Both the West and Clear Forks Bank Full, Dams Full and Swift Current From Saturday Night's Fall

An immense amount of water fell Saturday and Saturday night. The rain gauges at the government bureau and at the water works report 3.25 and 3.35 inches, respectively.

As an evidence that the fall was general, both streams filled up rapidly, and the banks were reported twothirds full before the downpour ceased. This is unusual, the streams usually not indicating a rise so soon.

"Man cannot do as he pleases in this or any other country for God is a king and we must do what He pleases and what pleases him.", Speaking of congenial work in the church, the bishop said: "I hardly know a more hateful word on the lips of a Christian worker than this word 'congenial.' Was it congenial for the Son of God to leave the companionship of God and angels, to seek the society of men, the best of whom were so vile when compared with His standards?"

Personal Responsibility "Lord what wilt thou have 'me.' Another fundamental principle of Christianity which Paul recognized was 'personal responsibility.' Some one once asked Daniel Webster at a social gathering what was the greatest thought he had ever entertained. Studying for a minute, he replied slowly and impressively. 'A sense of my personal responsibility."

An individual, not a collective relig ion, was the bishop's argument and a sense of duty for each one, rather than for a body or for the church as a whole, is what is needed he said. Religion of Deeds

An Exhibition Given Saturday Morning at Central Station

A test of a new fire hose nozzle was made at Central fire station Saturday morning, which attracted a large crowd and created much real interest. James J. Ricketts, representing the Anderson nozzle makers, Kansas tached to a section of hose connected with the big engine. A stream was forced high over the Central station tower, and at the nozzle a spray was operated entirely protecting the manipulator of the nozzle from the fire, heat and smoke. Another admirable feature of this new nozzle is that one man can operate it, whereas with

His warm but simple home he enjoys With her who shares his pleasures and his heart. 'Tis sweet to know there is an eye will mark

It is the healthy wife who is cheerful, comtented, hopeful, smiling and happy. She it is who can make home the dearest spot on earth, the rallying place of the affections, the sphere of harmony and peace, the sacred refuge of life. The woman who is harrassed, worn and wearied with the irritations and miseries of female ailments, being herself distressed and unhappy, is apt to lose her ability to make home what it should be for those she loves. Women who are blessed with perfect health are a constant source of joy to themselves and others.
To secure womanly health there is no measure equal to the judicious use of G. F. P.—Gerstle's Female Panacca.

"I had suffered for a year and three bottles has restored my health entirely. Physicians and the many female remedies used had no effect on me whatever, but to G. F. P. I owe my life. You have my permission to publish this letter that other suffering women may knew of this wonderful remedy and be cured."—Mrs. Carrie Richardson, Grace, Miss. G. F. P.—Gerstle's Female Panacea cures

"Look after the prisoners, corporal. Sergeant Carey, you and the first six come with me!" cried Loring. A gallop of less than a minute brought them almost abreast of the ridge. Black and billowing a cloud of smoke was rising, lashed from beneath by angry tongues of red flame. "It isn't the house, thank God!" cried the sergeant. "It's the haystacks. But look at the Indians!" Look! Well they might! All about the corrals they were darting. All on a sudden there blazed from the ridge line across the stream the fire of a dozen rifles. All around them the spiteful bullets bit the turf. One horse madly rear ed and plunged, his rider cursing heartily. Wildly the more excitable troopers returned an aimless shot from saddle, while others gazed eagerly to the officer for orders. It was his first meeting with the Sioux. It had been his hope to gain that threatened ranch by dawn and join its garrison, but where was that hope now?

Down along the banks of the Laramie, lashing their bounding ponies, brandishing their weapons and yelling like mad, a band of Sionx, full 40 strong, came charging at them, splashing through the shallows and scattering out across their front in the well known battle tactics. Not an instant was there to be lost!

"Jump for those rocks, men!" rang Loring's order. "Cut loose your prisoners, corporal! They must fight for their lives!"

But, oh, what chance had so few against so many? Springing from saddle, turning loose their startled, snorting horses that go tearing away down the valley, the old bands have jumped for the rocks and, kneeling and taking deliberate aim, open fire on the foremost of the fee. A gaudy warrior goes down in the flood, and a yell goes up to heavsad story, neither the beginning nor en. Another good shot slays a feather he end is told, but there is enough to decked pony and sends his rider sprawling, and wisely the others veer away to right and left and scurry to more distant range, but up the slopes to the

From three sides now the Indian bulactually take place, but it is enough lets are hissing in. In less than four that of a regiment, to the head of which to comment on the mistake of moth minutes of sharp, stinging fight gallant he had risen by reason of long years of Sergeant Carey is stretched on the turf unimpaired bodily health and skillful freedom. No doubt the mother of with a shattered elbow, Corporal Burke aveidance of all danger, the old colonel this girl thinks that her daughter is and two troopers are shot dead, and had lost no time in moving, bag and too pure, too good, too honorable, too Loring, with white, set face and a baggage, to Omaha, in having Nevins scorching seam along the left cheek, seizes a dropped carbine and thrusts it "Up with you, man!" he cries. "It's and of the world, she had fallen into your scalp you're fighting for. Here, take a drink of this." And his filled canteen is glued to Burleigh's ashen

> A long pull, a gasp, and hardly knowing what he does the recreant officer kneels at the nearmost rock, aims at a painted savage leaping to the aid of a fire on the foremost foe. fallen brother, and the chance shot, for a marvel, finds its mark, and with a howl the warrior drops upon the bank. "Well done, Burleigh!" shouts Loring. "Fire again!" Hope or whisky or lingering spark of manhood has fired the major's eye and nerved his hand. With something like a sob one of Birdsall's captured crew rolls over to where the young commander is coolly loading and firing, and, despite their heavy loss, the stout defense has had its effect and the yelling braves are keeping at wider range.

"I'm done for, lientenant," be moans. "For God's sake lie flat behind me!" And he feebly points to the slope behind their left rear, where half a dozen Sioux, dismounted, are skipping to the shelter of the rocks.

Another minute and their bullets are hissing at the backs of the besieged. Another minute and Burleigh topples over on the sward, the lifeblood pouring from his side, and Loring sees that half his fighting force is gone, even as everything begins to swim before his eyes, and the hand that strives to sweep away the blur before his sight leaves his pallid face smeared with blood.

There is a sound of coming thunder in-his ears, the blare of distant trumpet, the warning yell of wary Indians, the rousing cheer of charging horses, and the earth seems turning round and rolling up to meet him as he droops, fainting at his post, the battle won.

Well and gallantly done, was the universal verdict of the contier on Walter Loring's maiden fight. Brave, cool and resolute in face of desperate peril he had proved, and many a sympathizing soldier hovered about the hospital tent where day after day he lay in the delirium of fever that followed his wounds. Yet will it be believed that when at last convalescence came and the doctors were compelled to raise the blockade, the news was broken to him that so soon as he should be declared strong enough there was still another ordeal ahead. The gallant general he had served so well had indeed been ordered elsewhere, as was prophesied at Omaha. "A new king came who knew not Joseph." The senior colonel was assigned to temporary command of the department, and he (old Pecksniff) listened to the tales of Nevins and of that new arrival from California, Petty, re-enforced by heaven alone knows what allegations from the lambs of Lambert's

"They found some dashed trumpery jewelry in a tin case in a trunk you left with your traps at Omaha," was the indignant outburst of Lientenant Dean, who had led the rush of the cavalry to the rescue of Folsom's ranch and Loring's exhausted party, "and some idiot has preferred charges on the strength of them!"

CHAPTER XXIV.

That Loring court was the talk of the west for many a month. Long before its meeting the wrathful division commander had sent Colonel Stevens back to the obscurity of Fort Emory, welcomed the new brigadier and bade him, if a possible thing, to quash the proceedings, but now it was Loring who was obdurate

"This matter has been a scandal for months," said he. "It must be settled now, once and for all."

But, oh, what complications had not been brought about by Pecksniff's spell of brief authority! Never before intrusted with a higher command than transported thither, in opening wide his ears to his story of the heinous wrongs inflicted on him by that Arizona court through the malignity of its judge advocate, of that judge advocate's heartless treachery to two helpless women, one of whom was Nevins' wife, the other the officer's own deserted and broken hearted betrothed. Then came Petty, ordered to join his company in the field and eager as ever to seek some loophole of escape. Reporting to pay his homage to the temporary commander at headquarters, he soon got an inkling of what was going on, and all at once there flashed upon him the magnificence of his opportunity. Here he could at one and the same time feed fat his ancient grudge against Loring and make himself indispensable to the aging commander of the department, perhaps even secure another staff billet, certainly at least succeed in being kept there on duty and away from the perils of the field until after the court. and meantime what would friends be worth if they could not move the powers at Washington? Day after day he was closeted with old Stevens, adding fuel to the flame of that ingenious veteran's suspicions. But it is doubtful if even Petty dreamed of the depth of Nevins' sooundrelism. Burleigh, whem the ex-captain had "bled" and blackmatted, had passed beyond the bar of buman arraignment, "dying like a gentleman" even while captive in the bands of the authorities. and so did Nevins impress his uncontradicted tale of loyal service to the state on the old weakling in command that Stevens had declared that there was no evidence on which to hold him. had ordered his release from custody on parole, unless the civil authorities desired to prosecute him for "personating an officer," and had written to the division commander, praising Nevins' conduct and urging that the sentence of imprisonment be set aside.
