It is a well known fact that a great many of the so-called magazines issued once a month are nothing more than advertising sheets. They have enormous circulations built upon a free basis. They exist for no other reason in the world than to be a graft on the mail order houses and general advertisers. It is this class of publication that burdens the governmental mails and makes an expense that is out of proportion with the receipts. A large number of publishing houses make a practice of issuing novels of no particular merit and have, through in which general religious interests the interpretation of the present laws governing second class mail, secured second class rates for their books. This is an imposition on the govern- located and it is expected to bring to ment and upon legitimate publications gether from one to three thousand peo for whom this second class privilege

CHAPTER XXII. Another week, and all Wyoming was awake and thrilling. There had been dreadful doings on the Big Horn, and John Folsom's prophecy had come true. Enticing one detachment after another from the stockade at Warrior Gap by show of scattered bands of braves, that head devil of the Ogallalas, Red Cloud, had gradually surrounded three companies with ten times their force of fighting men and slaughtered every soldier of the lot. There had been excitement at Gate City during a brief visit of the general and his aid inspecting the affairs of Major Burleigh, who, confined to his bed by nervous prostration and forbidden by the doctor to see anybody, had nevertheless sent his keys and books and bank account, and, to the mystification of the chief, more money was found in the big office safe at the depot quartermaster's than was necessary to cover his accountability.

The general and his inspector were fairly puzzled. They personally ques-The building now occupied by the dry tioned the bank cashier and the quartergoods store will be converted into an master's clerks. Then came still another excitement at Gate City. Major Burleigh had suddenly become endowed with new youth and energy. He who was declared by his physicians to be in a critical condition, one demanding the utmost quiet, he who could not even see the department commander and of whom the doctor had said it might be weeks before he was again fit for duty, had sprung big and sorely needed loan to prefer no charges against the boy. It was Burleigh who almost immediately after this tremendous episode had secured the sending of Lieutenant Dean on a mission so fraught with peril that the chances were ten to one against his ever getting through alive.

Who could have "posted" Birdsall but Burleigh? Who could say what the amount of his shortage really was? The key of the big safe was gone with him, and in that safe at the time of the general's visit was at least $15,-000. Old Pecksniff, commanding officer at Fort Emory, had wired to department beadquarters.

An expert safe opener was ordered out from Obicago, and right in the midst of all the turmoil there suddenly appeared upon the scene a blue eyed young man, with pale features, clear out and strong, a light brown mustache that shaded his mouth, and, though he wore no uniform, the rumor went round that this was Lightenant Loring of the engineers. Istantry and cavalry, commissaries and quertermasters, doctors and sutlers, the denizens of Gate City well know as attachments of the army. But what the mischief was an engineer? Loring put up at Gate City's new hotel, simply registering as from Omaha, but that he bore credentials and was a man of mark Gate City learned from the fact that Colonel Stevens himself had met him on arrival and wished to take him out to the fort, and was ill pleased when Mr. Loring explained that his business would be best performed in town. Gate City followed the young man with eager eyes, confident that engineer must be the army name for deteotive. He studied the hotel register. He curiously examined all relice of the late lamented Newball, who disappeared before Burleigh. He questioned the olerks at the corral, reconnaitered the neighborhood, asked what were their means of defense, turned inside out a worn yet shapely boot that had been the captain's, bade man after man to desoribe that worthy and finally walked away from the depot, having picked up lots of information and imparted none. He spent some time at Folsom's that evening. He drove out to the fort in the afternoon, "and what do you think he wanted?" said old Pecksniff, whose command had been out down to one company and the band. "Wanted me to post a strong guard over the quartermaster's depot lest that dashed marauding gang of Birdsall's should gallop in some night with Earleigh's safe key and get away with the funds. I asked him if those were the general's orders. and he said no. I asked him if they were anybody's orders, and he said no. I asked him if it was anybody's idea but his own, and he said no, and then I told him, by gad, I hadn't men enough to guard the public property here at the post. The quartermaster's depot was responsible for most of them being away. Let them take care of their own. Gate City hotel was alive with loungers that night, waiting for the engineer.
