. Waggoner's first wife was Miss Nancy Moore. She bore him one son, William Thomas Waggoner, who survives his father.

His second marriage took place Jan. 6, 1859, to Miss Sycily Ann Halseell who still survives her husband.

MULTI-MILLIONAIRE. Mr. Waggoner's wealth has been estimated at several millions and inventory of his property taken a few years ago shows that he then owned 45,000 cattle, 2500 horses, 100,000 acres of land. In addition to this he had leased 500,000 acres near Fort Hill, I. T.

He owned many city residences, was interested in banks and mills and was president of the First National Bank of Decatur and of the Decatur Oil Mill company. The ranch business was transacted under the firm name of "D. Waggoner & Son."

PATRON OF EDUCATION. Though his early life was spent in a country so unsettled that he was denied even a common school education, in his later years, Mr. Waggoner took a deep interest in both religious and educational work. He gave several thousand dollars to assist the Decatur academy and he always manifested a lively interest in educational matters.

Besides his wife and son, Mr. Waggoner leaves three grand children.

CHAPTER I.

THE FATHER AND THE LOVER OF AN AMERICAN GIRL.

THE great Transiberian railway had progressed as far to the eastward as the Obi, and trains carrying soldiers, convicts, sightseers, railway constructors, laborers and supplies, with some goods or trade with Manchuria, ran from Moscow.

The possibilities of this immense line of railway made the people of European Russia gasp. It opened up such a prospect of trade as they had never dreamed of. It gave them a speedy entrance into a region of their domain the crossing of which had formerly occupied months and involved much hardship.

What a change there was from the old sledges or foot trains of convicts to the swiftly moving cars that were drawn by the puffing, screaming locomotives, at once a source of delight and terror to the people whose territory they crossed!

Among those who had made this change so remarkable a success was James Gordon, an American engineer, who had charge of much of the advance work of the road.

Gordon was a typical American, ready to go anywhere to build a railway so long as the pay was sufficient to make it an object for him to take his daughter with him.

For Frances Gordon was her father's companion, secretary and comfort.

Left motherless at an early age, she had been brought up by strict aunts till she revolted. Her father had been surveying a route across New Mexico for a new road, fondly and longingly thinking of his daughter in her far-away home in New York, when, lo, the young lady herself, then aged nineteen, put in an appearance mounted on a broncho and accompanied by a half breed guide, to whom she spoke in so authoritative a tone that he bowed before her slightest wish in abject obedience. Since that day Frances Gordon was to be found wherever her father was.

A year and a half after they had finished the work in Mexico they journeyed together to Russia, where Gordon was to take charge of the important part of putting through the railway that was destined to revolutionize the trade and commerce of the world.

This great railway had progressed as far as the Obi river, in the government of Tomsk, Siberia, when a meeting of managers, engineers and government officials was ordered at Moscow. Thither from the Obi journeyed James Gordon and Frances.

Thither also journeyed Nicholas Neslerov, prince of the empire and governor of the province of Tomsk.

Prince Neslerov was one of the wealthiest nobles of the land, was about thirty-five years of age and had, besides his exalted position as governor of Tomsk, estates in various parts of Russia, particularly a fine one at Graslov, in the government of Perm.

It was after the convention, which had to do with certain concessions and arrangements that were necessary as the road drew near the border of Manchuria, the crossing of certain mountains, the bridging of certain streams, that Mr. Gordon was preparing to return to the Obi, where the western end of his operations was laid, the operations themselves reaching eastward to Lake Baikal, in Irkutsk.

To him one day as he sat smoking at his hotel in Moscow came Prince Neslerov.

"Good morning, your excellency," said Gordon, who had met the prince at several conferences and now knew him because of the fact that the operations had passed almost across his province. "Glad to see you. When do you return to Tomsk?"

"I shall not be long behind you, my friend," replied the prince. "It is a fact, however, that upon your answer to a certain question which I shall put to you depends many of my acts in the upon Frances to marry you. She will make her own choice, when it is made, and it will stand."

"You lead me to believe this choice has already been made."
"No, I did not mean that, prince. It might be so, for all I know to the contrary. Frances might love a man and not yet be ready to tell me, although there is nothing secret about her. We have each other's confidence."
"Still it could not be possible that she would be in love and you not know it."
"It might, and I will tell you why. She has refused to marry the man I chose for her, the finest young man, in my estimation, on earth."
"Then you have already given your allegiance to a lover."
"I gave it to the lover, but Frances would not marry him. I have no objection to your knowing who it is. It is Denton, the bridge builder. Jack Denton was the son of one of my oldest friends. Old Denton was at one time worth a lot of money, but lost it through the rashness of a man he trusted. Jack was a sort of genius and asked me what profession to take up. I told him bridge engineering. He is one of the best at the business now and is only twenty-five. He is out near the Obi. The big iron bridge we are to put across the Obi will be his work."
"It is a fascinating profession. And your daughter refused him?"
"Yes, and it was a great disappointment to me. Jack and she have been friends since they first went to school. He loves her, and his love is the kind that a father likes to see in his girl get. But she won't have him for some reason. Said they could never be romantic lovers or some such argument. Couldn't love him because she had known him all her life. Thought it was easier to love a stranger, I suppose, who could bamboozle her."
"And so it was broken off?"
"There was nothing to break off. They were never engaged. She simply refused him. They are friendly when they meet—coolly so. What could I do? She had to have her own way."
"A romantic friendship such as that is not dangerous," said the prince. "Have I your permission to enter the list?"
"My permission is worthless. You can ask Frances if you like, but it won't do a bit of good. You are too rich, and Frances has peculiar notions."
"There is some one in whom your daughter is much interested, and perhaps you have not heard. It is my duty to inform you, although I myself do not attach much importance to the thing. There is a blacksmith—"
"Oh, the blacksmith of Perm?" exclaimed Gordon, with a slight coldness in his voice, as though he did not relish having the story told him by the prince. "I am fully aware of all that."
"Does Frances—does your daughter love that man?"
"Goodness, no. She is interested, she likes him and is trying to help him."
"Through pity, I suppose, and pity goes leads to love."
"Well," said Gordon, laughing, "if it does in this case neither you nor I can prevent it. I am sure, however, the girl is fancy free, and, for him, he is so simple and sensible to look upon their friendship as more than ordinary. They met in this way: When the road was crossing into Tobolsk, I wanted some peculiar ironwork done, and she went with me. The stature and strength and the handsome face of the young ironworker pleased her, and she talked with him. She saw that it was a magnificent specimen of a man and fitted by nature to adorn a higher station. She is trying to assist him in improving himself."
"You take this very coolly," said the prince. "But, being Russian, perhaps our customs are so different that this free intercourse between a girl like your daughter and a mere ironworker seems more to me than to you. Then you assure me there is nothing more than mere friendship between these two."
"No, I do not assure you of anything of the kind. I do not know. I think, though, if there was Frances would tell me. If there is, she will have her way; if there is not, the same."
"But if this blacksmith asked her to marry him would you consent?"
"I do have to."
"Do you consider such a thing probable?"
"Prince, I know as little about it as you do. There was only one man—Jack Denton—that I wanted for a son-in-law, and she won't have him. Now, I know little about her plans, if she has any. She might fall in love with you, in which case I could not prevent her marrying you. If she does not fall in love with you, I could not compel her to marry you if I would."

"I am pleased at your candor," replied the prince. "I shall soon have an opportunity to speak to her myself. I trust that this conversation will not interrupt our friendship."
"Nonsense! I appreciate the honor you have done my girl. But unless she loves you your case is hopeless."
The prince bowed and took his departure, and Gordon, laughing, turned into the hotel.

"I'll have to tell her," he said. Then, with a sudden resolve: "No, I won't either. I need the friendship of the prince, and if she knows he wants to marry her who can tell what trouble it may cause?"

As Neslerov was leaving the hotel he met Frances returning from a drive.

"I am pleased to see you, Prince Neslerov," she said, offering her hand.

"And I am always glad to meet you, Mlle. Gordon," he replied. "Did you enjoy your drive?"

"Yes, but I did not go far. I visited several bazaars where books are sold. See, I have quite a number of purchases."
"You love books as well as action?"
"I love them—yes. But these are for a friend, a young man fitted by nature to adorn a higher station than the one to which he was born. I send him books, and he studies. You could help him, prince. With your power, your influence, you could do much for him. I refer to Vladimir Paulpoff, the blacksmith of Perm."

"You are very kind to my poor countryman," said the prince, with a smile. "To please you I will make it my business to see this blacksmith, and if there is any way in which I may be of use in assisting him along the lines you suggest I shall be pleased to do so."

She thanked him and passed on into the hotel.

CHAPTER II.
THE BLACKSMITH AND THE PICTURE.

ON a road leading from the city of Perm toward the forest on the south there stood a rude cluster of buildings, all of them old and in a poor state of repair. This collection of huts was the home and forge of the Paulpoffs, ironworkers.

Here worked old Michael Paulpoff and his son Vladimir, and it had been to this uninviting place that Frances Gordon had come to make the chance acquaintance of the young giant.

The huts and the surroundings were rapidly growing even less inviting, for nothing was being done now to keep anything in repair.

A collection of household goods, over which old Manma Paulpoff watched carefully, gave evidence that the family were about to remove themselves and their belongings to another place.

But still the old man and the young one were at work. The blows that Vladimir struck were tremendous. The iron under his hammer bent and flattened as the sparks shot like fireworks to the far corners of the place. There was a gay laugh on his handsome face—a face that was almost childlike in its simplicity and guilelessness.

"Oh, that will be a happy day, Papa Paulpoff!" the young man said gleefully, plunging his tongue into the white fire and withdrawing a bar of iron.

"What will?" asked the old man, looking sideways at his son, but continuing his work.

"The day I can take you and the little mother to a better home."
"We have been happy here," replied old Papa Paulpoff, looking round at the dingy interior.

"Yes, we have been happy—we shall always be happy, for we are simple and require little. But with greater comfort and more money greater happiness ought to come. It is fine to feel yourself growing to be somebody in the world—to feel yourself expand, broaden. It is staid that does it, and work. I think the knowledge gives me more pleasure than the wealth. But we also need the wealth."

The old man sighed.

"Yes, that is good, that knowledge. But you will grow away from us. You will perhaps marry that American girl, and she would not like our simple ways."
The hammer in Vladimir's hand came down with redoubled force.

"What is that you say—our Vladimir talking of marrying?" asked the tremulous voice of Mrs. Paulpoff. "I came to say that the meal is ready, and I find—what do I find?"
"Oh, Papa Paulpoff is dreaming one of his dreams and will talk with a love with you, I could not compel her to marry you if I would."

"I am pleased at your candor," replied the prince. "I shall soon have an opportunity to speak to her myself. I trust that this conversation will not interrupt our friendship."
"Nonsense! I appreciate the honor you have done my girl. But unless she loves you your case is hopeless."

guy laugh.
"But is it not so, old woman?" asked Papa Paulpoff. "Is it not quite possible that our Vladimir may marry that handsome American girl?"
"I have seen it so," answered the old woman. "It seems that no young woman would take this interest if she did not love."
"Oh, nonsense!" cried Vladimir. "We are friends. She is good. I admire. Why, I could almost worship her, but I am a peasant. She is!"
There came the sound of cursing outside and the fall of a horse's hoofs. A shout took the old man to the door!
"Curses upon this beast!" came an angry voice as a man about thirty-five, clad in a neat riding suit, entered the room striking his high boots with his whip. "I have just been thrown. In some mysterious manner my horse, who never stumbles, caught his foot in something, tore loose his shoe and hurled me to the ground. The horse is uninjured, but he has lost the shoe. I heard the sound of a smithy and came to you for assistance. I must reach Graslov tonight, and the delay is serious."
"It is long since we were mere horse-shoers," said the old man. "The railroad!"
"But surely you can make a shoe and put it on. I must go forward, and I do not wish to lame this valuable horse."
"Certainly, we will shoe the horse," put in Vladimir, whose kind heart could never refuse any request that was reasonable and proper. "I will attend to it at once."
"But the meal is waiting," said the old woman.

"The meal is but a short distance, and Graslov is far," said Vladimir. "I will shoe the horse and permit the prince to proceed."
"How did you know that I was a prince?" asked the stranger, looking about him with a keen eye that was full of inquiry.

"The horse is of the herd at Graslov, the seat of the Neslerovs," was the answer. "I know the herd and think I have shod this very horse before."
"Good! That is better than putting him into the hands of a stranger," said the rider. "Is your name Paulpoff?"

"It is. I am Vladimir Paulpoff. The little father here is Michael."
"Ah, I have heard of you. You have guessed correctly. I am a prince. My steward, who has charge of my estate while I am away in Siberia, has told me of the giant who is growing rich working for the railroad. It is said that you can bend an iron bar with your hands."

Vladimir in response picked up an iron bar about four feet long and an inch thick and bent it double with no apparent effort.

"Good God!" exclaimed the prince. "Are you that powerful?"
"We acquire muscle in this work," Vladimir answered, "and I was born powerful."

A look of wonder had spread over the face of the prince. He sat upon a rude stool while the other two began to prepare for shoeing the horse. The fine animal was brought inside, and he, like his noble master, seemed surprised at his surroundings.

The old woman, patient now under the rebuke of Vladimir, stood waiting.

CASE 113

By... Emile Gaboriau

"Well, then, monsieur, I confess I am Prosper's friend and deeply interested in his future. Can you not exonerate him, restore him to his position? You can do more than this, monsieur. He loves Mlle. Madeleine."

"Madeleine shall be his wife, monsieur," interrupted the banker. "I give you my word, and I will so publicly exonerate him that no one shall reproach him with what has been my mistake."

The fat man quietly took up his hat and cane, which stood in a corner, as if he had been paying an ordinary morning call, and turned to leave the room.

"Monsieur," he said before going, "excuse my intruding any advice, but Mme. Fauvel!"
"Andre!" cried the poor woman. "Andre!"

The banker hesitated a moment, then, following the impulse of his heart, ran to his wife and, clasping her in his arms, said:

"No; I will not be so foolish as to struggle against my heart. I do not pardon, Valentine; I forget—I forget all!"

M. Verduret had nothing more to do at Vesinet. Therefore, without taking leave of the banker, he quietly left the room and, taking his cab, ordered the driver to return to Paris and drive to the Hotel du Louvre as rapidly as possible. His mind was filled with anxiety. He knew that Raoul would give him no more trouble. The young rogue was probably taking his passage for some foreign land at that very moment. But Clameran should not escape the punishment he deserved. But how was it possible to inflict this punishment without compromising Mme. Fauvel? M. Verduret thought over the various cases similar to this, but not one among his repertory of expedients could be applied to the present circumstances. After long thought he decided that an accusation of poisoning must come from Oloron. "I will go there and work upon public opinion, so that to satisfy the townspeople the authorities would order an inquest in Gaston's case. But this required time, and Clameran, being warned, would disappear."

It was almost dark when the carriage stopped in front of the Hotel du Louvre. M. Verduret noticed a crowd of people collected together in groups and heard the police crying "Move on!" The crowd would merely separate in one spot to join a more clamorous group a few yards off.

"What has happened?" demanded M. Verduret of a loungeer near by.

"A strange thing," replied the man. "He first appeared at that seventh-story window. He was only half dressed. Some persons tried to seize him; but, with the agility of a sleepwalker, he jumped out upon the roof, shrieking 'Murder! Murder!' The recklessness of his conduct led me to suppose—"

The gossip stopped short in his narrative, very much astonished. His questioner had vanished.

"Could it be Clameran?" thought M. Verduret.

He pushed through the crowded courtyard of the hotel.

At the foot of the staircase M. Fanferlot and three peculiar looking individuals were standing together.

"Well," cried M. Verduret, "what's the matter?"

"The matter is this," said Fanferlot dejectedly. "I have no luck. You see how it is. This is the only chance I ever had of working out a beautiful case, and, presto, my criminal breaks down!"

"Then it is Clameran who?"
"Of course it is. When the rascal saw me this morning, he scampered off like a hare. On reaching the Boulevard of Schools a sudden idea seemed to seize him, and he struck out for this hotel, probably to get his pile of money. When he arrives, what does he see? These three friends of mine. The sight of them had the effect of a sunstroke upon him. He went raving mad."

"Where is he now?"
"At the prefecture, I suppose. Same police men handcuffed him and drove off with him in a cab."

"Come with me!"
M. Verduret and Fanferlot found Clameran in one of the private cells reserved for dangerous prisoners.

He had on a straitjacket and was struggling violently against three men who were striving to hold him while a physician tried to force him to swallow a potion.

"Help!" he shrieked. "Do you not see him—my brother—coming after me? He wants to poison me!"

M. Verduret took the physician aside and questioned him about the maniac.

"He is in a hopeless state," replied the doctor. "This species of insanity is incurable. He thinks some one is trying to poison him, and nothing will persuade him to eat or drink anything, and as it is impossible to force anything down his throat he will die of starvation after having suffered all the tortures of poison."

M. Verduret, with a shudder, turned to leave the prefecture, saying to Fanferlot:

"Mme. Fauvel is saved. God has punished Clameran."
"That doesn't help me," grumbled Fanferlot. "All my trouble has been for nothing. What luck?"

"That is true," replied M. Verduret. "Case 113 will never leave the record office. But console yourself. I will send you as bearer of dispatches to a friend of mine, and what you have lost in fame will be gained in gold."

Later was celebrated at the Church of Notre Dame de Lorette the marriage of M. Prosper Bertomy and Mlle. Madeleine Fauvel.

The banking house is still in Providence street, but as M. Fauvel has decided to retire from business and live in the country the name of the firm has been changed and is now Prosper Bertomy & Co.

ALLIED PEOPLE'S PARTY

ACTION TAKEN WITH REFERENCE TO REORGANIZATION

Precinct Chairman Named With Recommendations for Active Work—County Convention to Put Out Ticket

Those who are making a mighty effort to revise the People's party, or to keep alive the Bickering sparks of what has been renamed the Allied People's party of Tarrant county, held their regular weekly meeting at the court house yesterday afternoon. They heard and adopted a report of the committee appointed a week ago to formulate a plan of rejuvenation. This committee reported the names of chairmen from about two-thirds of the voting precincts of the city and county, and named next Saturday as the date for another meeting, at which time all these precinct chairmen and as many others of the party followers as will come out are to meet, name the remaining chairmen, organize and fix a date on which to hold a county convention for the purpose of placing a county ticket in the field.

Light and Shadow in the Police Court

THE MAN claimed to be the toughest man of the acre, and up to that particular declaration there had been none to dispute him. He was bad. He had broken a mirror and growled because it was not night that he might shoot out the lights. He had just made a "rough house" at Loholiskies' and crossed over to the corner opposite. "I'm the worst yet," he boasted as he stepped in and slammed his fist down on the counter.

"De gang" applauded and bought a can for the Bad Man. Policeman Cone drifted in. "Be good," he counseled gently. The Tough Man was disgusted. To be accosted by this mild-voiced, good-looking young man was enough to make the contents of the can disagree with him.

"Who de howlin' whoop are youse?" he sneered. "Wot de blankety-blank has youse got to do wit' me, eh?"

"I fear I'll have to take you away with me if you don't cool your impulsive nature," cooed Cone.

The terror broke into a raucous laugh of derision and flourished his revolver. "Ah, rats!" he sneered. "Do youse tink youse kin take me?"

"And a dozen like you," said Cone with a tired yawn. There was a flash of two strong arms and the terror found his neck in one strong hand and his gun in another and his heels cracking against the ceiling.

Then the "gang" rallied loyally. Such things done to the Tough Man! It was lese majeste at the very least! "Drop him!" they bawled. There were ten of them.

Then Cone turned loose a terrific roar. There was something doing. Cone is built like Jeffries and weighs 230 pounds.

Some of the "gang" went out through the door, but many stuck fast in the transom. Out of the maelstrom of disaster stroled Cone humming softly to himself.

"Sweet, peace—"

A faraway look was in his eyes. The Tough Man was tucked under his arm.

Yesterday morning when Judge Stewart assessed $25 and costs in the pistol case and $5 and costs for a "rough house" he said to the Tough Man, "There is no use in trying to be a bad man in a place where lives such unappreciative and muscular men as Officer Cone."

"This is a great day for the 'Annie,'" said Assistant Chief Allen yesterday morning, he who keeps the records along side of the clerk of the corporation court.

There were three of them—Officer Turner brought them in. In answer to Judge Stewart's interrogation Officer Turner said: "Annie Brown is especially obnoxious, yer honor. She is a great deal of trouble to the officers. I see her everywhere I go. I see Annie Brown in my sleep. I fall over them wherever I go."

Judge Stewart looked his sympathy. "It is an awful thing to be haunted by so much femininity," he said.

"Annie will be good, your honor!" said Clerk Montgomery, with a sweet, beseeching smile.

"Are you sure of this?"

"Well, I'll let all three Annie go, then, if you will promise to behave. Go now, and cease worrying the life out of Officer Turner. Go over on Officer Snow's beat awhile."

The three Annie's went away. The eyes of Attorney Roy, with his coy and bashful smile, followed the fair procession out toward the light, the life, the board, sweet freedom of Throckmorton street, and with an anxious look in his haggard eyes. He is dead sure that he will be falling over Annie again as of yore. He feels he can't lose her. She is like Banquo's ghost and will not down.

It is a terrible thing to be haunted by "Annie Moore, Turner's case," drawled the clerk.

Annie came sailing down from the dock, full of glee, waving her handkerchief and making zoo-zoo eyes at everybody as she came toward the desk and saw the handsome features of Attorney Roy. She waved coquetishly at him.

"Stop that!" exclaimed Bob. "Don't you dare!"

Poor Bob! To think of it! He blushed clear down into his collar. Annie thus repulsed began flirting with Clerk Montgomery.

Nothing doing.

And then she saw Judge Stewart. Her face broke out in a smile of angelic sweetness and she waved her dirty handkerchief again. "Ah, there, Judge!" she gurgled.

His honor happened to turn at that moment. He took one glance and was terribly shocked.

"Guilty!" he shouted. "Five dollars and costs—take her away, quick!"

Annie went out the side door like a rocket and Judge Stewart wiped the clammy perspiration away with trembling hands.

"I can't stand much of that!" he moaned.

"Mr. Perry, charged with fighting—Temes' case," called the clerk, and "Mr. Perry" arose in the dock. It developed that "Mr. Perry" entered a child stand in the neighborhood of the old market on Rusk street, and began to talk business with the proprietor.

(Now Mr. Duffy, a customer, was eating "slinkers" and drinking coffee at the lunch counter.)

The argument between Mr. Perry and the proprietor became very animated. Hard words were flying in the air and ham-like fists were flourished about in reckless manner.

(Now Mr. Duffy was still partaking of coffee and "slinkers" at the lunch counter.) Suddenly things came to a head. Mr. Perry and the proprietor mingled their destinies. Biff-bang-blop! and the proprietor went down and out.

The cook butted in. He was speedily stacked up across the prostrate form of the proprietor.

"Next!" said Mr. Perry.

"Next" was there. She was the proprietress. Mr. Perry led her with a solar plexus swat. She countered and screamed—

Duffy to the rescue!

Duffy came from the high lunch counter filled with chivalry and "slinkers." "Unhand the lady!" he thundered.

Wheree—selam!

Mr. Perry had landed on his dome of cogitation with a frying pan. Mr. Duffy lay numbered with the vanquished, and Mr. Perry's frying pan waved triumphantly over the scene.

That is why Mr. Perry was before Judge Stewart, and that is why the record shows "$2 and costs."

GIVES THE DOGS A TRIAL

"Hickory" Jim Saunders went out twelve miles northeast Thursday night to give his pack of fox hounds a trial. A farm friend named Trimble has Mr. Saunders' pack of sixteen dogs, five of which are seven-month-old pups. Mr. Saunders, Mr. Trimble and some farmer friends started the dogs about dark two miles from Mr. Trimble's house, and inside of a half hour the music of the hounds sounded upon the breezes. Those who read such sounds at once pronounced it to be a race royal, and sure enough it so proved to be.

The dogs made a circuit of seven or eight miles, always in hearing, and Jim declares he never enjoyed sweeter music. The chase continued for six hours, and what pleased him especially was the work of five pups, seven months old, who had never before took a trail. For the first four hours the circuit made by the fox and older dogs was too extensive for the pups, but they never weakened and kept the trail, always in hearing. Finally Master Reynard began to "tack" and cut down his circuit to two or three mile scope, during which the pups were along with the older dogs, and were with them at the end of the chase, which closed in a farmer's yard after six hours constant running. The dogs overhauled the fox, which proved to be a fine specimen of "red"—and there was jubilation of men and dogs.

Mr. Saunders brought in as a trophy of the chase a front paw of the fox, and is exhibiting it to his friends. He says that for the last two hours of the chase they sat on their horses out in the woods enjoying the yelp of the hounds.

Keep Your Insides Cool!

Here's a man who thinks he has heart disease, and is scared half to death. His face is all drawn out of shape from fear and agony. Every time he eats, his heart "palpitates"—that simply means that his stomach is swelled up with gases from fermenting undigested food, and his heart thumps against his diaphragm. Nothing the matter with his heart. In the summer time, this gas distention is much worse, his whole body and blood get over-heated, and his heart and lungs get so crowded for room, that he gasps for breath. There he is, look at him! Every minute he expects to drop dead. As a matter of fact, all he needs is to stop that souring and gas forming in his stomach and bowels, help his digestion along, and keep cool inside. You all know that whenever something rots or decays, heat develops. Same in the body. Keep cool inside! Take a candy cathartic CASCARET every night at bed-time. It will work while you sleep, clean up and cool your insides, give you a regular, comfortable movement in the morning, and you'll be feeling fine all day every day. Heart Disease! Fudge!

FORT WORTH STOCK YARDS

LIGHT RECEIPTS FOR SATURDAY'S MARKET BUT EVERYTHING WAS DISPOSED OF BY CLOSING HOUR

Cattle Market Slightly Lower But Hog Market Held Its Own in Sympathy With Quotations from Northern Markets

Receipts at the Fort Worth stock yards were rather light yesterday, it being Saturday, but all were disposed of, there being a fair demand and none were held over. By the various railroads there were received 57 cattle and 137 hogs, while about 30 head of cattle and a dozen hogs were driven in.

The cattle market was a little off in sympathy with the northern markets, which were slow, but the hog market was steady.

Among those who had stuff on the market were I. De Cordova of Kopper, 77 hogs; H. B. Stubbs, Wortham, 60 hogs; C. R. Morgan, Bowie, 38 cattle; J. E. Wright, Alice, 59 cattle.

Offerings of driven-in stuff were made by W. Morris, V. Park, J. F. Smith, J. H. Yancey, H. L. Welker, R. L. Wright and others.

The Premium Stamp business is now conceded by many of our leading merchants to be one of the very best mediums for advertising and why? Simply because it reaches every person and every person is interested in saving stamps. We have organized in almost every small town so that persons coming from other cities and towns can redeem the stamps at any of our stores. Our list here in Fort Worth has some new additions. We now have some merchants in almost every line of business. We have grocers, butchers, druggists, millinery stores, dry goods stores and other stores and will be glad to furnish a book containing a list of the names of the merchants to any person calling at our display rooms, 811 Houston street. We give below only a partial list of our up town stores.

COUNCIL ON ITS EAR

DECIDES BY UNANIMOUS VOTE TO DO SOMETHING

BAD PLACES TO CLOSE

HOUSTON STREET PROPERTY OWNERS HAVE TWO WEEKS TO GET TOGETHER

HAVE ANOTHER PROPOSITION

To Secure Quit Claim To Kard Property Turned Down for the Present - Detailed Report of Last Session Held.

"Let us do something—let's not talk, talk continuously, but do something—and I move, your honor, that the chief of police be instructed to close up every house of prostitution in the city and do it immediately."

Thus spoke Alderman Q. T. Moreland at the city council meeting on Friday night.

The motion was seconded by Alderman Waggonman, and was carried without a dissenting vote.

It all came about in the following manner: Alderman Murray presented an ordinance to have block E-2, Daggett's addition cut out of the fire limits. The block is on Calhoun street. On June 5 of this year it was, it is claimed, put in the fire limits by mistake.

Mr. Moreland explained that owners of property in the block desired to replace shacks with more substantial frame buildings, being unable to put up brick or stone structures.

Mr. Moreland favored the ordinance saying property values would be enhanced by reason of better frame structures; that it was out of the business center, and fire limits were created to protect business property.

Mr. Waggonman opposed the ordinance, saying he believed it to be a scheme on the part of some people to place thereon houses of prostitution. He opposed it on these grounds in a strong argument.

Mr. Moreland said if such be the case, he would oppose the ordinance. Mr. Moreland then offered his resolution referred to above, and it created quite a sensation. Mr. Moreland said that during the existence of a former council such a resolution was referred to the police committee, of which he was a member, but not chairman. The resolution never saw the light of day again—it was pigeonholed. Now he proposed for the council to act in the matter.

Mr. Orlek attempted to oppose the resolution on the grounds that he was not sure but that it was an unwise movement, but sat down without making an argument. It threw the entire council "on a limb," and none ventured to discuss it, whatever their opinions may have been—each looked at the other with unpeachable astonishment, and "where-are-we-at" expressions depicted on their faces. Finally the silence was broken by Mr. Waggonman calling for a yea and nay vote. The vote resulted unanimously in favor of the resolution.

Just what will result from the action remains to be seen. Aldermen are disposed not to talk about it. Asked concerning their action, they shake their heads and shrug their shoulders. Chief Rea is out of the city and Assistant Chief Allen is non-committal, dismissing reporters with "Search me—see the old man."

It is believed the movement will result in the creation of a "reservation," such as exists in Waco, and all disreputable women forced to abide therein. A move of this kind was put on foot not so very long ago, but has not been strictly adhered to. It is now believed that Friday night's action will result in bringing this reservation system to an enforcement.

The block in question was cut out of the fire limits.

HOUSTON STREET PAVING. The Houston street paving question was discussed. Messrs. Brown & Dabney asked to be permitted to pave portions of two certain blocks with brick, and said there were other blocks awaiting the council's favorable action. Much discussion followed. Finally, on motion of Alderman Waggonman two weeks were given in order that the advocates of asphalt could get together, and unless such property owners decided in that time to put down asphalt, then the council would give all owners who desired to put down brick permission to do so. They must decide one way or the other by the next council meeting.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS. Mayor Powell was absent, as was also Mayor Pro Tem Lehane. Alderman Henderson was selected to preside. Mayor Powell had been in attendance upon the Cleburne congressional convention, but came in about fifteen minutes before the council adjourned, and Alderman Henderson vacated the chair. The mayor presided then to the close.

The following proceedings were had: The finance committee made a number of reports of minor nature.

The treasurer's report for July showed: Net balance on hand July 1, $17,404.76; receipts for July, $22,807.44; disbursements, $27,688.25; net balance on hand, July 31, $13,523.95.

A number of claims against the city were filed.

The fire committee recommended the purchase of a ten-circuit switchboard and storage battery for central fire station, that the same be secured and installed immediately. Mr. Henderson asked that it go over for two weeks in order that an investigation be had concerning ten of the old Gamewell boxes being inefficient for the new service after it was put in. He thought the new apparatus would not work with the old boxes. The matter went over two weeks.

The city physician reported for August. The report was printed in Friday's Telegram.

The fire chief asked that owners of all three or more story office buildings and hotels place fire escapes thereon. Chief Maddox was granted a leave of absence for twenty days from September 10, to go to New York to attend the convention of fire engineers.

The city attorney reported title good to the lots recently ordered purchased in the eighth ward for school building purposes.

Citizens residing on Henderson street and Sandidge avenue petitioned for "Sandidge avenue" to be changed to Henderson street. Same was granted. An ordinance will be drafted.

A number of bills were allowed, including one for work and material on the Jennings avenue viaduct amounting to $5,636.13; one to Brown & Dabney for $319.50 for paving, and to R. L. Brown for $595 for work on Third ward school building.

City Engineer Hawley reported building permits issued for August, the structures to cost $29,575, and include sixteen frame dwellings, one brick warehouse, and one frame paint shop. The dues received amounted to $19.25.

In this connection it develops that there are a large number of buildings which have been constructed and are now under construction for which no permits have been issued, and which have never been reported to the city engineer's office. This is a direct violation of the city ordinance.

The mayor's veto of the additional fire stations proposition was sustained. An additional room was ordered for the first ward school building to cost not exceeding $500. It will be built at once.

The petition of citizens of the Fifth ward to have a fire alarm box placed in Union depot addition was referred to the fire committee.

B. F. Sprinkle and Irby Dunklin, claiming to have purchased the Heard heirs' property over which there has been so much controversy, and offered to settle with the city all back taxes for $3,000, including interest and costs, in lieu of a quit claim deed to said property. Mr. Waggonman fought the proposition, saying the city was either the owner of the property, or it was not. If the former, the city could get $3,500 in lieu of a quit claim for taxes due. If the latter, then the city should not leave it. He favored the matter go over two weeks, and it was so ordered.

A great many petitions of various sorts were received and referred to committees.

Council then adjourned.

ADA GRAY IN SAN ANTONIO

ACTRESS' DEATH RECALLS KILLING OF BEN THOMPSON

Her's Was the Last Performance the Desperado and His Friend Ever Attended - A Piece of History

The tragic close of Ada Gray's career on last Wednesday at the Fordham Home for Incurables near New York City, has caused much regret among the older theatergoers of San Antonio, and at the same time has recalled the famous Ben Thompson tragedy in this city, March 11, 1884, says the Express. Miss Gray was perhaps best known for her "Lady Isabelle" in the drama "East Lynne." This part she played for many years and was the one which brought her fame. In San Antonio she first appeared in "East Lynne" in 1882, at the Turner Hall on East Houston, and came here every year after inclusive of 1887, her last appearance in this city at the Grand Opera House, which was then under the management of Mr. Ernest Rische, who also had the management of the Turner Hall for several years.

Miss Gray played an engagement here March 10 and 11, 1884, in the Turner Hall at which time Mr. Rische had the management of the play house. On the last night of Miss Gray's engagement, Ben Thompson and King Fisher were spectators at the play. Their presence in the play house caused much anxiety among the ladies present. In a reminiscent mood Mr. Rische told an Express representative the following story:

"Ben Thompson came into the theatre first that night. He got a seat down near the stage. He had been in the theatre a short time when King Fisher came in and asked for a seat next to Thompson. I gave it to him. He had been seated but a short time when Chris Stafford, who was then head usher, came to me and said the ladies were very much frightened over Thompson's presence. 'I got him out, but King Fisher wanted to see the play finished. Thompson, however, insisted on his coming out with him which he did. As they came out, Charley Watkins, husband of Miss Gray, and I joined them. We walked across the street to get a drink. Watkins wore a high silk hat and Thompson wanted the worst in the world to shoot some holes through it. We persuaded him out of the notion of doing it, however, and later we went down to the Van Alstyne cafe and it was here that King Fisher told Thompson that Texas was not big enough to hold them, and one of them had better cross the Rio Grande. This was said in jest by King Fisher, but it seems that they had made up that day, having been enemies before.

"After we had a drink there we returned to the theatre. That was about ten o'clock, just before the last act. King Fisher wanted to go inside and see the play, but Thompson persuaded him to go with him and have some fun. He called up a hack which was standing near by and both men got in it. I was just closing up the theatre when the hack driver returned and told me that Thompson and King Fisher had been killed. I went down where the tragedy happened and saw their bodies.

"The next day Thompson's remains were shipped to Austin and Miss Gray and her company went over on the same train. She played at Austin that night.

"Miss Gray became famous in the character 'Lady Isabelle.' I don't know how many times she had played it, but she was considered one of the American stars. She was a regular visitor here and became a favorite with San Antonians.

IS NOW ALMOST EXTINCT. Alarming Disappearance of One of the Most Interesting Races of the American Indian will soon exist only in history. His extermination has been gradual but will be sure. He has been gradually driven from his happy hunting home in the east, to a few barren reservations in the west, where by amalgamation, dissipation or separation he is fast becoming extinct.

The Redskin has always been one of the most picturesque as well as cunning of the races. He is quick of perception, fleet of foot, loyal to a friend and unyielding to the enemy. There are many other things that make the Indian interesting to people who know very little about them and their habits.

They learned to ride and shoot from the white man, but many of them can almost excel their teachers. With Buckskin Bill, who comes to Fort Worth, Friday, Sept. 19, there are some of the most noted of the Sioux tribe of Indians. Their exhibition of horsemanship, marksmanship with rifle, shot-gun or pistol, their war dances and attacks on stage coaches, will form wonderful pictures of western life that can never be seen anywhere else. It will be a matter of only a few years until the poor, unfortunate Indian will be numbered among the dead races, and for this reason he is all the more interesting to the people of America today. Even at this advanced period, there are many people in America who have never seen an Indian.

The superiority of the Cowboy to the Redskin will be shown in a thrilling manner by Buckskin Bill in his great educational exhibition, which is recommended by ministers and members of every profession as one worthy of the greatest patronage.

A regular little Texas squall visited Fort Worth about 5 o'clock yesterday morning, waking sleepers hastily and causing a sudden shutting of many windows. For a minute during which many thought their houses would be blown away, the wind whistled merrily at about fifty-six miles an hour and for five minutes it was faster than an express train, whirling the anemometer cups on top of the Federal building so that they recorded forty-eight miles per hour. Then the wind gradually slowed down to thirty-six, then twenty-four miles, and finally died away altogether, being succeeded by Fort Worth's regular six-mile breeze.

During the squall .54 inches of rain fell, most of it coming in half an hour's time. The squall did a little damage, blowing down the big medicine-show tent at the corner of Tenth and Houston streets, and blowing down a large part of the Texas and Pacific ball park fence. A number of smaller trees were blown down and signs suffered considerably, but little serious damage is reported. The succeeding shower was badly needed and welcomed gladly.

For yesterday morning, at least, Fort Worth had the distinction of reporting the heaviest rainfall of any station on the weather map. There were heavier rains in Georgia, however. 2.10 inches being reported from Thomasville and 1.64 inches at Fort Gaines. The rain had the effect of cooling the atmosphere, the mercury going down to 66, two degrees cooler than it has been in a long time. Fair and pleasant weather is the prospect for today and tomorrow.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

If you are suffering from kidney or bladder disease, the doctor asks: "Do you desire to urinate often, and are you compelled to get up frequently during the night? Does your back pain you? Does your urine stain linen? Is there a scalding pain in passing it, and is it difficult to hold the urine back? If so, your kidneys or bladder are diseased."

Try putting some of your urine in a glass tumbler, let it stand twenty-four hours. If there is a sediment, or a cloudy, milky appearance, your kidneys are sick.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will surely relieve and cure the most distressing cases of these dread diseases, and no physician can prescribe a medicine that equals it for kidney, liver, bladder and blood diseases, rheumatism, dyspepsia and chronic constipation.

Walter D. Miller, of Delhi, N. Y., writes: "I suffered for years with kidney trouble and severe pains in my back, at times it was so bad I could hardly walk. My stomach also troubled me and I frequently had twinges of rheumatism. I suffered a great deal and received no benefit until I began the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. After taking it a short while it cured me."

Miss Grace Bruce Honored
Mrs. J. D. Kane gave a garden party and dance complimentary to her visitor, Miss Grace Bruce of Batavia, Ill., Thursday evening, at her home on Henderson street.

All the rugs were taken up and the dancing was upon the hardwood floors in the spacious house. Musicians discoursed sweet strains during the entire evening, during which time the guests enjoyed the waltz and two-step. For the pleasure of those who did not desire to participate in the dancing Mrs. Kane had arranged ping pong tables, and this popular game was indulged in by a large number.

Mr. W. G. Turner's Barbecue
Another barbecue is recorded for Fort Worth society, and this time given by Mr. W. G. Turner, at his home on West Fifth and Florence streets last Tuesday evening, and judging by reports from those who were fortunate enough to receive an invitation to attend, the event was immensely enjoyed.

The barbecue was had in Mr. Turner's back yard, where pine top tables were in evidence, with no covers to mar the pleasure of upsetting anything thereon. At each place a tin plate holding a huge piece of barbecue meat met the gaze of the guest. On the center of the table a large pan of pickles was placed to give appetite to those who were not hungry enough to do justice to the meat. Also biscuits, butter and coffee for those who might desire same.

The yard was brilliantly lighted with Japanese lanterns, by which the guests found their way to the feast.

Among those who were present were: Misses Katherine Stripling, younger society set this week by the reorganization of the old Yozolia dancing club.

It will be remembered that about six or seven months ago the young gentlemen members of the Sans Souci and Yozolia dancing clubs, after many debates on the subject decided to unite the two clubs under the name of the Imperial club, which was done, and under which name the two societies have been running ever since.

At the last regular business meeting of the Imperial club, Monday evening, August 24, in their rooms at the Elk club house on Seventh and Houston streets, a large number of resignations were received and accepted, the greater number of those asking to resign being the old members of the Yozolia club.

The young gentlemen who resigned held a meeting last Wednesday night and settled down to business at once. The first thing done was to form a new dancing club and adopt the name of the old well-known "Yozolia Club," with the following as officers of the society: President, Archie Diball; vice-president, C. H. Maddox; secretary, R. Cheatham; treasurer, Robert Martin; sergeant-at-arms, J. Krum; german leader, Jim Kerr. The members are: Messrs. Sanford Webb's Party

Sanford Webb entertained a large number of his little friends with a garden party and dance Thursday evening at the home of his parents on Henderson street.

The lawn was as light as day, there being hundreds of Japanese lanterns all over the yard and the veranda decked with them. Also, to add to the brilliancy of the affair, a huge engine headlight was placed in one corner of the lawn.

A tarpaulin was stretched on the ground and the little ones enjoyed themselves for many hours dancing the waltz and two-step. All sorts of games were participated in, such as "drop in the middle," "good night," "frog in the middle" and "clap in and clap out." There were many small tables, four chairs being placed around each, upon which was served ice cream, cake and sherbet. Mild punch was also at the pleasure of those who might be thirsty during the evening.

THE POPPY COLLAR

The Smart Touch of the Season to a New York Toilet

A smart touch this season is a poppy collar which a certain New York girl recently designed in an emergency, when a somewhat worn bodice was in sore need of being brightened up a bit. It was made not of lace or ribbon, like the usual collar, but of small, exquisitely shaded green leaves. They are artificial leaves of silk, such as the best milliners use, and were mounted on green chiffon, which formed a stock stiffening here and there by silk-covered featherbone. At the back came the dash of color—a cluster of small brilliant, red poppies. They were fastened to the collar, standing up very straight and showing their stems instead of being grouped to form a chout. One or two of the poppies were taller than the others, and reached well up into the hair. As poppy red was this young woman's particular color, the color proved most becoming, and gave the waist which it was worn a surprising new charm. —Woman's Home Companion.

FASHION HINTS

Long coats of every description are much in demand. These are made very simply with cape collars decorated with applique or lines of fagoting. The smartest are kept all black. Red tamine is one of the fads of the moment. A gown of this description recently seen at the races was marked by extreme simplicity of outline. The waist was laid in fine tucks placed in clusters of three, and the skirt was treated in a similar manner. The fullness was allowed to flare below the knees, and the lower edge was decorated with an irregular black chiffon applique. There was a wide collar on the waist decorated with chiffon applique and vandyke points.

The smart gown shown is of red veiling over red taffeta, and it is combined with ecru all over lace. The surplice front is edged with a band of white taffeta trimmed with narrow black braid and gilt buttons. The sleeves apparently button over full undersleeves of the lace.

They will take up the subject of "American Literature," which they will study for ten weeks under the direction of Mrs. J. C. Terrell, who will direct them in the early history thereof.

Yozolia Club Reorganized

Quite a surprise was created in the Tom Tose, Rhomulus Rhome, Jere Van Zandt, Ben Clements and Jake Doyle.

It is not likely that this new Yozolia club will give a german before Thanksgiving night, but from what could be gathered from some of the members they intend to make that event one to be remembered in society circles in Fort Worth, and show that the new Yozolia club can do as well as did the old Yozolias.

Altar Guild Entertained

The ladies of the Altar Guild of St. Andrew's Episcopal church, were entertained last Tuesday afternoon by Miss Melton on North Burnett street. There were in attendance, Mrs. J. W. Hoover, first president; Mrs. Malone Walker, second president; Miss Alberta Triplett, secretary; Miss Mary Waller, treasurer; and Misses Ida Chase, Jo Hornby, Ellen Smith, Mattie Shaw, Carrie Hornby and Miss Frost. Imperial Club German

Quite a delightful time was had at the dance Friday evening at the Grunewald pavilion. The occasion was the much talked of german given by the members of the Imperial club, and to say that the event was immensely enjoyed and successful is very mildly expressing it.

Those who were present included Misses Annie Laurie Rainey, Carrie Shugart, Cornelia Vogel, Annie Dinger, Will Ross Bragg of Hillsboro, Forrest Croom, Florence Hollingsworth, Myrtle Davenport, Nita Hollingsworth, Lottie Bartells, Annabelle Pendleton, Christina Beggs, Mary Harrison, Pierson of Louisiana, Elizabeth Tarlton, Frances Tarlton, Bessie McLean, Maidee Callaway, Kitty Belle Jenkins, Messrs. NEW THINGS STRANGE & CURIOUS

ODDEST COUNTY JAIL IN THE UNITED STATES.

Graham County Jail, at Clifton, Ariz., is probably the most unusual in America. It comprises four large apartments, hewn in the side of a hill of solid quartz rock. The entrance to the jail is through a boxlike vestibule, built of heavy masonry and equipped with three sets of gates of steel bars. Here and there in the rocky walls holes have been blasted for windows, and in these apertures a series of massive bars of steel have been fitted firmly in the rock. The floor of the rock-hewn jail is of cement, and the prisoners are confined wholly in the larger apartments. In some places the wall of quartz about the jail is 15 feet thick.

Some of the most desperate criminals on the Southwest border have been confined in the Clifton Jail, and so solid and heavy are the barriers to escape that no one there has ever attempted a break of freedom. The notorious Black Jack was there for months. Clifton is one of the great copper-mining camps in Arizona, and has the reputation of being as depraved a community as yet exists on the frontier of civilization. In summer the mercury there frequently rises to 120 in the shade, and in the winter it never goes below 40 degrees.

The Mexican lapdog is the smallest known variety of dog.

Telephone Fire Guard.

Novel and up to date is the method of bridling the fire monster when he goes forth to devour a feast of forest that is in use in the San Gabriel forest reserve, in California. This is a chain of 50 telephone stations about the reserve, for the special purpose of giving warning if a fire should break out in the woods.

In addition a patrol of 25 rangers are on guard. They carry portable phones, with which in a sudden emergency they can cut in on the nearest wire and so save valuable time, which would otherwise be wasted in reaching the station.

This somewhat expensive scheme was put into execution by the electric and irrigation companies, who control the water and wood facilities along the San Gabriel River. If someone would only invent some equally efficacious method of guarding against the other destructive element, water—in the form of rain, especially—he would benefit the whole human race and incidentally become a multimillionaire as well. If one could only press a button and turn off the weather!

Hair Needs Exercise.

One reason why so many men are bald, according to a foreign medical journal, is because they allow their hair to do through want of exercise. Under the skin which covers the head are several muscles, it explains, and these are never stirred into activity, the result being that they do not perform their proper function, and consequently the skin is insufficiently nourished and the hair gradually dies.

"Women," it continues, "do not become bald, and the reason is because they spend much more time combing and arranging their hair than men do. During this operation the skin on the head is stirred into activity, and as a result the muscles remain active and the hair flourishes.

"It is evident, therefore, that the best way to prevent baldness is to rub the skin frequently and vigorously, for, unless this is done, the muscles will be unable to supply it with the proper amount of nourishment."

THE MAN WITHIN THE GUN.

Here is the 16-inch gun which has just been completed at the Watervliet Arsenal. This view shows the muzzle, with a man in it whose weight is 165 pounds.

This gun is immense when one considers the quality of the metal contained in it; which is, of course, the best that science and skill can produce at the present time. It is built up of nine pieces of steel forgings, the first piece being the tube, all in one piece, 48 feet long. The whole length of the finished gun is 49 feet, the diameter at breech end is 35 feet, and at muzzle 2 feet

4 inches. Its weight is 120 tons, and it is rifled with 36 grooves.

The breechloading mechanism is operated by the one movement of turning a crank. Twenty turns of the crank swing the breech block out ready for the firing, which is done by pulling a lanyard after the primer has been placed in position and connected with electric contact. The firing mechanism is connected so as to make it impossible to explode the primer before the breech block is properly closed and locked.

Beautiful Roman Coffin.

Near Konia, and within a stone's throw of the Anatolian Railroad, was recently discovered a beautiful marble sarcophagus. Finely carved it is, and in all other respects a notable work of art.

On the massive lid is sculptured the figure of a seated man who is reading a sheet of parchment, and on one of the sides is admirably portrayed a lifelike hunting scene. There is scarcely an inch of the great coffin on which the artist has not worked. In every figure, from the largest to the smallest, he has shown marked evidence of his skill, especially surprising being the manner in which he has portrayed the attitudes of the various animals and the costumes of the riders in the hunting scene.

The sarcophagus is supposed to have been wrought in the third century after Christ, and it is now in the museum at Constantinople. Since its discovery a zealous search for other works of art has been made near Konia, and archeologists are confident that it will not prove fruitless.

Shot At His King.

Probably Prince Nicholas, of Greece, who is one of King George's five sons, inherits his wit from his father, for the King's most prominent quality, after his sound common sense, is his unflinching good humor.

The anecdote is related that the King was prowling Caliph-like about the military quays one dark night when he was challenged by a sentinel. King George, who did not wish to be recognized, took to his heels, whereupon the sentry fired on him. He was a good shot, and the bullet literally grazed the royal fugitive, cutting a piece out of his cloak.

Next day the sentry was commanded to present himself at the palace, where the King received him, and after complimenting him both on the vigilance of his watch and the accuracy of his aim, placed the Order of the Redemption on his breast.

What Is A Lobster?

Suit for damages is now pending in the Chicago courts which is based on an unusual plea—the defendant called the plaintiff "a lobster." Under a recent law concerning libel the person sued for calling horrid names can go free if he can prove that the alleged "libel" is true.

If that should enter into this case, some light upon the exact nature and habits of the genus lobster humankind might be thrown. If the defendant were to undertake to prove the truth of his assertion, how would he go about it?

This opprobrious epithet has been cast about among people of all grades of society for several years. When it has struck and stuck to the right person everybody sees the fitness of the title. But what, exactly, are the main characteristics of the "lobster"?

"Oh, he's a lobster!" coming from the rugged Cupid's bow mouth of Dotty Plumple, as she waits behind the wings with spear adjusted, ready to lead the line of "soldiers brave," means that the gentleman under discussion is susceptible to the right kind of manipulation which extracts birds and cold bottles from his pocketbook.

"Tell me, what is a lobster?" was the query put to a man who had just growled the offensive word at the retreating figure of an acquaintance who had jostled him in the passageway.

"Well, a lobster is a—" he paused helplessly. "He's a kind of animal that is always in everybody's way—out of place, you know." And he brightened up with the glow of one who has accomplished that most difficult process of thought, a definition. "You see, a chap that tries to 'but in' with another fellow's girl—the other fellow calls him a lobster—see?"

So that is a man's definition. But how about the woman's?

"What kind of a man do you call a lobster?" The bright young woman who was asked the question pondered a moment, then said tersely: "A bore. He's always dense and stupid."

And there you have the two versions. But how came all those repulsive qualities to be fastened upon that innocent, succulent, scarlet-backed creature, the emblem of jolly mid-night good-fellowship—the lobster of the sad sea waves?

Microbe Carriers.

One thing the bacteriologists have done for the country, even if they have made life a nightmare with the thought of microbes on everything we touch, taste or handle, and that is the war of extermination which they have inaugurated against flies and mosquitoes; for they have carried the campaign into the ranks of the little pest of a housefly, as well as organized regular and universal means to do away with the midnight serenader.

The spraying of ponds and other stagnant waters with oil and the renewed attention given to drainage for the purpose of stopping the mosquito method of spreading disease have occupied much gray matter, but now comes the fly literature, which is calculated to make your hair rise in horror at the contents thereof. It is enough to cause a spasm when a fly pauses to rest and refresh himself for a moment on your hand just to recall what you are told that insect carries around on his filthy little body.

You see every kind of "bug," from typhoid to smallpox, sticking out all over him. His annoying bite becomes a secondary consideration in comparison.

Through the mails are sent to everyone interested plans for the making of a specially devised fly trap, which is expected to ensure the wariest and wisest of these household pests. He is said to be an easier "mark" than the mosquito, either to stalk or to lure, and this new and deadly device of the Department of Agriculture will accomplish the ambush without difficulty.

Shah Exempt In Court.

When the Shah of Persia was in Europe he instructed a clipping bureau to send him all the notices about his trip, that they might be published in the leading journals. His instructions were carried out, and before he left France 43,000 clippings were sent to him, and with them a bill for 12,800 francs.

As the Shah paid no attention to the bill suit was begun in a French court, and the judge recently delivered his decision.

"The Shah of Persia, who ordered these 43,000 clippings," he said, "is a sovereign, and as this was an act of sovereignty on his part, no French court is competent to judge him."

The Shah was not represented in court, and the French Minister of Foreign Affairs declined to draw his attention to the fact that suit had been begun.

Automobile Cotillon.

Recently, in Turin, a curious dance was performed with automobiles. It was a regular cotillon, and 45 automobiles took part in it.

Among those present Princess Letitia Bonaparte was most conspicuous. All Turin turned out to see the unusual sight, and the unanimous verdict was that the dance was performed with much skill.

What Is A Nose Worth?

What is it worth? A recent periodical asks this quizzical question in commenting on the damages awarded by a railroad company to a young woman who had lost her nose in a wreck. In her suit for damages she had appraised her nose at $75,000, while the railway thought its value to be about $2,000. They compromised on $18,000 and all the expenses of nurses, doctors and specialists.

"Now one wishes to know," queries the exchange, "whether a nose ranks higher in the beauty market than any other feature? Would a chin be worth $10,000 or $25,000? An eye has a value as an ornament and also as an instrument. What about the price to be set upon a smooth and rounded cheek? And would it be profane to speculate on the market quotation of a dimple?"

If the man who wrote that—for, of course, it was a man—had stopped to apply the usual rule of commerce, that of supply and demand, he would not have propounded his apparent conundrum. As long as there are men in the world with an eye for feminine beauty there will be an enormous price set on that commodity. When one reflects how many men will propose to a dimple and a picture hat, one is not amazed that women will strive by every means possible and impossible to obtain those beautifiers.

Women will always supply the known demand, and when the market price in love, diamonds, yachts and Newport cottages is ever at the highest notch for beauty, more than for brains, goodness or character, rest assured that these latter qualities will be supplied in merely a limited measure, while every woman in the land will increase to its limit her stock of beauty.

The market quotation of a dimple has often been shown to be several millions—and a husband thrown in—therefore do girls go to Paris specialists and submit to the pain of a difficult surgical operation upon smooth cheeks to get a bewitching dent therein. They are merely supplying the demand in the market.

The beauty doctors thrive because the demand for their wares is so great. The woman is but the middleman, who buys all she can get from the masseuse, the hairdresser, the modiste, the manicure, the pedicure—no brainy cures are needed, for their wares would be a drug on the matrimonial market—and then she proceeds to dispose of her purchases to the highest bidder.

Many a woman's fate has hung upon an added quarter inch of eyelash. Then go to let us get eyelashes, because, forsooth, upon their kinks may be suspended a loving husband, a country house, an automobile and

A RARE LIGHTNING PHOTOGRAPH.

Cameras can grasp more than the naked eye. This assertion is said to have been proved by the remarkable photograph taken by Herman Vogel, an amateur photographer, of Passaic.

During a heavy storm of thunder and lightning Vogel stuck his camera out of a doorway and snapped the shutter. The streak of lightning was distinctly portrayed on the plate. This same streak of lightning struck a flagpole a block away and demolished it.

Hundreds of people who saw the flash did not realize its magnitude. It is believed that the bolt that hit the pole was from the fork in the flash as shown on the upper right-hand side of the plate.

HERE'S A MUCH GNARLED OAK.

This freak of nature, situated on Monterey Bay, Cal., was originally a small oak of ordinary size, but the shifting sands which blow in from the ocean, only a short distance away, gradually covered the trunk and lower limbs.

The top limbs gradually spread and branched out until it now covers a large area.

There are limbs a hundred feet long, all originating from one trunk and twisting in and out among one another like so many giant snakes.

Also upon its many branches can be seen the names of many people who have visited this tree.

Opening of the Theatrical Season in Fort Worth

IF there will be an abundance of theatrical attractions here in Fort Worth this season has already been evidenced by list of bookings two weeks ago. Whether they will be of generally good or bad quality appears to depend largely upon the condition of the public liver.

Expert opinions by those who ought to know, differ as greatly as the opinion of the three blind men who went to see the elephant, and they go to both extremes. For example, a writer on dramatic subjects in New York papers, says:

"While dozens — yes, hundreds — of companies are just now in the unpleasant yet drastic process of rehearsals, there is not one single thing in the whole gamut that is new. It is either a question of doing old things over again or trying novelties on the enthusiastic countrymen.

On the other hand, Mr. Lyman Glover, of Chicago, can see the greatest of good promise in the things to come. After reviewing the Shakespearean revivals which we are expected to see this season — notably Mansfield in "Julius Caesar," "The Tempest," by Frederick Warde and Louis James, Maude Adams in "As You Like It," "Soth in Hamlet" and Modjeska in "King John."

"Yet this does not exhaust the commendable probabilities of the season. Miss Viola Allen's production of "The Eternal City" is likely to be an event of very distinct artistic consequence both in its pictorial and dramatic features. Miss Julia Marlowe also enters the lists with a legitimate dramatic undertaking in "Princess Flanetta," and Otis Skinner is in line with the best dramatic traditions with "Lazarus."

Mr. Carter continues in "Du Barry," the dramatic consequences of which cannot be denied, while James K. Hackett pins his faith to "The Crisis," a legitimate drama based upon national happenings of great significance and moment. Miss Harned is assigned to Pinero's new drama, "Iris," and Pinero is always an event not to be denied.

Of course, Signora Duse, Mrs. Pat Campbell, Jane Haining, Mr. Willard, Sara Bernhard and Mrs. Fiske will add the very best that is in their power to the season's entertainment. Certainly there is nothing in such an outlook to justify the gloomy view of the dramatists. To ordinary mortals the prospect seems unusually good, and that without enumerating some of the lighter plays that deserve fair consideration.

While it is undoubtedly true that the 19th century public prefers something new, whether on the dramatic or lyric stage, rather than revivals — no matter how elaborate — it is also true that this same public demands merit. It is somewhat strange, therefore, to find the New York writer on the pessimistic side.

At all events, Fort Worth theatergoers will have plenty of good things to amuse this winter. The season will open here tomorrow night and from then on until the close there will be a succession of shows with bright stellular lights and lights that are not so Peruchi-Beldini company, an established favorite in this city and one of the highest class popular price organizations in the South today. The company is headed by the long-established favorites, Cheiso D. Peruchi, Miss Ella Beldini and the international famous Carleton Sisters. These well known stars are supported by a carefully selected company of recognized metropolitan artists, both dramatic and vaudeville, whose names alone are an ear-organization. Among this company's plays are: "The Slaves of Russia," "The Heart of Paris," "Broken Links," "The Judge," "A Bowery Boy," "Jesse

Following the Peruchi-Beldini company and the minstrel show will come the Braunig Dramatic company for a week, with the exception of Friday night, September 19 when "Hermann the Great" will hold the boards. After this the companies will come and go with the almost daily regularity of the rising and setting sun. It is only necessary to mention, Anna Held, Tim Murphy, Elizabeth Kennedy in Captain Jinks, The Telephone Girl, Adelaide Thurston, The Strollers, Princess Chic, The Wizard of one Nile, Kelsey Shannon, Al Wilson, Ernie Elser, Foxy Quiller, Stuart Robson, The Belle of New York, King Dodo, The Grau Opera company, Louis James and Frederick Ward, Jud Prouty, Rose Cozlan, to show that Manager Greenwall has the cream of the pickings.

A Dramatic Gossip

Frank Deshon will be the successor of James T. Power in "The Messenger Boy."

Louise Drew, the daughter of John Drew, will play the ingenue role in "Iris" with Virginia Harned.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell and her company commenced rehearsals at the Garden Theatre on Saturday.

Edgar Selden has secured the rights to the late Robert Louis Stevenson's story, "The Suicide Club," and is preparing it for stage purposes.

Eleanor Robson will begin the season in the support of Kyrie Bellew in "A Gentleman of France," but will later have a play of her own.

Blossy Kiraly is to open his tour of the world with a revival of "Around the World in Eighty Days" at Providence the latter part of September.

Helen Grantly will close her cottage at Allenhurst, N. J., on Sept. 8th and come to the city to commence her rehearsals of "Her Lord and Master."

Lionel Barrymore is going to play the part of the Italian organ grinder in John Drew's new production of "The Mummy and the Humming Bird."

Elsie De Wolfe's tour in "The Way of the World" will commence in Pittsburg September 29. Miss De Wolfe will shortly sail for America from abroad.

Grace George's new play has sixty-three "speaking parts" and will require an auxiliary corps of over 200. The name of the play has not yet been divulged.

Arrangements are being made by the Mascagni Society of this city to give a great banquet at the Hotel Savoy in honor of Mascagni upon his arrival here in October.

Kirk La Shelle has great confidence in the drawing powers of "Arizona." During the past week he bought out Fred Hamlin's interest in the piece, paying $25,000.

Clifford Russell Sage, said to be a nephew of the financier, was engaged last week by Lieber & Co. for one of the fighting swordsmen in "A Gentleman of France."

The new play which has been accepted for Grace George is a four act drama of the period of George II, written by a woman noted chiefly for her short stories.

Eleanor Duse is to supplement her American tour with one through Australia. This will permit her to give performances in the large cities of the Pacific coast.

Dorothy Hammond will be Mr. Richard Mansfield's leading lady next season. She comes from Terry's theatre, London, and is reported to be very beautiful and talented.

The piece in which Mrs. James

Arthur C. Aiston's company will present for the first time in this city the new play, "At the Old Cross Roads." According to the dramatic writers of other cities, Hal Reid, the author, has written one of the best stories of Southern life given to the stage in recent years. Each character has been drawn with a master hand, and the plot of the play unfolds a deeply interesting and probable story. The play will be presented by a company of players most of whom are favorably known here for their meritorious work with other organizations.

It is announced that Mrs. Montague Ward, formerly Fanny Batchelder, is to return to the stage. Mrs. Ward was a favorite in her younger days and her return will be watched with interest by old-timers.

Joseph Hart has written three new songs for "Foxy Grandpa." They are entitled "Polly, Pretty Polly," "Different Ways of Proposing" and "I Wonder If He Knew The Reason Why." The season of "Foxy Grandpa" began August 11 at Atlantic City.

William A. Brady will have an even dozen attractions this season — Grace George in her new play, three companies in "Way Down East," three in "Lovers' Lane," two in "Foxy Grandpa," "Under Southern Skies," a revival

GEORGIA CAYVAN IS DYING

Once Charming Actress, Blind and Mad, Removed to Quieter Place

New York, Sept. 6.—Mad, totally blind and dying, Georgia Cayvan, an actress whose beauty and charm made her one of the foremost players on the American stage a decade ago, was removed from a Flushing sanitarium today to a quieter retreat. In this place, the doctors say, death will soon write "Fins" on the last sad chapter of a brilliant career. Georgia Cayvan was the victim of a calamity. While she was lying ill from an acute nervous malady her name appeared in a divorce suit brought against "Ollie" Teall. This was in 1894. Her friends rallied to her support and the Professional Woman's League brought suit against Mrs. Teall. A public apology and complete vindication followed, but the shock and humiliation of the charge unbalanced the overwrought woman's mind. Shortly after entering a sanitarium Miss Cayvan was stricken blind. Then acute mania, manifesting itself in extreme outbreaks of violence developed. For the past year she has been kept in restraint, her strength meanwhile falling constantly. The last hope for her rehabilitation vanished a month ago. One result of her suffering was a new law guarding against the indiscriminate naming of co-respondents in divorce suits without due cause and giving the person named the opportunity to appear in court and defend herself. Georgia Cayvan will be remembered by theatregoers as the leading woman in a number of brilliant successes, of which "The Charity Ball," "The Wife" and "Men and Women" were the most notable. For five seasons she and Herbert Kelcey enjoyed the distinction of being the best stock company actors in the United States. Miss Cayvan's last appearance on the stage was in a piece called "Squire Kate" but in this she was only mildly successful.

Georgia Minstrels

To those who enjoy nirth, music and song the coming of Richards & Pringle's Famous Georgia Minstrels will be hailed with delight. JAMES AND WARDE AS A TEAM

They Will Star in Spectacular Production of "The Tempest"

Wagenhals and Kemper's magnificent spectacular production of "The Tempest" which will present Louis James and Frederick Warde as joint stars, and which will come to Fort Worth during the course of the winter, the coming season is now rapidly nearing completion at the firm's big scenic studio. The scenery is being done by H. Logan Reid who painted the famous Augustin Daly productions for many years. The costumes, which will present an exquisite and brilliant variety of dresses are being made by Hermann from designs by Mrs. Siedle of the Metropolitan opera house, New York. The incidental music which will be made an important feature of the production has been arranged and composed by Maxime De Grosse who will have the drilling of the chorus and ballet, and personally conduct the orchestra on tour.

which begins in November, will extend through Canada, the South and the Pacific coast.

Mascagni will not change his place of residence to America from Italy, though cables to the daily press late this week said he had declared he would. There is no doubt the composer is angry because of his dismissal from the directorship of the Liceo at Pesaro, Italy, on account of his coming visit to America against the wishes of the school, but his interests are too closely identified with Italy for him to leave there permanently.

Belle—Don't you think Theo. Thom as is a great conductor?

Nelle—I do, ever remember riding on his car—Review.

Miss Helene Wadley, violiniste of Shreveport, La., and who is well known to Fort Worth concert goers, has arrived in the city to remain during the coming winter.

Madame Fletcher-Copp of Boston, the originator and founder of the well known Fletcher method of musical kindergarten, will come to Fort Worth about October 1. She will remain only a short time, giving demonstration and instruct a class of teachers who will come from all parts of the South.

Mrs. Gatha Wood Taylor, organist at the First Presbyterian church, leaves shortly for a visit to Salt Lake City.

It is announced that Wilhelmj will return to the concert stage. It is so many years since the famous violinist gave up concerts that many of the musical people have forgotten him.

The bill introduced in the United States senate by Senator Mason of Illinois and in the house of representatives by Representative Metcalf of California, to establish in this country a National Conservatory of Music, seems to have met with hearty approval throughout the country. Under its provisions one conservatory each is to be located in the cities of Washington, New York, Chicago and San Francisco. The bill, if it should become effective, would not only give us a defined national standard in music and foster home education under national auspices and encourage American composers and soloists, but it would bring about the establishment of many musical schools and colleges which would be utilized by the people for the purpose of having their children prepared in order to enter the great national institution itself.

It is one of the famous pair of Stradivarius cellos which attracted so much attention when exhibited in London. The other was purchased by Adeline Patti about two years ago for $20,000.

Miss Ida Gardner, pianist of the musical department of Kidd-Key college, Sherman, was in the city the past week.

Edward A. McDowell, the foremost of American composers, and widely known as a pianist, will in all probability be heard in Fort Worth the coming season.

Judging from the success of the present season, J. S. Duss, and his remarkable band have surpassed Sousa, both musically and in popularity in concerts throughout the East. Duss has made a large fortune in a commercial way in earlier life, and lately he has developed into a wonderful director. He is about 35 years of age.

One of the most captivating things that is possible to conceive is to be walking along the streets of Fort Worth about dusk and hearing some intellectual (?) and charmingly gowned young lady having the windows wide open, sitting at the piano pounding out some "two-step" or a "rag-time" for the benefit of the whole community. "Och du lieber!"

Mrs. Dr. R. E. I. Miller is now organist at the First Methodist church during the temporary absence of Miss Nellie Higby, who is in Colorado.

"Do people prefer you much with requests to play for you?" asked an interviewer the other day of Leo Schuch, the famous teacher of Padernaburg. "Indeed, they do," he replied, "but I have acquired a wonderful technique in disposing of them. Once I was really caught, a girl came to me and said, 'I had to listen, but please let me hear you play again.' So I played for her and she said, 'I don't know how to thank you, but I will be back again.'"

Mr. George Weiler, late of the American Conservatory of Music, Chicago, will be the organist at the Broadway Presbyterian church this morning.

Signor Sonzogno of Rome, whose prize of $1000 for the best opera by an Italian, was won by Mascagni, with "L'Amore Rusticano," has now offered a similar prize for the best one-act opera in any language. He offers to produce the successful work at his own expense at Milan, Italy, on the occasion of the International exhibition in 1901.

Mr. Editor—Allow me to speak a few words in favor of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I suffered for three years with the bronchitis and could not sleep at nights. No profession has advanced more rapidly of late than surgery, but it should not be used except where absolutely necessary. In cases of piles for example, it is seldom needed. FORT WORTH, TEXAS, SEPTEMBER 7, 1902.

A FABLE IN SLANG.

There was once a little Garden Spot in a State that was composed principally of Plenty of Room.

The two bright spots on the Spot's spotless reputation, were its Curfew Fire-Alarm System and its Serio-Comic Electric Lights.

The act of these two Stars of the Garden Spot, would begin with "The Holy City" by the Fire-alarm system

The Light-system got to doing its turn so often that it staid off Stage most of the time, and made things Sale for people who had paid to see the Show.

Some of the Vox Populi went to the Box-office and Called for their Rhinoceros but the ticket-seller with the Chilly overcoat said "Aw g'wan, wat t'ell yous rootin' about. Dat moonlight-schedule specialty is de Swelles' ting ever struck town.

It got so bad after a while that most of the Vox Populi in the Garden Spot staid at home. They couldn't go driving, or they would land in one of the Spot's magno-mud Baths which were scattered through the Streets.

Finally one night when the Show was about the end of the Season, the Fire-alarm came on for its half and did the "woozy" act for three minutes.

But the Light-system had the dumps that night and said it was a Sure-thing blossom and wasn't going to be a Pansy to anybody's Primrose, so it went out and staid.

The Alarm-system supers came on quick and started to find the fire, but they couldn't see anything except the distant blaze and the Asbestos cottage where the Heroine was hanging out of the second story and crying in a stage whisper, "Take me in your arms ere I per-rish."

The Supers rushed to do the Hobson stunt, but they failed to see the Stage sofa and all butted into it together. When the fragments were collected, there wasn't enough left to tell how Rome felt. The beautiful Heroine had to jump out of the window alone, and the asbestos cottage all burned up as well as most of the Surrounding Scenery.

It took the Landscape gardners two years to get the Garden spot looking anything like itself.

But the light-system staid out and is still on the pay roll. Moral—Citizens will please see that there are no fires in Fort Worth on dark nights.

The city council Friday night voted to close all houses of ill-fame in the city. This was rather an unexpected reform or talk of reform.

CONDITIONS THAT ARE MAKING A GREAT LIVESTOCK MARKET

Putnam Gazette: In order to be able from personal observation, to give an accurate account of the new Fort Worth stockyards and packing houses that are rapidly nearing completion, the writer visited the scene of activity on the north side of the Panther City, a short time ago, and witnessed the progress of the construction of what when completed will be the finest system of stockyards in the world, covering an area of fifty acres.

Two packing houses, the most modern in the world, are being erected near the stockyards, and by November 1 will be ready for operation.

The Fort Worth stockyards have superior natural advantages over any other yards in the United States, and these advantages are being utilized by the capable management in arranging the pens and shipping facilities, so as to give stock the best possible care and to expedite their handling.

The Exchange building in which the offices of the company and the commission firms will be located is designed on the old Spanish Mission style of architecture, and will be the most handsome livestock exchange building in the country.

The Fort Worth Stock Yards company is to receive and care for the stock shipped to it until it is removed by the buyers. It has no connection with the packing plants beyond what it will have with the other customers of the meat market that it will seek to create.

Traveling agents will be employed by the Stock Yards company to scour the territory tributary to the Fort Worth market, for cattle shipments.

The farmer in the country tributary to this market will be benefited by the demand for fat hogs to meet the requirements of the new packing plants, which will consume 5,000 hogs per day.

Hogs are "mortgage lenders" and raising them for market has been proven highly profitable. Fort Worth is rapidly forging to the front as the metropolis of Texas, and the Fort Worth stock yards and the new Armour and Swift packing plants will be important factors in the prosperity of the entire Southwest.

These institutions will furnish to reliable parties, all the money needed to fatten stock for the Fort Worth market. Being pre-eminently the cattle city of the United States, where the "cow men" delight to come, it is the residence place of numbers of the wealthiest cattlemen in the country, and it has an open door and a hospitable welcome to all.

The Fort Worth Stock Yards company will have the united support of the ranchmen and feeders of the Southwest, who can be depended on to ship their marketable livestock to this market.

The stockmen of this territory are men of the greatest grasp of all matters affecting their business and they know that the creation of a great market here will enhance the values of the pastures and stock millions of dollars, consequently, they will sustain it to the fullest extent, and buyers will be compelled by self-interest to purchase their supplies of fat stock and feeders here, where there will always be the largest numbers to choose from, and the greatest competition will result.

The requirements of the new packing plants, which will consume 5,000 hogs per day, every farmer can raise a few hogs at a nominal expense and fatten them partly on inexpensive refuse that would otherwise be wasted.

As time progresses it will largely increase its citizenship from the enterprising and wealthy stockmen who have always regarded Fort Worth as the city of their love—the pioneer cattle city of the range country.

What To Eat To Have A Beautiful Complexion.

There is no element of personal attraction to which woman gives so much thought as to her complexion. Her efforts are common to all, directed, not so expensive and disappointing. Her failures are due to the fact that she considers the skin a superficial matter, and that the body's health depends entirely upon external influences and applications. On the contrary, it yields to no other organ of the body in its intimate connection with the body's health, and it is the integrity of its function of elimination is impaired additional work is thrown upon internal organs and the normal action of the physical economy is jeopardized. Moreover, the capillary circulation, being delicate and easily disturbed, always displays an acute sympathy with the whole physical and mental state. In consequence, the skin is an unerring barometer of internal conditions.

One need not expect to remove or cure skin disorders without first seeking to discover their internal causes. It is rare that a bad complexion is not an inflexible index of some violation of hygienic laws. Therefore, the woman who desires to improve her complexion must order her life in accordance with these laws.

Health is the cornerstone of beauty, and the integrity of the foundation demands the absolute purity of these four necessities—air, water, food and thoughts. These are the constituents for such inward order and health that it will be reflected in a delicate skin.

Value of Pure Water.

Next to air no other thing has such an influence upon the texture of the flesh and the structure of our bodies as the water we drink. When the women of a particular section of the country are noted for their fine complexions investigation develops the fact that the water supply of the locality is of remarkable purity. Many women do not drink half enough liquid, and the general indifference to the purity of drinking water is disastrous in its consequence upon health.

Here is a water test so simple that anyone can try it: Take a clear white glass bottle holding a pint and fill it about two-thirds with water; add a half spoonful of granulated sugar; cork the bottle with a virgin cork or a glass stopper, and stand it in the light in a warm room. If within 48 hours the water becomes cloudy or milky it is unfit to drink. When there is doubt about the water and no means at hand to boil or distill it, a wise precaution is to add a few drops of lemon juice to every tumblerful of the drink and renders the commonest forms of impurity innocuous.

Woman's crowning indiscretion, however, considered with reference to her complexion, is in the choice of her food and her irregular habits of eating. Her food is the material out of which this flesh which she would have so fair and attractive is molded.

Late suppers of lobster a la Newburg or Welsh rarebit and other rich, highly seasoned concoctions and indulgence in ice cream and a cup of chocolate, are an injustice to nature's needs. Excessive and candy nibbling destroys a healthy appetite for regular meals and permits no rest to the digestive organs. Moderate indulgence in sweets does no harm if they are eaten at the proper time, as a dainty relish after meals.

mass, and the saliva of the month, being alkaline, when it has this opportunity to begin the process of digestion, it causes its acid, and the stomach's gastric juice, which performs its functions.

Persons had better go hungry than indulge in the baneful habit of cramming a load of half-masticated food.

Our breakfasts are, as a rule, too hearty for those not engaged in manual labor, unless they have opportunities for abundant outdoor exercise. If you are going to take a chop-not pork or juicy bit of rare steak, in addition to eggs, graham or whole wheat muffins, fruit and whatever drink you prefer.

In the sedentary life that more than half the world of women lead errors of diet consist almost as much of overeating as in the choice of food. For all such the morning meal should be light and of the sort most easily assimilated. The first course should be fruit, fresh in its season, except that year round, in late winter and early spring oranges and shadocks are mainly needed, performing, with the malic acid economy. The beneficent work in the human action, when they encounter the digestive system, turned at once into potent alkalies, relieving both rheumatism and dropsy.

Avoid White Bread.

The best cereals for the sedentary person's breakfast, should any be desired, are those which are prepared for the table without further cooking. Some of them are in crisp flakes, having a taste so palatable and so nutty that it stimulates their beautiful mastication, and they are delicious eaten dry or with a little cream, with berries or other fruit, making one course. Eggs with cocoa or milk should conclude the breakfast, though tomatoes or watercress may be added if desired. Meat, potatoes and white rolls and bread are tabooed. Whole wheat and gluten bread ought to displace that of fine white flour as a standard article of diet.

If you are eating for a fine complexion you must eschew white bread; but if there are emergencies when it is that you go hungry, have it cut in thin slices and toasted brown, for this process transforms the starch into dextrine, which saves one of the steps in digestion. It has not to be changed into glucose before it can be taken up as nutriment. Dried figs contain 68 per cent of glucose, which, when eaten, is in exactly the condition that the starch of cereal foods attains only after a prolonged and nerve-wearing tax upon the digestive organs.

Luncheon should be a light meal, consisting of soup or a salad—not often both, unless in cold weather or after more exercise than usual—with delicate sandwiches—the cream cheese, peanut butter or lettuce-mayonnaise sort—and always there should be a fruit or some kind of a sweet to finish with.

FACES WE OUGHT NOT TO MAKE

The expression of a woman's face has more to do with creating the beauty which charms, fascinates and wins undying devotion and love than more regularity of features; in fact, expression is the conquering and compelling force which yields in importance to no other factor, imparting to the plainest or most irregular features a greater power to please than lies in mere symmetry and harmony of form and line.

That women are generally unconscious of this, or, when not unconscious, absurdly thoughtless and careless, is proved on every hand daily, else would they not indulge in tortures which disfigure their faces as they go about their avocations. The full glare of the public thoroughfare or conveyance seems to be the favorite opportunity for indulging in these whims, which indicates a sublime indifference to the effect upon the onlooker, or else an absolute oblivion of surroundings.

Many a beautiful face is made unlovely and many a comely one positively ugly by grimaces and distortions that are ridiculous when not weird. Though the mouth is the center of this remarkable, and one must suppose unconscious, display of feeling, the distorting lines spread over the whole countenance, involving the eyelids and eyebrows especially, and often twisting the nose. Sometimes these absurd tricks of facial contortion are as fleeting as a passing cloud, but again the grimace remains fixed for some perilous moments, during which the little lips that line and wrinkle faces are putting in their petty, defacing work, graving lines that leave their mark. It is not years that seam faces, but unlovely, harassing thoughts.

No other feature is so mobile or betrays so clearly every emotion as the mouth, and because of this mobility its beauty depends upon woman herself, who can mold it to whatever measure of attractiveness she sets before her as worth attaining. She must place a guard upon her capricious thoughts and emotions, for these are the chisels ever industriously shaping the mouth and making supplying the mask, as it were, and looking serene, no matter what be the inward conflict, that we can present this photograph of our most fleeting thoughts being held up to friend and stranger alike.

The strong, noble lines of a face, indicating the highly developed character, come from the equal exercise of all these so-called muscles and nerves, bodily forth the fact that the "triumph" has conquered the warring elements and made them all really her servants to do her will.

There is one profession the practice of which gives such equal and harmonious exercise to both sets of nerves and consequently to all the muscles of the face, defacing without expression—Laxative and laxative to recognize "the actor's face" a distinct type.

It is the constant activity of all nerve influences, so evenly and so perfectly balanced, that we can present this photograph of youth at which actors and actresses alone have seemed privileged to drink, and which to the uninitiated has seemed so mysterious. Discipline and training impart to ordinary features a commanding dignity that attracts, and commands the attention of the world at the beginning of the career, develop a very high type of personal beauty.

Of the defacing tricks and grimaces by which headless women make lovely faces unattractive and plain ones repulsive, twisting the mouth and dropping it at the corners, with set jaws, are among the most common. Misanthropy and depression pull down the corners of the mouth as if weights were attached, and who shall say such emotions are not heavy? They are as bars of lead, and create many of the faces we ought not to make.

Recently I saw in a street-car an elderly woman, who was not uncomely when her face was in repose, set her jaws firmly, and conveyed the impression that she would drop the same purse the lips up in a curve under the nose, while by some magic she drew down the outer corners of her eyes. If you will imitate the expression—Laxative and laxative to herself with great determination—"Well, I shall do it anyway, and if you don't like it you can make the best of it."

She had evidently had a fierce conflict of words with someone; but she was taking her own way, and the change of scene diverted her so she would transiently forget her troubles and disclose her real countenance; but quickly she would revert to the bone of contention and "make another face," always the same, except to grow in intensity and fierceness as she dwelt upon details.

Fragrance Of Flowers In The Home.

Sweeter than the costliest imported perfumes are the delicate odors given out riotously by lowly plants, such as the wild waving trees. The scent of sweet grass, sweet fern and sweet clover which comes from the trunk as the homecoming woman opens it on her return from the country carries her back to the wide fields, the pleasant waste places and the rustic beauty of the region. The very fragrance of the fragrant sprigs away in chest, drawer and closet, she prepares for herself a refreshing inspiration whenever she shall there after open these compartments. The perfume that will greet her will banish for the moment, at least, her cares, and she will go away refreshed by the wave of memory that carried her back to the idle days by the seashore, on the mountain side, or by the flowing river.

These leaves and grasses will not lose their virtue for years to come. Little by little the scent will grow fainter and more delicate, but it will still persist with its sweet suggestiveness.

Branches of birch, of balsam fir and of pine will give the house a spicy, aromatic flavor that is good for the health of mind and body. It brings home the best of the woods when one's circumstances prevent him from wandering into the forest. These delightfully fragrant bits of wood and field are at their best this month, and there is yet time to scent one's house with them. The sweet clover, which is not to be found in many spots, especially in New Jersey, is all sweet, stem, leaf and flower. Bags filled with it and hung among articles of clothing will give them a faint, wholesome odor that suggests freshness and cleanliness.

Now is the time, too, for gathering in one's garden herbs. Happily, in these days the old-fashioned garden has been revived. In it cabbage roses, clove pinks and all the old-time, heavy scented flowers and herbs as well have a conspicuous place. Various minty herbs should be gathered in this month and dried for winter use, also lemon verbena, sweet basil, lavender and rosemary. A little later there will be the pungent wild immortelles to be gathered and put away.

Perfumes a Safeguard Against Disease.

Flowers and certain prepared perfumes have an excellent medicinal and antiseptic quality. The seeds of the heliotrope are beginning to be used for medicinal purposes in this country, and are highly indorsed by French physicians. In places where orange blossoms and arbutus there is the soothing element of ether. Carnations have a stimulating property, so have the old-fashioned stocks. From lavender, most of which we get from Canada, we may get the breath of life-giving ozone.

The wild cherry is exceedingly aromatic and has excellent antiseptic qualities. It retains an odor after it is made up that gives it special value for chests and bureau drawers.

A year ago a French physician published the result of his observations during an epidemic. Those who used perfumes invariably escaped the disease, he asserted. He regarded delicate and lasting perfumes like lavender, violet and attar of roses as more efficacious than such strong essences as musk. As a result of his experiences he advised women to use good perfumes on their handkerchiefs and pure essences in their vinaigrettes and to sniff them freely in passing through crowded thoroughfares or when seated in crowded rooms.

Schoolteachers, settlement workers and all who are likely to be exposed to contagious diseases might act on this principle with advantage.

An Italian botanist recommended the planting of odoriferous trees along the city streets because of the ozone they would produce, thereby purifying the air. If lilacs and syringas, which are so vigorous, sturdy and enduring, were planted even in the small back yards of the cities it is claimed that they would do much to neutralize the disease-breeding odors that emanate from decaying things.

Jars of Sweet Scents.

Potpourri and rose jars have fallen somewhat into disfavor because they were so carelessly and cheaply made. That sort of thing should not be attempted at all unless one intends to make it as dainty, as sweet and as fine as human skill can compass it. Some of our roses are as delicate and as fragrant as the famed Damascus rose from which the attar is made.

For rose jars no other flower should be admitted. The petals of the cabbage rose are the most satisfactory as a basis for the rose attar, and the water from tea roses are redolent with lasting perfume. The petals should be gathered from freshly opened roses as soon as the dew is off in the morning. They may be picked any time during the day, however, provided they are free from rain or dampness of any sort. They then should be spread thinly over paper or a piece of thin cotton cloth and left to dry in the sun for from 20 to 40 minutes. After that they should be left in the shade for several hours, when thoroughly dry they can be put in a fruit jar or some other convenient receptacle. A little cotton should be placed under the cover to keep out moisture, and some person put in a little salt to preserve the leaves and to absorb any remaining moisture. If thoroughly dry, however, the salt will not be needed.

To make rose petals and other ingredients are added to the flower petals.

Crushed clove is the most effective sort of spice and to this should be added dried and pulverized orange and lemon peel and a little gum benzoin. This makes the foundation to which can be added dry lavender flowers, lemon verbena leaves, carnations, gilliflowers and pinks. All of these, or any other combination that fancy or circumstances may dictate, should be left in a closed jar for a week, then thorough ingredients are added to the flower petals.

Perfume That Clings.

The Queen of England's bath soaps and pills are perfumed by a method which almost any woman can copy. The drawers in which they are kept are lined with heavy, white paper strewn with freshly covered rose petals. On this is placed a layer of the soaps, so that, over a layer of rose leaves and so on in alternation until the drawer is filled. Over all a sheet of tissue paper is spread. At the end of 24 hours everything in the drawer will have a delicate perfume that will cling to it for a long time to come.

The Balm for Tips for Pillows are more satisfactory if they are gathered freshly every year, although they remain fragrant for a much longer period.

When engaged in outdoor exercise, as playing golf, bicycling or taking long tramps, some form of sugar or chocolate is a valuable nourishment.

The best food for a good complexion is that which is most easily digested and readily assimilated, for indigestions of lobster and wastes which are not promptly eliminated from the body are corrupting masses which create poisons and ultimate in some form of ugliness or disorder. And here is where the office of water comes in. It is the general carrier, conveying nutriment where it is needed. Therefore it is common sense which dictates that soup be the first course at dinner. It warms the stomach and gently stimulates it for the work to come, aiding in liquefying the nutriment. There is an enormous difference between giving the stomach this agreeable warming and drenching it with lead water.

The food water coagulates the lining membranes of the stomach, checking the circulation, and consequently the flow of gastric juice.

Many chronic cases of constipation are caused by lack of sufficient water to aid in moving the waste and worn out tissues, through flushing of the body daily. It is needed to assist and stimulate the internal organs to do their duty. Two quarts of liquid food, at least three pints of which should be water, are needed daily, in addition to that which is part of solid food, as in potatoes, which are 79 per cent water, or bread, which is over 30 per cent.

Fruits and Cereals.

The value of aperient fruits, apples, pears, oranges, shadocks, currants, peaches, cherries, figs, dates, prunes and berries, is that they stimulate the flow of intestinal fluids, and are, therefore, efficacious in overcoming this unhygienic condition, which is always a menace to a good complexion, and often rather than the originating cause of pimples.

Outmeal and other breakfast cereals frequently are sent to the table half cooked, in which state they are harmful, because they impose an enormous tax upon the digestive organs. They should be slumped by brain workers and all persons who lead sedentary lives. Outmeal is, moreover, too heating to be a general article of diet in hot weather.

All these breakfast cereals are more easily digested if a bit of crisp toast, a wafer or brown bread be eaten with them, for this accomplishes mastication, in which process these cereals mingle with the cereal, breaking up the repellent or attractive, according to woman's whim or self-control and the kind of thoughts she encourages most hospitably.

The controlling nerve fibers of the face are ever engaged in a struggle as to which shall dominate—those of the great sympathetic system, which register every physical sensation and supply nutrition to the skin, are fighting for supremacy with those higher servants, the messengers of the brain, that convey our thoughts. There is the closest possible association between the muscles of expression and the nerves of thought and feeling, and it is only by conscious effort,

It is the constant activity of all nerve influences, so evenly and so perfectly balanced, that we can present this photograph of youth at which actors and actresses alone have seemed privileged to drink, and which to the uninitiated has seemed so mysterious. Discipline and training impart to ordinary features a commanding dignity that attracts, and commands the attention of the world at the beginning of the career, develop a very high type of personal beauty.

Of the defacing tricks and grimaces by which headless women make lovely faces unattractive and plain ones repulsive, twisting the mouth and dropping it at the corners, with set jaws, are among the most common. Misanthropy and depression pull down the corners of the mouth as if weights were attached, and who shall say such emotions are not heavy? They are as bars of lead, and create many of the faces we ought not to make.

Recently I saw in a street-car an elderly woman, who was not uncomely when her face was in repose, set her jaws firmly, and conveyed the impression that she would drop the same purse the lips up in a curve under the nose, while by some magic she drew down the outer corners of her eyes. If you will imitate the expression—Laxative and laxative to herself with great determination—"Well, I shall do it anyway, and if you don't like it you can make the best of it."

She had evidently had a fierce conflict of words with someone; but she was taking her own way, and the change of scene diverted her so she would transiently forget her troubles and disclose her real countenance; but quickly she would revert to the bone of contention and "make another face," always the same, except to grow in intensity and fierceness as she dwelt upon details.

Duty Undisguised.

There was an "extra" out about the great fortune that a man had made that day in Wall street.

It was dusk that same evening when this man walked up his stoop. A woman in a gray cloak was standing there. She turned and looked at the man. "What do you want?" he asked her.

"I am duty," replied the woman; "the duty that comes to you with this new wealth. Am I welcome?"

"No, you are not welcome," said the man, and he passed on into the house. The woman walked in behind him.

"Welcome to my home," she said, "I must be with you constantly."

The rest of the man's life this figure wrapp'd in her gray cloak followed him.

It was the evening of his son's twenty-first birthday, and the young man was sitting in front of his dressing-room fire. Gradually he grew conscious of the somnolence that was in the room. He looked behind him and a woman in a gray cloak came toward him.

"Who are you?" he asked her.

"I am the great duty that comes to you with the wealth that you have just inherited. As long as that is yours I must be your constant companion."

"You are welcome," he answered her.

The woman smiled and slipped off her somber wrap.

Throughout the son's life he followed a shining figure that carried a gray cloak over one arm.

DRESS OF AUTUMN-WEIGHT VOILE IN THE NEW GRAYISH-RED SHADE.

Banished to the realms of the four domestic walls are the summer gowns which women have looked so ravishing for the last few months, and in their places on the street are seen trim tailor-made costumes.

Each season we await anxiously the coming of the first models, which are the embodiment of fashion's newest modes, and if there are no radical changes we are disappointed, so fond are we of variety. However, the season is still young and the lack of new lines may find a recompense in novelty and beauty of fabrics.

Plaited skirts are not yet to be abandoned, and we are to see many of the new walking costumes made with box or side plaits, falling from a deep hip yoke, with skirts just to escape the floor—again the question of skirt length is being agitated, and French modistes have declared in favor of the comfortable, sensible style.

It is still early, however, seriously to consider the trim walking dress, so we are offered a choice of more formal costumes.

For example, there is the charming design of Randritz, which expresses the coming of autumn in its rich tones of serpent green and blue, a combination that bids fair to be extremely popular.

The material is a satin-faced novelty cloth of medium weight, and shows a fine check scattered with polka dots in dark green, having a rim of blue. The skirt is fitted to the figure by means of tucks, run in clusters and converging toward the waist line, while at the knees there is a space of about five inches between the clusters. A shaped flounce set upon the upper section of the skirt displays more tucks, following out the perpendicular lines slightly marked in the fitted part.

Large four-petaled flowers of Cluny, in a conventional arrangement, are inserted at this point, and the effect of the lace insets is much enhanced by the delicate outlining in blue and black silks. In the center of each design is a disk worked in silk. The same ornamentation trims the bottom of the flounce, and the fabric is cut out underneath the Cluny so that one catches a glimpse of the blue and green novelty silk lining.

The corsage is solidly tucked and has the neck cut down to show a dainty yoke of white mousseline. A strip of black velvet outlines the neck, while narrow ribbons of the same fasten across the bust. From the shoulders to the wide centre of white silk elastic there extends, each side of the opening, a row of egg-shaped insets of Cluny, placed end to end.

Below the elbow the closely tucked sleeve is released, and the puff thus formed gathered into an odd cuff made of black velvet straps, ornamented with embroidery in green and blue silks.

The second model, from Denova, is of blue Sicilian, dotted with white.

This presents an attractive arrangement of plaits and gives a very pretty idea of how to secure a becoming flare to the skirt without having any extra thickness about the hips. In the first place, the skirt is cut in several zones, and these are set together at the seams by inserting three graduated box plaits. Strapped effects are very much in vogue, and in this gown the plaits are completed by two rows of pointed straps made of the Sicilian and outlined with fancy knots and stitches in blue, white and black embroidery silk. The two rows of straps follow an upward line as they reach toward the back, and this effect, combined with the long, straight front panel, counteracts the shortening tendency of the hip yoke and succeeds in imparting an appearance of height to the figure.

The corsage is a bolero, having a shoulder yoke of guipure, showing the pattern picked out with old rose and green embroideries. Three tubular plaits of the cloth alternate with strips of white silk to form the jacket, and there is a touch of embroidery to soften the contrast of the dark blue and white.

Red is going to be a popular color for the coming season, and certainly there is nothing more stunning than its rich tone. The new red, however, shows a grayish tinge on the surface of the fabric, which softens the most flaming tint. In a pliable material showing this new gray-coated red Armand presents an extremely simple, yet graceful, interpretation of the popular plaited skirt. The tiny box plaits are caught down almost to the knees, giving the effect of an exaggerated yoke.

Instead of embroidered knots or crosses, the old-fashioned arrowheads are used to fasten the plaits, and about the bottom of the skirt are three rows of silk and mohair braid in deep red.

The blouse is laid in tucks, cut out to display a gilet of silk, ornamented with a band of embroidered lace.

There is a deep collar of tucked peau de soie, shaped in a point each side of the bust. This is trimmed around with an applique of squares and circles made of braid and embroidery.

The sleeves show rather a curious arrangement, for instead of the upper part falling in a puff at the wrist this is cut off square across and finished with three rows of braid. From under this there falls a puff of peau de soie drawn into a wristband of guipure.

The hat is of dark blue-tulle and mohair braid, trimmed with clusters of autumn flowers.

Gowns of silk will be seen on certain occasions, and the plain black varieties showing originality of design are modish. It would be difficult to find one more unusual in arrangement and at the same time possessing a greater number of graceful curves than the Paula creation.

It seems to be a study of tucks, bands and puffs, set together to follow out circles, semicircles and arcs.

The full sweep of the trained skirt commends itself to the tall woman, and certainly no one who doesn't possess a slender figure would dream of attempting the short jacket effect, with its long tail-like basques.

A filmy white lace blouse contrasts prettily with the dark glossy hue of the jacket, and another touch of white appears in the frills of lace finishing the elbow sleeves.

The latter have proved so charming to the summer woman that she is loath to give them up.

FRENCH NOVELTY BLUE DOTTED WITH WHITE.

Suggestions For Novel Entertainments.

The successful hostess of today must provide for her guests something more than the conventional dinner, reception, luncheon, and party or dance of the days of our grandmothers.

It is the indoor functions which tax military ingenuity and originality; the summer frolics, consisting of garden fetes, laughing excursions, picnics and porch parties, are not difficult to arrange. Winter and autumn are the strenuous seasons for the ambitious hostess.

The cotillon, or old-fashioned german, is always a delightful form of entertaining a large number of people, and always may be made clever and original by the selection of favors. Each season and holiday brings its new figures for use in the cotillon. For a Christmas or Valentine's Day, Thanksgiving or Washington's Birthday celebration nothing is so appropriate or so easily arranged as a cotillon. This form of entertainment is more or less expensive, but it need not be elaborate to be successful, and often two or more people entertain together, sharing the expense.

An amusing evening may be spent at a gossip party. For this an even number of girls and men must be present, each receiving a card with a numbered list of subjects for conversation written upon it—a lively piece of social news of the day, the announcement of a certain engagement, a striking or conspicuous costume in which "Mrs. So and So" appeared recently or anything which might be discussed for a few minutes. There must be as many subjects as couples.

About the various rooms the hostess has arranged tete-a-tetes, each with a number above it. Each guest is asked to draw a number from a receptacle of some description, there being duplicates of each number for the man and one for the woman. These numbers are matched with those above the tete-a-tetes until each guest has a seat and a partner with whom to gossip. When everyone is seated the hostess taps a bell and announces the first topic on the card, and for five minutes that particular bit of news is discussed. Again the mistress of ceremonies rings her bell and reads the second subject aloud. Each man then says an remark to the girl with whom he has been talking and moves on to the next number to gossip about the second topic. This continues until the subjects are exhausted, and at the same time each man has talked with every girl in the party.

Pencils and slips of paper are distributed at the conclusion, and the girls write the names of the man who has gossiped with them most entertainingly. The men do likewise, and prizes are given to those voted most proficient in the art of gossiping.

This form of entertainment may be made pretty and picturesque by giving a garden or out-of-door effect to the rooms. Pains, flowers, hammocks, porches and other outside accessories scattered about over a green canvas floor covering or imitation grass rugs lend a pretty lawn party effect. In the center of the room a table may be laid, "A Garden Gossip Party," a more or less startling invitation in the midst of winter. Summer guests add to the winter effect of this sort of entertainment.

Proposal parties are new and clever when properly introduced. The hostess, when her guests have arrived, instructs the men that they must propose to every girl in the room within a stated period of time. She also tells them they must do it in proper style, and take her to one of the cozy or secluded nooks she has arranged about the rooms. She then takes her women guests aside and gives each of them half a dozen little red hearts of paper, flannel, silk, or any convenient material, as there are men in the party. She also gives each girl an equal number of tiny white mittens.

At the signal of the hostess every man selects a girl and asks her to marry him, pressing his suit until he is forced to leave her by the "blow" of the hostess' bell. He then proposes to another girl, and so on until he has laid his heart at the feet of everyone in the party. The girls distribute the hearts and mittens, a heart for a well-told confession of love, a mitten for the less impressive tale.

At the end of the stated hour the men's collections of hearts and mittens are counted and prizes are given them. The man with the largest pile of mittens is consoled with a pair of white woolen mittens.

The men fare best at a proposal party, as the prizes go to them.

For an afternoon entertainment a "Spinners at Home" is a good idea. Each guest arrives attired in the garments of her grandmother, and with an abundance of hair hanging about in corkscrew curls or equally ancient style. She may wear hoops and walk with the tiny, mincing steps, or she may have a powdered wig, patches and a much betterer and a bonnet, and in any case, she must represent the spinster of whom we read, and, if she likes, may bring with her a parrot or a cat.

After she has "put on" her bonnet, straightened out her flounces, and adjusted her spectacles, each guest gets out her "knitting" and over it each spinster must tell how it happened that she never married.

Afternoon tea and prizes for the best romance conclude an entertainment of this kind.

Young girls enjoy a "baby party," when they all appear in short frocks, carrying their dolls, and spend the afternoon talking over their multiple days.

If one must adhere strictly to the fixed rules of etiquette a girl's mother must announce her engagement, but often pretty little parties are given by the girls themselves to make their approaching marriage known. It is a trade unconventional to announce one's own engagement, and still more so to allow a girl friend to do so. However, this is an unconventional age.

An announcement luncheon may be carried out in the following manner: The table must be dressed in sentimental designs, such as hearts, Cupids and bows and arrows, and as a place card a little heart-shaped booklet is used. When the guests are seated each opens her tiny book, and the girl holding page No. 1 reads the first instalment of a little love story. This ends abruptly at the bottom of the page and is continued on page No. 2, held by another girl. The last instalment is the announcement of the engagement of the hostess, and may be read by herself or anyone to whom she desires to intrust the news.

CASINO GOWN DISPLAYING AN ELABORATE ARRANGEMENT OF TUCKS.

Dainty New Trifles.

Large purses and handbags are the order of the day. These small leather affairs which have been popular for more than a year are no longer considered the correct thing. To be thoroughly modish now you must carry a bag about 10 inches deep and 8 inches broad. This should be of soft English morocco, in black, green, dark red, tan or blue, and have elaborate mountings of Burnese gold, with a short chain of the same metal by which to carry it.

A handsome bag in this new shape had two golden lizards, one each side of the clasp, and set in the beautifully wrought bodies were pale amethysts. The bags are lined with moire to match the shade of the leather.

Cardcases, too, have increased in size, and the prettiest of those intended to be carried

This autumn are made of soft suede in pale gray, flaming red or golden brown. Sometimes there will be a border to the flap of reddish gold, highly polished, and again, say, on a pearly suede case, a mermaid design in gray dyes, the figure occupying one corner, while the tail and draperies swirl across to cover the other end.

A genuine novelty in the way of leather goods is shown in a portfolio or case to be used as a memorandum for telephone numbers. The case is shaped like a screen, having the outside covered with soft red, black or brown morocco, and the inside arranged so that between the narrow strips of leather there are bits of white Bristol board just the right size on which to jot down names and numbers of those you are apt to want oftenest on the telephone. The case holds slips enough for about 40 names.

Tortoise shell combs are going to be worn as much as ever this fall, and the usual set includes three or four, the extra one being a pompadour comb, which is placed in the hair entirely for service, as it does not show when the coiffure is completed.

The newest combs are certainly designed with some idea of comfort, for the rims are rounded down in the center to fit about the flat knot on the top of the head. Even the larger comb, intended to keep up stray "scolding locks," is curved after the same fashion.

This, by the way, is narrower than formerly, and does not give the head so broad a look as the heavily rimmed ones that have been the correct thing.

For evening wear there are jeweled tortoise shell combs, in sets of three and four, but for the street nothing is quite so pretty as rich ruby shell, plain and polished until it glows.

The most sensitive part of the human body is the tip of the tongue. Next come the lips and then the tips of the fingers.

SATIN-FACED NOVELTY CLOTH SHOWING CHECKS AND ROTS.

The Autumn Girl.

You may sing of your summer girl
And her conquests by the score;
You may sing of her winsome wiles
At the mountains and the shore;
You may praise all her wondrous ways,
'Till no more you can recall—
Here's a song to the autumn girl,
For she is the best of all.

She can golf on the hills for hours
And win every hole you play;
She can two-step and waltz till dawn,
Yet be fresh as a morn' in May.
She may ride to the hounds at morn,
But at eve she'll cling to your arm;
So here's health to the autumn girl,
With her wealth of youthful charm.

The Mislaid Prophecy: An Old Time Tale.

CHAPTER IV. The Princess Journey to Pearbution and Meet Strange Folk.

The Princess and Studmunch, with Ajax following at their heels and bearing at the top of his burden of treasure and baggage the great raven, marched steadily onward through the forest, greatly accablant as they went along the woodland beauties of which they had so often dreamed until they came to another open plain and gained the road which led to the town of Pearbution. Here, beneath the pleasant shade of a tall tree, they sat down to rest, and, being tired to much walking, they were quite dazed. Before leaping from the tower the schoolmaster had thoughtfully filled his pockets with good things to eat, and thus they were supplied with a plentiful luncheon, to which, with hunger as a sauce, all did justice. A bubbling spring nearby afforded them drinks of cool water. Much refreshed, they again marched away, walking slowly that their strength might not be wasted. The afternoon sun shone the Countess, and can direct you to her house." "That will be very kind, indeed," said Prince Fitzwick. "Tell us, are her daughters beautiful?" "To be sure they are!" returned the old woman; "you will never behold more beautiful maidens." "We wish very much to see them," said Prince Saladee, "as we have never seen a maiden since we were babies." "Very well, then," said she, "when you come to the east gate of Pearbution, which you must be sure to reach before five o'clock this evening, you will find standing there a tall, lean man with yellow hair. This man is a servant to the Countess and her daughters, and he is placed at the gate to question all strangers who enter the town. If they have any business with his mistress they are taken at once to her palace. Tell him who you are, and it will not be long before you see the Countess and her beautiful daughters. Good-by, and a pleasant journey." The Princess thanked the old woman, and her daughters, and so gave them orders to put on their finest dresses and jewels, while she sent for her Chief Evidore, a tall man with yellow hair, such as she had described to the Princess. When he came she told him to go to the east gate of the town and await the coming of the Princess and Studmunch, whom he was to bring at once to her castle. The Chief Evidore went away to do as he was bid; but he had to wait at the gate before the expected travelers arrived. They, of course, thought him the servant of the Countess of Mulready and her daughters, and after telling him who they were and asking to be taken to the Countess's palace, they surrendered themselves to his care. As they passed through the streets of Pearbution they found much to interest them, town sights being so new and strange. "Is that fine building where the Countess and her beautiful daughters live?" asked Fitzwick, pointing to a stately palace. "Oh, no," returned the Chief Evidore, pleasantly; "she lives in a much finer one than that—a castle, in fact, which we shall soon reach." And he led them forthwith to the castle of the Witch Eglythorne, who was making ready to pretend she was the Countess, while her daughters pretended they were the Countess's three beautiful time, and as they were being shown to the chambers in which they were to sleep—"how strange it is that I should have thought such a lovely place as this so gloomy at first." "Yes," answered the old Witch, chuckling to herself; "but, then, you know, that which is beautiful does not always seem so at first sight." "I think that is quite right," said Saladee. "Tomorrow," continued the Witch, "I suppose you would like to marry my beautiful daughters?" "Yes, if you please!" exclaimed all three of the Princesses, eagerly. "By the way, madam," put in Studmunch, who had been as much pleased with Eglythorne as the Princess with her daughters, "I quite forgot the real purpose of our visit—the direction to the City of Cordelette." "Oh," said the Witch, "tomorrow will be time enough to talk of that." She next bade them all "good night" and returned to her daughters, who wickedly rejoiced in their unexpected good fortune. Even the evil servants of the Witch were rejoiced, and with her permission spent the night in feasting and drinking. In fact, everybody in the castle, the good and pure as well as the bad and vicious, was happy that night, everybody but the black raven, Atramentale, who did not like the looks of things, and who set himself to watch and to keep his friends from falling into evil. He had become very fond of the three Princesses and rightly imagined that the ugly people surrounding them would not hesitate to do them wrong. So instead of going to sleep with the Princess and Studmunch he took it into his head to peep about and listen to the Witch's folk and learn all he could of their plans. In another gloomy room Atramentale found the arrangements for the wedding, which in their high spirits they assured themselves would take place on the morrow. Creeping into a dark corner, where no one noticed him, he looked his head, as usual, to one side and strained his ears to catch the words of their saying. "Just think!" the ugly Blackbad said, clapping her huge, coarse hands in delight. "In a evening we three will be Princesses, and it will be fine!" "Ah," replied the Witch, her eyes gleaming like flames in a coal grate; "and you have me to thank for it all, for had I not commanded the Second Assistant Evidore to cast that wonderful powder of mine into their eyes the Princess and Schoolmaster would never have thought us so beautiful and pleasant as they do." "Perhaps," said Vilosort, anxiously, "perhaps they may succeed in getting the powder out of their eyes." "Never fear, my dear daughter," replied Eglythorne; "there is only one thing that can melt it, and that is the palm oil, which you may be certain, is carefully stored away in the dark cellar and sealed in its cask. There is no chance of their getting it."

heerly down, but they sought refuge from his hot rays beneath the open parasols. Shortly after they had left their resting place an old woman was sitting under the hedge. She was a very strange looking old woman, with eyes that glared like balls of red-hot iron in the blacksmith's forge, and her chin and nose nearly met, after the fashion of a pair of nutcrackers. She was dressed all in rags, and leaned on a stout osken staff. The schoolmaster told the Princess she was a beggar, such as they read of in their storybooks. "Good afternoon, gentlemen," said the old woman, after she had looked at them steadily for a few moments. "Good afternoon," the Princess politely replied. "Good afternoon," and removed their caps. "Are you going far?" asked she, lifting her staff and pointing toward the donkey. "I see you have plenty of luggage." "No," answered Prince Pantico, "we are only going to the town of Pearbution." "And who will you see there?" the old woman asked again. She seemed to the Princess a very inquisitive person, indeed. "We will see the Countess of Mulready and her three daughters, whom we expect to direct us to the city of Cordelette, in the Kingdom of Nulready," said Prince Fitzwick. "You appear to be such pleasant folk," the old woman continued, "that I should like to know who you are and all about you." Pantico thereupon told her the story of the tower, and how they had lived there for years. When she learned that they were three royal Princesses and that Ajax carried a great deal of treasure, her eyes glowed brighter than ever. "How fortunate it is that you have met me," she cried. "I am well acquainted with bidding her farewell, resumed their march toward Pearbution, anxious to reach the east gate in time to find the tall lean man with the yellow hair. As soon as the party was out of sight the old woman, who was really a Witch named Eglythorne, laughed long and loud. "Ha! ha! my Princesses!" she screamed in her glee. "I shall have you all in my strong castle before night hides the world in darkness! Ha! ha! you shall wed my daughters and make them princesses!" With this she flung her long gray hair to the wind and scented herself on her osken staff. She muttered some odd words, whereupon the staff mounted into the air with her and flew quickly to Pearbution. Here the old Witch alighted on the roof of a gloomy castle, which was her home, and jumped through the open skylight. She ran at once to a room in which her three daughters sat and commanded them to pay strict heed to her words, for she had at last, so she said, found husbands for them all, and they were to be princesses. This news greatly delighted the daughters, as they were so very ugly and ill-natured that no one ever thought of marrying them. As for princess, poof! they would not even give them a second glance. One was very tall and had a hideous hump on her back, and her great yellow teeth hung from her mouth like a shark's. Another was very short, her arms and neck were crooked and her face was covered with jet black spots. The third had huge splay feet, which were so large she could not walk; as for her nose, it was stuck squarely between her two sea-green eyes. Besides, the three were so ugly tempered and quarrelsome that only witches could live with them. However ugly and vicious they were, the Witch Eglythorne thought by her skill and magic to make the Princess fall in love with girls. "Why, what a dark and gloomy place the Countess lives in!" exclaimed Saladee, as they passed through the portals of the castle, but the Schoolmaster told him to be silent, as it might be thought rude, said he, to talk about such things. Now, as soon as the Princess and Studmunch stepped into the long, dim hall of the castle another Evidore, whom they could not see, threw a handful of powder into their eyes. This powder was so fine and soft that they did not feel it, yet such was its strange power that no sooner had it settled into their eyes than they imagined everything horrid or ugly they looked upon to be lovely, while that which was really good and beautiful appeared mean and misshapen. Nor would the sad effect of the powder pass away unless the eyes were rubbed with palm oil. Therefore, when a few minutes later the Princess and the Schoolmaster were shown into a cold, damp room—which dimmed and forlorn place was the Witch's parlor—and were presented to Eglythorne and her hideous daughters, Crumpleback, Vilosort and Blackbad, they thought a more brilliant place had never been seen, nor four more beautiful and entertaining persons ever known than the Witch and her family, whom, of course, they supposed to be the Countess of Mulready and her daughters. "How strange it is," said Saladee, after they had spent the evening in thinking themselves to be enjoying a very pleasant

Silly Sally's Cake.

Silly Sally made a cake
And put some raisins in it;
She placed it in the oven hot,
And left it there a minute.
Then she took it out again
To see if it was done,
But no, of course, it was not baked—
It only had begun.
So then she put it back again,
And left it there a day,
But when she went to take it out
The cake had burned away.

The Bottom Of The Sea.

BY W. S. WALLACE.

When you are playing on the seashore and pick up the empty shells, the little dried crab skeleton or those curious "sea purses," which look like tiny brown pillows tied at the corners, do you ever think of what they are, why they are always dead and where they came from? "The bottom of the sea begins at the beach, really, and is at first quite shallow, sloping downward under those roaring breakers that roll into shore. But this is not the sea floor, nor is it half as beautiful or interesting, even though there is the yellow sand to lend a charm entirely absent from the true bottom. Some of us pretend to take a walk under the sea. Divers are the only men who have really visited the sea floor, and they cannot go very far down. These men have described the wonders beneath the blue sea waves, the brilliant colors, strange forms and curious lights and shadows to be seen down there. "Even if they were to find it," remarked Crumpleback, "they would not know what to do with it, for they do not know the powder is in their eyes." "Never fear, my dear daughter," replied Eglythorne; "there is only one thing that can melt it, and that is the palm oil, which you may be certain, is carefully stored away in the dark cellar and sealed in its cask. There is no chance of their getting it."

salt water and the plain sand at our feet. But now we are entering a region of shadows. There is less sunlight. The objects become misty and vague; the colors grow dim and less vivid. For even the clearest water becomes thick and filled by floating particles when there is a mile of water up overhead. But there is light, after all, not from the sun, but from yonder fish. A large sunfish, as big as a horse, comes swiftly toward us. His whole body shines like a match rubbed gently in the dark. Did you ever rub your hands with matches and then go in a dark closet to see them shine? This strange fish shines exactly as your hands do, giving off clouds of bluish, smoky light. And behind him comes a wonderful procession of living lights. Some day we will describe these lights of the sea. They are all alive, all swimming about in the dark sea. Fishes and creatures not fish-like, but of all shapes, some like floating vases, others like chains of pearls; others still who look like real fireflies with wings—hundreds of different kinds. The whole sea now glows with yellow and green lights. Even the bottom, level as the floor of a room, flashes fire as we walk, and in our path huge crabs, five feet across, scuttle away, their backs glowing like live coals. We go on our way, deeper and deeper. Now the lights become less numerous, and we come suddenly to a great cliff in the sea, a precipice whose bottom we cannot discover. A vast hole in the sea floor yawns before us, and in this waste of water thousands of great fishes whirl in circles, playing with each other's tails, or darting, intent on a good meal, after their smaller relations. We do not dare to explore that great and mysterious cavern; but while we wait a large shark whisks over the edge and dives down into the darkness. He is fully 25 feet long, and the smaller fish scatter before him. He is gone! We return toward the shallow water and come out on the beach, having discovered in our make-believe walk where the empty shells, the little fragments of seaweed and the bones of fishes that strew the sea beach really come from. Could we only stop breathing for a single day, what a wonderful world of curious, odd and beautiful creatures we would be able to describe to our friends after our return! On other Sundays we will describe some of the animals and plants which live beneath the sea, beginning near the shore and going down to places so far below the waves that it would take over an hour for a penny, dropped from the surface to reach the bottom.

The Color Ghosts.

BY CHARLES BARNARD.

In India there are men who say they can see things no one else ever saw or can see. These men sit in the full sunshine in a street where all the houses are white, and they tell anyone who is foolish enough to pay them for the information that they can see a man's astral body. Of course, it is very startling to have a solemn old man tell you that you have two bodies. One is your real body, that everyone can see, and the other is your star body or astral body that he says he can see. He says he sees your astral body standing beside you or floating in the air near you, and that it exactly resembles your real body, except that the ghost wears clothes of a different color. There is, in fact, no ghost body, and these men do not see it. They do see something, but they do not know what it is. Now, what do these men see or think they see, and can anybody see it? Make silhouette figures of men each one and one-half inches wide and two inches high placed in a row with a half-inch space between them. One to be printed in bright red ink, one in bright blue ink and one in bright green ink. Each figure should be printed on black or have a black border. Take this paper to a room where there is a brightly lighted window, if sunny so much the better. Fold the paper so that three persons of color can rest with their heads close to the window. Cover the red and the green man with black paper or cellophane leaving the blue figure exposed to the light. Draw the shade down till it cuts off all the light except on the paper, and draw down all the other shades to make the room dark. Place a table near the window and lay upon it a large sheet of white or pale gray paper. Then sit at the table where the colored figure and the blank paper can be seen without moving from the seat. Then look steadily (without glasses) at the blue figure for 30 seconds. Then look steadily at the blank paper for another minute. The effect is surprising, for floating about on the paper will be the ghost of a little pale yellow figure resembling the blue figure. You may also notice that, even while looking at the blue figure, flashes of pale yellow light seem to dance all about in the air. Next rest the eyes for a minute or two in the darkened room and then cover the blue figure with the black cloth and uncover the red figure. Repeat the experiment and you will see a pale green ghost on the blank paper. Rest again and try the green figure, and you will see a pink ghost.
