PINEAPPLES GROW HERE

Victor Machet Gives Two Bushes to the World's Fair Collecting Bureau
The collecting bureau for the world's fair, at 1820 Jones street, has received from Victor Machet, a lad 14 years old, living at 408 East Sixth street, two vigorous pineapple plants, each already in fruit. Young Machet obtained the cuttings from Mexico last May and has had the entire care of the growing plants. He is naturally proud of his success. He wants to show the world what the soil and climate of the Panhandle city will produce. It is this loyalty that has prompted him to add his pineapple bushes, now about two feet high, to the exhibit for St. Louis next year. The fruit is promising and will mature in October.

Clear, fine weather continues in Texas, the middle west and thence eastward, including the Ohio valley section. TURKEY GRANTS ALL DEMANDS

PARIS, August 21.—Official advices say the Russian squadron is off Inada, and will likely leave Turkish waters within the next few days, as the Turkish government has given adequate assurance that it will meet all Russia's demands. The withdrawal of the warships will be due chiefly to Turkish assurance, but also Russia's desire to avoid a step which might appear to Bulgaria as antagonistic.

TWO ARRESTS ARE MADE

Charges That Age of Consent Law Has Been Violated
CLEBURNE, Tex., August 21.—Two men engaged in construction for the Trinity and Brazos Valley railroad, have been arrested on a charge of criminal assault. The alleged victim is a girl said to be 14 years of age, daughter of a woman named Smith, who, with her husband, was in charge of the boarding department of the construction crew. One was arrested here by Sheriff Satterfield of Hill county, where the offense is claimed to have been committed, assisted by local officers. The other was arrested at Ocala. It is said there was no charge of force against either, only the age of consent law being violated.

The county commissioners are redistricting Johnson county according to the new law. A result of this will be the reduction of the number of election precincts from about 28 to 22 or 23. It is a complicated undertaking, as the four commissioner districts, the eight justice precincts and the 28 election precincts must be outlined so none can conflict.

W. F. Ramsey, Judge William Polndexter and Senator D. W. Odell have gone to Hillsboro to attend the banquet and farewell party given in honor of George I. Jordan of that place by the local bar. Judge Jordan will go to Wynnewood, I. T., and the Cleburne gentlemen are specially invited guests. Judge Polndexter will preside as toastmaster and the others will make speeches.

The last game between the Walters, O. T. team resulted in a score of 19 to 9 in favor of Cleburne. Time, 51 minutes. In the last inning a sensational triple play was made, three men being rapidly put out. The Oklahomans went to Alvarado for their next game.

J. A. Lindgren, who went from this place to Greenville some years ago, has moved his family back to Cleburne and changed from photography to the life insurance business. "Grandma" Swartwood, 67 years of age, died here August 18. She was the wife of Rev. Swartwood, pastor of the Methodist Protestant church.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., August 21.—The Tennessee Fire Insurance Agents' Association began its fifth annual convention today at Lookout Inn and will continue in session through tomorrow. Some of the topics scheduled for special consideration at the meeting are as follows: "Superfluous Agencies," "Legislation," "The Duty of the Local Agent in Peace and War," "The Best System of Office Work and Soliciting," "The Country Agency," and "The Best System for Secretary and Agent in Regard to Rates."

North Fort Worth, Texas, August 21, 1903.

TO OUR CUSTOMERS AND FRIENDS:
Receipts of cattle this week have been much heavier, but not enough of the good kinds coming, and the packers say they are not getting more than half of what they want to kill. Prices have remained about steady with the exception of calves and feeder steers, which have declined considerably, the former about 50c to 75c, and the latter about 25c. Goods cows are selling well at steady prices; the same may be said of good steers, either grass or fed. The Northern markets have experienced very heavy runs this week, and they have declined in price until they are within a few cents of this market. We advise all shippers to bill with Fort Worth privilege. Hogs are very scarce, and are advancing in price. Tops today was $5.90. Supply of sheep limited, and demand good at fair prices. We quote the following prices for today:
Choice fed steers $3.75 to $4.15
Medium fed steers $3.25 to $3.65

Medium grass steers $2.25 to $2.75
Common grass steers $1.75 to $2.25
Choice cows $2.00 to $2.35
Medium cows $1.85 to $2.00
We can offer no advice about when to ship, but will give all shipments our very best efforts when you do ship. Yours very truly,

NEW TRAIN WILL HELP SHIPPERS

Stockmen in Panhandle Will Be Benefited by Denver Accommodation Freight

NORTH FORT WORTH, Texas, Aug. 21.—The new accommodation stock train about to be put in service by the Fort Worth and Denver City between Amarillo and Fort Worth will be not only a benefit to panhandle shippers, but will be a big help to the Fort Worth market in offering additional inducements to shippers coming this way.

E. D. Farmer of Aledo, Texas, had his first shipment of steers this season on the Fort Worth market yesterday. Two loads arrived yesterday afternoon and were bought soon after their arrival.

F. G. McPEAK & CO., Managers for Hayward, Vick & Co. Bankers and Brokers.

C. T. VIVION, Commission Broker. Cotton, Stocks, Grain and Provisions.

this season Mr. Farmer has been shipping steadily the Chicago market. Yesterday's sale was considered very satisfactory by all who saw the shipment.

There are Texas cattlemen who believe it pays to pass the Fort Worth market when they have good steers or cows ready for shipment, and then send the culls and poorer stuff here, expecting to get a high price. Occasionally such a shipper, after sending in a bunch of poor stuff and getting every cent it is worth is heard making a wall to the effect that "the Fort Worth market is lower than any other."

The packers are still paying top prices for hogs, and by top prices are meant figures that would look ridiculously high on any other market. Tops today in Chicago brought $5, while tops in Fort Worth were $5.95. The $5.95 hogs here were by no means an ideal bunch, though they were better than any which have been here this week, and they probably would have sold for 30 cents less than that price elsewhere.

Receipts of cattle from points west of Fort Worth today were the heaviest yet this month, save on the days when stuff was received. One hundred and ten cattle and 85 calves were received from Sweetwater, 75 from Colorado and 138 cattle from Cisco. Points southwest of Fort Worth were represented as follows: Clifton, 85; Brady, 27 cattle, 30 calves; Dublin, 55; cattle; Cresson, 37 cattle.

The Fort Worth and Denver City Railroad Company announced today the inauguration of two new fast stock trains to Fort Worth, which, if properly appreciated by shipper and packer, will be made a permanent feature of the transportation department of the Denver.

The principal object of the Denver in instituting this service is to concentrate the stock shipments in special stock trains. The consignments will then be brought through quickly without the delay which might be occasioned if it were shipped on a mixed train.

Upon arrival in Fort Worth, if the local markets are not satisfactory, the shippers will be enabled to then take his stock to the northern markets, the cattle having been but a short time on the road in reaching Fort Worth.

More or Less Unfamiliar Toasts.

By E. M. HOFFMAN.

To the confirmed giver of informal little dinners, as well as to the equally confirmed partaker thereof, the discovery of a new toast is something to rejoice over.

disregard of grammar and something of the philosophy of Montaigne, when he said that he "attached himself to such as he thought loved him and detached himself as soon as he thought they didn't."

A Friend that is Social, Good Natur'd and Free, To a Pot of my Liquor Right welcome shall be.

Here's to you two and we two. If you two like we two As we two like you two Here's to ye absent lords, May they long in a far country stay; Drinking at other ladies' boards.

Here's to you, my dear, And to the dear that's not here, my dear; But if the dear that's not here, my dear, I'd not be drinking to you, my dear.

Long live to-day—our own at least. Shall we to-morrow see? Take what you can of joy and feast And let to-morrow be.

No one bulldog yet could eat Every other bulldog's meat; If you have a good sized bone, Let the other dogs alone.

Here's to you, my dear, And to the dear that's not here, my dear; But if the dear that's not here, my dear, I'd not be drinking to you, my dear.

Here's to women who are tender, Here's to women who are slender, Here's to women who are large and fat And red;

He is sure to find something that's clever And dear; And that when he is far from the lips that he loves He can always make love to the lips that are near.

The toast to "lovely woman" are innumerable, and range from the fulsome to the coldly critical, not to say savage.

Let us drink to the thought that where there's a man roves He is sure to find something that's clever And dear; And that when he is far from the lips that he loves He can always make love to the lips that are near.

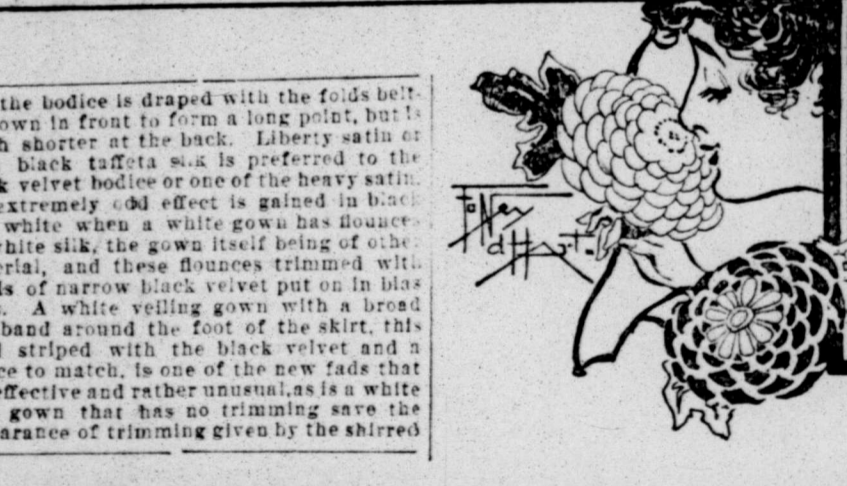

The "Toast of the Gay Deceiver" possesses subtle significance:— I have met many, liked a few; Loved but one—here's to you.

Accompanied by a properly soulful glance, of which the habitual giver of little dinners is usually past master, this is generally successful.

Here's to those who love us, Not to those whom we love; For those whom we love May not love us.

To that curious thing called love, Which comes like a dove From heaven above To some; While to others it fits And settles their wits, And gives 'em all fits, By gum!

Perhaps the most gracious and certainly the most concise toast, and therefore reserved for the last, is:— May you live as long as you like And have what you like as long as you live.

In no way does the luxury of life and the extravagance of modern dress show more prominently than in the dress that is required at the fashionable watering place of today.

A rather tailor made appearance—coats and skirts long coats and short skirts of linen and, as a rule, of white—is preferable.

and the bodice is draped with the folds belted down in front to form a long point, but is much shorter at the back.

Among the newest gowns are noticed a great many that have a touch of black in the trimming.

Of all the gowns that women wear the most becoming and effective are those elaborate creations of batiste and lace or of tulle and lace.

ting, boiling is required to dissipate poisonous conditions. When this is impossible, as in summer journeys or in country hotels or boarding houses, the same results may be obtained, according to Mrs. Ellen S. Richards, of the domestic science department of the Boston Institute of Technology, by small quantities of permanganate of potash added to the glass of drinking water.

White Flank.—Add two table-spoonfuls of brandy to a glass of sweet milk, the same amount of sugar, the juice of a lime or lemon and shaved ice to fill the glass.

A PRACTICAL CHARITY

The Kansas City Star finds much to commend in the work of the Salvation Army and calls attention to the fact that when charity can be made practical without destroying its virtue it has attained its highest quality. To be worthy of the name of charity it must not be grudging nor must it balance its benefactions too closely against the worthlessness of its object.

Manager Greenwall starts the season with big business, and from this date he expects in regular order to present some of the best to be had in the dramatic world. Although it was a minstrel aggregation which opened, the patrons of the house were out in numbers and this initial performance was under most auspicious conditions.

The first race in the cup series was declared off, as the boats could not finish inside the time limit. It does no real harm. It just delays the finish that much longer, and gives the contestants something to talk about. This they enjoy, and they can afford it.

A fool and a bucket of crude petroleum combined to produce a first class conflagration at Sour Lake oil field—the first in the history of that section. Will people never learn that oil cannot be carelessly handled with safety?

Another day has passed and the Tyler Courier has failed to explain its reason for making the sweeping charge of corruption, when there was absolutely no evidence to justify it.

Don't forget that the amount you subscribed to the packing house fund is an obligation which you are morally bound to meet. It is due—in fact, it is overdue. Pay the man.

Have you sent your check to the Board of Trade committee, to cover the amount you subscribed to the packing house? If not, do so at once.

service to the people, performed when Waco was much smaller than it is now. The Judge is a man of decided views, and if he makes the race in the new Eleventh he will have a few things to say which will be interesting to those who will listen.

A St. Louis judge has discharged a citizen who was arrested for stopping a street car, despairing of any other method, by pulling a "gun" on the motorman. The judge declared he would fine any motorman brought before him for not stopping for passengers, adding, "Citizens have rights paramount to those of a street car company."

The report from Weatherford that negroes are ready to lynch one of their color for criminal assault on a child of their race, indicates that lynching is not a method of the white man to persecute the negroes in the South. Show the story to the papers in the North and East. Let them see that lynching follows a criminal assault, North, East, South or West, black or white.

Never mind exactly how. That's partly another man's business. Shall we say the other man gave me a commission there, and I carried it out and got duly paid? Anyway that's sufficient explanation. But what about this chance I've found. If one gives it to the chert people, they'll simply say thank you and publish your name in one number of a professional magazine which nobody reads, or in a banker after fame of that kind. I've the sordid taste to much prefer dollars.

Shelf strode forward and seized Cambel by the arm. "If your channel and your everglades will answer a purpose I want, there's half a million of English sovereigns to be made out of it."

"Five hundred thousand pounds! Hush! There's somebody coming. But it's to be had if you are not afraid of a little risk."

"I fear nothing on this earth," said Cambel, "when it's to my interest not to fear. Moreover, though I'm not a saint, my standard of morality is probably a shade higher than yours. I don't mind doing some sort of dirty things, but there are shades in dirtiness, and at some tints I draw the line. It's dangerous. I don't have the tips of these cues glued on so badly. They fly off and hit people."

The billiard room door had opened, and Amy Rivers had come in, with Fairfax at her heels, whence Cambel's digestion. The matter had not been put in so many words, but he felt sure that the commission of a great robbery had been proposed to him, and he had more than half a mind to drive his knuckles into Theodore Shelf's lying, hypocritical face there and then on the spot.

CHAPTER III. REQUIREMENTS OF MR. SHELF. Mr. Theodore Shelf wanted to drag Cambel off there and there to his business room on the first floor to discuss further this great project which he had in his head, but Cambel thought fit to remain where he was. Mr. Shelf nodded significantly toward the newcomers, as much as to hint that a third person with them would be distinctly an inconvenient third. Cambel turned to them, one in hand, and proposed a game of snooker.

"That's precisely what we came up for," said Amy Rivers promptly. "Hamilton, get out the balls. Mr. Cambel, will you put the billiard balls away, so that they don't get mixed?" They played and talked merrily. Their conversation turned to the billiard room at the recent Academy, which they agreed was a disgrace to a civilized country, and Cambel made himself interesting over the art of painting in Paris, mural, facial and on canvas. When he chose, he could be very interesting, this man London had nicknamed the great traveler, and he generally chose, not being ill natured.

Mr. Theodore Shelf left the billiard room with a feeling beneath his waistcoat much akin to seasickness. First of all that plain spoken Patrick Cambel had not overpolitely hinted that he was a canting hypocrite and had showed cause for arriving at this conclusion. This was true, but that didn't make it any the more disagreeable. And, secondly, he himself in a moment of excitement had let drop to some perilous Cambel (who, after all, was a comparative stranger) a proposal to make the sum of $500,000 at one coup. True, he had not mentioned the means, but Cambel had at once concluded it was to be gained by robbery, and he, Theodore Shelf, had not denied the impeachment.

Consequently Mr. Shelf went direct to his own room, locked the door, and fortified his nerves with a liberal dose of fingers of brandy. Then he munched a coffee bean in deference to the blue ribbon on his coat lapel, replaced the cognac bottle in the inner drawer of his inner safe and sat down to think.

Mr. Theodore Shelf stood before the fireplace and drew a handkerchief across his forehead with trembling fingers. "What business did you refer to?" he asked at length.

"None whatever. I'm not a business man. I make discoveries and don't know how to use them. You're a business man and may be able to see where the money profit comes in. If you can, why, then we'll share the plunder. If you can't, we're neither of us worse off than before."

"But this is vague. What sort of discoveries? Have you found a mine?" "No, sir, in the present instance a channel."

"A channel? I don't take you." "A deep water channel leading up to a coast and in beyond it, where everybody else supposes there is nothing but shallow water. The government charts put down the place as partly unusable, but all impossible for navigation. The upgrowth of coral, they say, is turning part of the sea into dry land. In a large measure this is true, but at one point, which I have discovered, a river comes down from the interior, and the scour of this river has cut a deep narrow channel out through the reefs to the deep sea water beyond."

"In confidence, I'll tell you it is on the west coast of Florida—on the Mexican gulf coast. The interior of southern Florida is called the Everglades. It's partly lake, partly swamp, built up of many groves, saw grass, cypress trees and water, tenanted by snakes, alligators, wild beasts and a few Seminole Indians. Only one expedition of whites has been across it—or rather only one expedition known to history. But I've been there, right into the heart of the Everglades—in fact, I've just come from there, and I netted $1,000 out of the trip."

"How?" asked Shelf. "Never mind exactly how. That's partly another man's business. Shall we say the other man gave me a commission there, and I carried it out and got duly paid? Anyway that's sufficient explanation. But what about this chance I've found. If one gives it to the chert people, they'll simply say thank you and publish your name in one number of a professional magazine which nobody reads, or in a banker after fame of that kind. She drew herself up and stared him with a look of forced contempt. fingers in. So long as things last here I shall observe all the conventionalities, and if you appreciate those you will find it wise to reconsider your present ways. I tell you candidly that if the firm does go down not only England, but half the world will ring with its transactions. Marmaduke Rivers & Shelf, he went on, with scowling fury, "were honest, prosperous tradesmen once, before their ways were fouled to find money for your cursed ambition."

There was a new look on the clean shaven face which had never seen before and an evil glint in the eyes which scared her. Irresolutely she moved toward the door and put her fingers upon the handle. Then she drew herself up and stared him up and down with a look of forced contempt. "You will be good enough," she said coldly, "to attend to the business which brought me here. I am going now to draw the checks I spoke about."

Shelf looked at her very curiously. "Go," he said, "and do as you please. You are a determined woman, and because I am determined myself I admire your strength of will; but, for all that, I think I shall murder you before I leave England."

Mrs. Shelf laughed derisively, but with pale lips, and then she opened the door. The dog advanced toward her slowly, stiff legged, muttering. "What fine heroics!" she said. "But thanks for seeing after my balance. It is a written thing that I must have that money."

She passed through the door, closing it gently behind her, and Shelf returned to his armchair. "George," he said as the fox terrier stood up against his knee, "if that woman were only struck dead today, there are 2,000 families in England who would rejoice madly if they only knew one-tenth part of what I know. Poor beggars, they have trusted me to the hilt, and she makes me behave to them like a devil. Yes, little dog, she makes me, whether I wish it or not. For this at times I more than hate her."

"At times when I log this ferocious ambition of hers she must almost hate me. Yet I know something about women, and I believe that heartily always she loves me. It's a curious mixture, isn't it, George? But it isn't a comfortable one. D'you know, my small animal, I wish very much just now an earthquake or a revolution or something like that would occur to shuffle matters up. Then if I got killed I should be spared a great deal of worry, and if I didn't, why, I've got large hands, and I believe I could grab enough in the general scramble to suit even her."

"As it is, however, with neither earthquake nor revolution probable, I'm a desperate man, ready to take any desperate chance of commercial salvation."

CHAPTER IV. BISMETALISM. It was late in the evening when Patrick Cambel again found himself on tete-a-tete with his host. There had been a tete in to dinner at the house in Park lane, but these had gone, and Mrs. Shelf and Amy Rivers followed them to parties elsewhere. Mrs. Shelf had wished to carry Cambel also in her train, but she was so tired behind by a sequence which he could not very well refuse. "You will favor me very much by remaining here for the rest of the evening, Mr. Cambel," Shelf had said in his pompous way. "I have matters of the greatest moment I wish to discuss with you."

"I hardly know how to begin," Shelf confessed unhesitatingly when they were alone. "Then let me make a suggestion," said Cambel, with a laugh. "Come to the point at once. Let's have the plot without any introductory chapters. You've told me you've got a scheme on hand for turning my discovery into currency, and you've rather hinted it's a dirty scheme. The only question is how dirty. Thanks to pressure of circumstances, I'm not an overparticular person. But on points I'm very squeamish, or, in other words, I draw the line somewhere. Unless I'm very vastly mistaken, your plan will involve one in downright knavery, which is a thing all sensible men avoid if possible. Now, in my ignorance I fancied the find might be turned to account without climbing down to that."

"Oh," said Shelf eagerly, "then you had a scheme in your head before you came to me?" The other shrugged his shoulders and lit a cigar. "Just a dim outline—nothing more. You see the interior of the Everglades is absolutely untouched by the white man's weapons. It was vaguely supposed to be one vast lake with masses of slime and mangroves. The lake was reported as too shallow for boats and abounding with fevers, agues and mosquitoes. Consequently it remained unexplored, and on the end of the Florida peninsula today no white man, barring myself and one or two others, has ever got farther than five or eight miles in from the coast."

"Now, as I've told you, I was lucky enough to hit upon a fine deep ship channel going in as far as the center line, and I don't know how far behind inside. There is good, fertile country, a healthy climate and the best game preserve on this earth. For the first comers that interior will be just a sportsman's paradise."

"My idea is to invite. First sell the cream of the sport. Some men will give anything for shooting, and in this case there will also be the glamour of being pioneers. Each one will start determined to write a book of his opinions and doings when he gets back. By chartering a steamer and treating them well on board they would have sporting de luza. One ought to get quite five and twenty cheps at 500 guineas apiece."

Cholera Infantum. There is no danger whatever from this disease when taken in time and properly treated. All that is necessary is to give Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy after each operation of the bowels more than natural and then castor oil to cleanse the system. It is safe and sure. When reduced with water and sweetened it is pleasant to take.

DIPLOMACY

[Original] "This dispatch is for the secretary of state. It is of immense importance, because it will determine the route of the canal. Should the enemies of that route get possession of it they could defeat the negotiations and possibly insure the success of the other scheme. Get it through safely and you will find your promotion in the secretary's office awaiting you. Fail, and your diplomatic career is ended." George Gathney, secretary of legation, twenty-three years of age, newly married, left the embassy and hurried home to inform his young wife of his good fortune and make preparations for his journey. "George, dear," said Alice Gathney, turning on him a pair of expressive eyes, "where do you think it safest to carry the dispatch?" "In my pocket."

"I'm thinking, George, that your pocket would be just the place any one getting wind of your having it and interested in stealing it would first search." "What do you say to my hat?" "I don't like that either." "Where would you put it?" "The trouble is, George, you have one defect for a diplomat. You're not reticent. I'm afraid you might get talking about it and—"

"Come, now, sweetheart," said the young husband with a kiss, "don't treat me like a schoolboy. I'm not quite a fool. I choose to carry it in my suit case, which I shall never let out of my possession. Now do the packing at once and I'll be off."

"Oh, you stupid!" laughed the husband and revealed it on the cover. "What did you mark it 'Dispatch' for?" "That's to let you know it when you see it. You see, there are other packages, and—"

The words were interrupted by a shower of kisses, with a mumbled "Dear little fool!" "Crazy idiot!" and similar endearing expressions. "Goodby, darling!" said the young diplomat before entering the carriage that was to take him to the station. "If it wasn't so sudden I'd take you with me, but you know the baby needs you!" "Yes, George. Never mind that. Keep your wits about you. Now remember something I'm going to tell you: In your overcoat pocket you'll find a note from me saying one more goodby for you just before you sail. Promise me you'll read it shortly before the steamer leaves."

THE FOOL WHO WON.

Horace Greeley's First Experience in New York City. When Horace Greeley first went to New York city, a green, awkward country boy, he met with discouragement. For two days he tramped the streets, visiting two-thirds of the printing offices in the town and always receiving a cold refusal of his services. His biographer, Mr. W. A. Linn, says that by Saturday night Greeley was satisfied that the city offered him no hope of a living. He decided to leave for the country on Monday, before his last dollar was gone. It happened that some acquaintances of his landlord, who called on Sunday, told him of an office where a compositor was wanted. Greeley went there Monday morning before the place was open. His appearance was so unorthodox that he would have been rejected there also if the foreman had not had difficulty in getting a compositor for a piece of work he wanted done. This was setting up a small New Testament with narrow columns, the text interspersed with references to notes marked in Greek and other unusual characters. So complicated was the task and so little could the compositor earn at it that several men had abandoned the work almost as soon as they had begun it. The foreman offered the work to Greeley, believing that in half a day the boy would prove himself incapable of performing it. When the proprietor saw Greeley at work he asked the foreman why he hired that fool and said, "Pay him off tonight."

But the foreman did not pay him off. This boy had worked on a New England farm, had cut wood in the winter cold and in summer had worked in the fields under the noon sun. He was not afraid of toil. He set that Testament. When the foreman examined the first proof he found that Greeley had set more type and set it better than any one else who had tried.

SHOPS OF CANTON. Every Art and Industry Represented in the Chinese City. The merchants' alleys are the paradise of the stranger who visits Canton, China. The shops have open fronts on either side the narrow lane, and every art and industry, the homeliest trade and the most fascinating pursuit, thrives in the dark passage. Black swinging signboards proclaim the business in characters of red or gold. Pandemonium triumphs in a series of yells as the chairmen scream for pass room. The poles hit the pedestrian in the eye, and the mandarin joggles the stranger. The native tills his huge hat sidewise to avoid a crush, and often the coolies swing aslant in the alley or duck into a store to avoid a catastrophe. The Chinese as a people are modest in their dress. The person is rarely exposed. Women wear double-breasted sacks which fit tight to the throat, and men are usually covered. But under the stress of hard labor the man at the forge is stripped to the waist, and in the foundry a nearly nude workman strides the iron seasaw like a horse in the treadmill. The butcher cleaves his fletcher on the block amid dried rats and skins of fowls stretched taut on the rack. Next door the gold beater hammers in his cave. Beyond the kindling man piles high his forest of fagots. Near by the miller is beating the meal through coarse sieves. His neighbor skins fish and hopes to sell them from the box where they float under a feeble spurt of water. In the adjoining den beautiful embroideries are piled mountain high, with silks, satins and broadened taffetas in wondrous designs of dragons and flowers. Hau Cheung Tai patiently transfers them by the hundred from shelf to table in the hope that some stray bit may catch the buyer's fancy. Feathers are an important industry, and fans, folding or open, line the next shop, painted in every fanciful conception.—Detroit Free Press.

Grotesque English. No doubt purchasers in other lands have reason to smile at English attempts to worthily describe English wares in a foreign tongue. It is to be hoped, however, that our business houses do not send forth announcements quite so grotesque as some that come to this country. Here is a form issued by a very considerable continental firm: "Does your dressing case need, by chance, a superfine antiseptic soap, an energetic perfumed lotion, a delicious cream, an impalpable velveteine, a very delicate and lasting extract and unmatchably efficient dentifrice? Or do you wish to buy those articles to make a present, the most desirable one, to a very dear person on his saint's or birth day?"—London Express.

Origin of "Pants." The words breeches, trousers and pantaloons are now used interchangeably, but originally the significations were quite different. Pantaloons were at first nothing but long stockings worn in Italy as a sort of religious habit by the devotees of St. Pantalon. Breeches originally reached from the waist half way to the knee and finally to the knee, where they were fastened with a buckle. Trousers are the present style of leg gear, a combination of the former two.

Her Right. "What right has she to star?" asked the envious Thespian. "The best right in the theatrical world," was the reply. "She has secured an 'angel.'"—Chicago Post. To complain of destiny is only to expose our own feebleness of soul.—Maeterlinck. Prosperity gets followers, but adversity distinguishes them.

A SUMMER COUPLE

[Original.] They met in the sweet summer time in the mountains. He was thirty-two, she twenty-eight. At such an age "spooning" is supposed to be either over or on the wane, but in this case the man at least seemed to be as ready as a boy of twenty. Besides, the moment he laid eyes on the girl he was drawn to her by some unexplainable attraction. Was it that he had met his affinity—that she, too, showed something like recognition of a mate? He was fond of the mythical and a strong believer in pre-existence. Might they not have met in some other form, some other world?

There were walks through valleys and over the sides of precipitous mountains. There were rides on roads hard and white, with occasional views of the broad valley of a noble river 4,000 or 5,000 feet below. There were picnics at cascades, boat rides on mountain lakes. In these amusements the two sooner or later drifted together, and when a few weeks had passed the man acted as if all time not passed in her company was so much time lost. Then he awoke to a sudden realization of the fact that in a few days it would be the 31st of August, when the season would be over and the guests scattered. It was the evening before their separation. They were sitting on the piazza of the hotel. A moon slightly past the full rose in the east and lighted up a stretch of valley land far below, visible through a gap in the mountains. Moonlight is becoming to a woman's features, and a natural strength in hers was softened into a delicious feminine repose. He was fond of the mythical poetry of the Germans, and, listening as he did to the tumbling of water in a mountain stream near by, he almost fancied his companion a Lorelei or a water fay. He was full of poetic fervor, and his expression took form in poetic words. "Do you know," he said, "that looking down on that panorama of mingled mist and confusion of dimly lighted undulation there is in me a vague sense of some far distant land in which I have lived?"

"I don't even remember," she said, "when I was a baby." "This was a bit practical, but he did not notice it. "We look out into the heavens," he went on, "and in nebulae see universes forming. We know that nothing is destroyed. Matter forms, disintegrates, forms again and again disintegrates. This is what we call birth and death. The particles of which the forms are composed were never born, never die. They existed always and will always exist."

"Are not we forms," she asked, "of more consequence than unfeeling matter?" "We are, and if there is one attribute within us that is immortal it is love. Love is eternal. There are loves, I admit, that are fleeting, but they are not real loves." "Not the real thing, you mean?" He looked at her suspiciously. Was she not capable of following him, or was this a touch of sarcasm? She looked so innocent that he passed the remark. "Somehow," he went on, "when I first saw you it seemed that we two had met in a previous existence; not only had met, but loved. If I could be blessed with an eternal love, I said to myself, 'I would choose it with her.' Since then the days have flitted happily by, and every day has strengthened this feeling. Now, when I look down on that moonlit plain, with its gilded river thread running through its center, it brings to me with an indescribable vagueness, yet vividness, somewhere in which you and I have met and loved. I choose to think it a love that has had no birth and will have no death, a perpetual mingling of two souls."

He paused. He was very happy, for he was in his element. His disposition was artistic, and his surroundings were artistic. There were the towering peaks, the distant plain, and there beside him was the girl, her features bathed in moonlight. "I know it is foolish to ask such a question," he said, "but have you any glimmerings of such a past?" "Yes," she whispered. "We have met before." "At last I have found one besides myself to remember a pre-existence. I shall never again doubt my theory." "Our meeting," she continued, "was not in some vague land myriads of years ago and myriads of miles away; our love was not developed in a nebulous cloud. It was at the seashore ten years ago. You have grown older and have absorbed theories since then, but you talk of love in the same strain you talked of it then. It was not nebulous love you told me of as we listened to the breakers, but love in a cottage. I was eighteen, and it was pleasant to listen to. I was a summer girl and did not cherish it. But I have remembered you, which is more than you have done in forgetting me."

"What, the blue eyed flirt of Edgemere?" "Yes, and we girls called you the love maker of the Cliff House." "The summer is ended," she added, "and this is my last as a summer girl. Next season I shall be on the eve of thirty, when girls pass into old maids. With you it is different. A man can be a summer man as long as he lives. Go on for ten or twenty years more and be happy." "This, too, is my climax. Let us leave the field together and enter a new world together—not a nebulous world; a home." "Come and see me when we are returned to the city." MYRA ETHEL WESTBROOK.

NOTES OF CAMP LIFE OF NATIONAL GUARD

AUSTIN, Texas, August 21.—Senator C. A. Culberson of Dallas arrived in camp this morning and will remain a day or two. He will be the guest of General Stacy.

The regular routine of the camp was carried out today and the men were put through a vigorous drill all during the day.

The most remarkable score ever made by a soldier at rifle practice was made by Private Roy Lawlor of company F (the Iron Guards of Rusk).

Third infantry, at the range Wednesday evening. He made accurate scores of 60 out of a possible score of 60.

Lieutenant Gray is presiding over the summary court for the Third regiment. He had several cases before him, none however, for any serious offense.

Major Spencer Hutchins, paymaster general of the Texas Volunteer Guard, arrived Wednesday afternoon from his home at Houston.

A series of mishaps and accidents occurred in the camp, most of which were of a trivial nature, however.

Ross Bolton, a private in company I, Third regiment is the young man who fell off the International and Great Northern bridge last night as the train was going into town.

George Howard, a private in company F, Third infantry, received a severe gash in his right temple this morning while out drilling with his company.

There are twelve patients in the hospital, which is about the capacity of the quarters. It is believed these quarters will have to be enlarged.

The Third battalion of the Tenth infantry completed the rifle practice today and this afternoon the Fourth regiment began rifle practice, which consumed the remainder of the day on the range.

Lieutenant Colonel Gray met with an accident Wednesday evening during review. Just as he was about to give a command his saddle turned with him and he was precipitated to the ground.

A fractious horse caused Colonel Townsend to be slightly disabled today. His horse reared while he was out on the field, his head striking the colonel on the hip and cut it slightly.

A branch of the recruiting office which has been established at Austin for some time for the enlistment of men for the regular army, was opened in camp. No enlistments will be made at the headquarters here, but it is merely a bureau of information for those who may be considering entering the service. The bureau is in charge of Sergeant McGree and Corporal Thompson.

The regular routine of the camp was carried out today and the men were put through a vigorous drill all during the day.

The soldiers in some of the companies have already shown a remarkable improvement in the handling of the new magazine rifle, which are being used in rifle practice.

Crimes H. DuBois, former editor of the Union Banner, departed last night for El Paso, where he will make a brief stop before going to his future home at Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. DuBois said he had hoped to get away at an earlier date, but that for various reasons he had been delayed, and he rather had postponed his departure. He said he could not think of leaving until he had read the final chapter of "Graustark," the popular serial story which has been running in The Telegram, and then he felt that he should not leave until he had witnessed the starting of The Telegram's new home.

Another important matter in which Mr. DuBois felt a personal interest was the completion of the new Labor Temple. He said he did not want to leave the city until the building had been completed and he had witnessed the list of donors to that worthy cause posted on the wall. He wanted to see Fort Worth's new labor home completed and serving the purpose for which it was designed, that of affording a place for organizing new unions and strengthening the old ones.
