The cattle market was steady this morning with about forty cars on hand at the opening. A good string of stuff came down the Rock Island from Graham and other points along that branch. The majority of receipts this morning consisted of cows, with several loads of good steers. The cows sold at steady prices, but steers were slow to a little easier because packers had an abundant lot to pick from yesterday and bought freely. The cows offered were mostly of good quality and the majority brought 2 cents or better Northern markets have not yet shown as good inducements to the Texas ship- The best price paid for straight cows was per as the Fort Worth market does $2.25, but top heifers sold at $3.25. The at the present time, and cattle can be offering was generally of good quality. sold here more satisfactorily now than with a few loads of stuff which sold in anywhere else.

Panhandle shippers who came down on the Denver's new train yesterday morning were well satisfied with the market, and with the run. While some of them did not get as high prices as they expected, all were satisfied that they made money by the fast run and considering the condition in which the cattle were in when they reached the yards, all agreed that the trip was a profitable one. Some of the shippers when seen last night were more than leased and one man said that his cows sold for a nickle better than they would have brought elsewhere, sides saving him money in the matter stuff equal to the best quality of yeste of shrinkage and freight. Thursday's day was offered, but several good loa train will likely bring another big were on the market string of cattle from the same region.

Three loads of Mexican oxen, consigned from El Paso to Montreal, Canada, excited a good deal of curiosity at the northern yards this morning. Nobody seemed to know why the cattle were being hauled so far, as they were for the most part from five to ten years old. There have been a good about the same as yesterday. The sales: many cattle moved from Mexico to No. Ave. Price. No. Ave. Price. Canada during the past year, but the two loads this morning were the first to come by way of Fort Worth. After feeding and resting here this morning, the cattle were re-loaded and started on the remainder of their long trip.

Packers bought more heavily yesterday than for perhaps any day this year. Swift took 1,554 cattle and 82 hogs, while Armour purchased 909 cattle and 59 hogs. All other buyers only took 121 cattle. In spite of their big purchases yesterday, both Armour and Swift bought freely this morning.

As yet the total number of stock hogs received at the local yards amounts to only one car. Texas farmers may be buying stock hogs somewhere, but they are not coming via Fort Worth. Those receiving stock hogs by way of Fort Worth get the advantage of a thorough inspection by Federal inspectors and thus know what they are buying, a point that is worth while remembering when importing hogs from other states.

A. A. Spring of Ryan, I. T., sold the top lot of cows on this morning's market. They averaged 837 pounds and brought $2.25. O. G. Orton came along with the shipment. He said: "I am well pleased with the market. This is the first shipment Mr. Spring has made here.' F. W. Hudson of Hico was at the yards today with a shipment of cattle. Sam Diller of Diller Brothers, Moran, Texas, was at the yards today with a shipment of 52 steers, which sold at $3.20. Twenty-six head averaged 1,059 pounds and the other 26 averaged 1,027 pounds.

SYNOPSIS

Chapter I .- Amy Rivers, the ward of selves in a trust which had apportioned is to ship gold to New Orleans, over-in suring it and wrecking it. Shelf and Cambel employ Captain Owen Kettle to command the steamer, the Port Edes, and Thomas B. Needles of Illinois is in a to carry out the plan, Cambel sails in the concern at Vinita and C. R. Breckinridge steamer. As the Port Edes, laden with the boxes, leaves the dock a man on shore declares she is doomed. The crew attempt to seize the vessel in order to secure the gold.

CHAPTER VII. THE SENDOFF.

The Port Edes had gained the name of an unlucky ship. She had slain three men in her building, she had crushed another to death the day she left the slips, and though only three years in the water she had already maimed enough hands from various crews to make her a full comple ment. Some vessels are this way. From no explainable cause there seems to be a diabolical fatality about them.

It is not to be supposed that sailormen rush to join a craft of this sinister reputation. They may be asses in the bulk, but should be some action taken to put a they are only asses in part. They always try for the best berths first. But because there are not enough of these to go round, and because, thanks to the Dago and the Dutchman, there are not sufficient berths of any sort whatever to supply all aspirants, it is always possible to man any vessel which a board of trade official will pass through a dock gates.

Just as no man is ever successful in anything without due course, so per contra few sailormen are down on their luck union. The union is basing its action on except through some peculiar trait of inunion has but done that which the courts be she tramp steamer or eke weeping wind jammer, you do not get much pick of a crew. You have to put up with what other people have left, and it does not take you long to learn that your beauties have not been rejected for their excellencies.

It was this way on the Port Edes. Forsea failing. Between them they lacked wakefulness, eyesight, decision, strength est possible knottage per ton of coal; the Over all was Owen Kettle, master mariner, and whatever his failings might be -and the index of them tailed out-they did not show prominently at the head of Irene Nelson, who was employed in a such a ship's company. Like all men in the roughest school, but unlike his successful brethren he had not graduated later on to the smooth things of a well manned passenger liner. For his sins he > had remained the pitiful knockabout skipper, a man with knife edged words always ready on the lip of his teeth, a leaden whistle in one jacket pocket and a lethal weapon in the other.

He was an excellent seaman and navigator, a man capable of going an entire voyage without taking off his clothes or enjoying one watch of regular sleep. Taking into account these qualifications, it may be understood that while in command ers of a czar and was entirely unscrupulous in gaining ends which expediency or his owners laid down for him, and though not physically powerful he had the pluck marksmanship. For the handling of such a menagerie of all nation scoundreldom and incapacity as bunked in the steamship Port Edes no better man than Owen Kettle breathed in either hemisphere.

The crew signed their marks on the articles at the shipping office in the Sailors' home and went grumbling to get rid of their advances. Later most of them turned up on the steamer, some with their worldly goods done up in dunnage sacks, which look to the uninitiated like pillowslips, some apparently possessing nothing but the squalid raiment they stood up in. There was not one of them dressed idea. Yet most of them had made their bread upon the seas since early boyhood, which shows what conventional ideas are sometimes worth. They were most of them oldish men and looked even older than their years.

The engineers came on board early, for the most part in scrubby blue serge and sour black temper. They grumbled at the messroom in broad Glaswegian, prophesied evil (in advance) about the capacities of the messroom steward and the ship's cook, regions below. Then they went on duty, quarreled with the donkeyman who was making steam for the winches and proand trimmers into watches and apportion

They think ashore I've got a real soft thing on this time. Why, do you know, Mr. Cambel," he added, with a thin, sour grin, "my old woman wanted to come with me for the trip? She said it was so long since she's had a whiff of outside air that now I'd such a tidy steamboat under me she couldn't miss the chance. Yes, and she said she'd bring one of the kids with her that wanted to be a sailor, like his daddy. I tell you she was that took on the idea she'd hear no refusal, and I had to write a letter to owners and get them to wire back a 'No' she could read for herself. It'd look well set to music, that you know, with a yo-heave humbug chorus bear in the halls."

Cambel shrugged his shoulders. "What can you expect at the price?" he asked. "This isn't a £12 a month berth, and you've thrashed across Atlantic in a worse ship for less."

Don't you mistake me," retorted Kettle. "I'm working for full value received, fool enough to be fond of. It's an ugly amusement lying to them like a play actor when you know it's ten chances to one you'll ever see English mud again. That's the way it cuts, though I suppose you'll think it all a sailor's grumble. Perhaps you aren't a married man?" "No. I'm not."

"But you've got people who care for Cambel gave the ghost of a smile and then laughed. "No," he said, "I can't even boast of that. Acquaintances are mine in thousands, but friends-well, all bit like that comfortable contemptible person, the miller of the Dee. I believe I did care for somebody once, and she made me think she cared for me. Probably she lied, because under porsussion she went off with another man. Bah, though, what does it matter? Kettle, we're talking rank sentiment, and that's an unprofitable employment for men engaged on a piece of delicate business. And-here's a gentleman come to tell me that the consignment of specie is just commencing to arrive. Now, captain, the stuff'll be in iron bound boxes, and you and I have get to weigh each one separately and check the invoice. Then we've to act as our own stevedores and stow half of it in the cabin next my room and half of it across the alleyway next the mate's.

"Because the weight is big, and it would give your steamer a heavy list to star-

"Oh, as to that, never mind. We can easily bring her up again with a trimming tank. And I shouldn't feel comfortable if any of the stuff was in that room next the mate's. You see, Mr. Cambel, any one on board can go down that alleyway. In fact, it's the only road from end to end of the ship unless you go up over the bridge deck. And I'd not guarantee but what the bait would make some of them beauties try and tamper with the door. It's big enough to smudge the honesty of an ceeded to split up their crew of firemen archbishop if he was only earning £4 a month. Now the room next yours has iron walls and opens only into the inner cabin. There's a good lock on it already, and if I make the carpenter bend on four more you'll have a strong room the Bank of England might boast about."

"That sounds sensible," commented the

'Very well," said Cambel, "I believe it casional acid fault with the stevedore's is the best plan. Now, if you please, we'll crew or the crane men on the wharf, but have the weighing machine in the main for the most part they shuffled about the cabin, and if you, sir, will instruct your decks in easy slippers, attending to the men to bring in the boxes one by one I'll Co., Mo., writes: "I have little twin girls up in the stateroom before us both. As staring dumbly is dry work, self appointed orators among the crowd naturally distribute gratis their own private opinions upon the situation, and, according to their luck or eloquence, these attracted larger or smaller audiences. No one took them very seriously, and they, for the most part, treated the subject in a jocular vein. It was not till Captain Kettle and the Mersey pilot had gone into the upper bridge and the mate on the foredeck had cast off the first bow fast that a self appointed prophet arose who spoke of the gold shipment in another key.

He was a wild, unkempt, knockkneed man, who first attracted attention by tying a crimson handkerchief to an umbrella and brandishing it above his head. Being on the face of him a creature who never if he could avoid it put his hand to honest labor, he naturally addressed the crowd at large as "fellow workers." These things awoke a slight humorous interest, and because the man had the gift of glib and striking speech the crowd continued to listen after the first pricking up of their

The man's discourse need not be reported in detail. He was an anarchist, red, rampant and ruthless, and by means of arguments, some warped, some fair enough, he pointed out to his hearers that the mission of the Port Edes was another knife thrust of capital into the ribs of labor. The statement met with a very mixed reception, but the anarchist silenced both the jeers and the applause with a beseeching wave of his hand and followed along the curb of the wharf the steamer which was commencing to float toward the dock gates. He spoke to those on board her now rather than to his more immediate following, and unclean faces stared at him from over the line of bul-

"To any man of you who values life," he cried, "I offer a solemn warning. That ship is doomed. She will sink in midocean, blown apart by our petards, and her ill gotten cargo will be hurled out of capital's reach forever. Those who are misguided enough to be her guardians will be blasted into space. Listen, you men of her crew. Jump on the pier head yonder as she passes into the basin and take the consequences. The brutal laws of this country will hurl you into prison, but better a season dragging out a martyr's sentence than death as an enemy to the workers' cause.'

At this point the strong right hand of the law descended on to the speaker's elbow, and then, because he attempted to resist, the willing right knee of the law jerked up suddenly into the small of that anarchist's back, after which he was hauled ignominiously to a police station, and the place of his speaking knew him

But the fellow's threats had not been without their result. Every hand on the Port Edes' deck had heard them distinctly, and disquiet arose under the belts of nine out of ten. The mates grew nervous and the men inattentive, and from the bridge Captain Kettle's voice and whistle kept ringing out with biting clearness. As it was, only one man attempted to put the warning into practical effec. He was a miserable half clad wretch, a coal trimmer by rating, already repentant of the spell of physical toil which he had signed

Passing through the lock gates into the basin, the steamer's port quarter swung gently toward the wall. A sailor in readithe lanyard of a cork fender. The trimmer jumped on the bulwarks, and one might have thought that he was going to bear a hand-an unnecessary hand. The sailor did so and cursed him for his officiousness. The donkeyman, however, who was oiling the afterwinch, had other ideas on the subject, and stood by for a and there's many an old sailor'd like to rush; hence, when that trimmer was getbe in my shoes if he only knew. Here, get up, you half baked scum of the workhouse, and tumble below. Thank your stars the old man hasn't seen you from the bridge, but don't give me any more of your lip, or I'll report you to him and the chief to boot. Now,

The coal trimmer blew his nose on his gray neck handkerchief and shambled off below, muttering. TALKS TO CHICAGOANS

Southern Man Makes a Plea for Southern Aristocracy (From the Chicago Tribune.)

It was evident that he was from the South, not that he wore a gray goatee he looked and dressed much as the average Northern citizen does. It was his manner of pronouncing certain words that betrayed him. He addressed a group of men who had gathered around him in the lobby of the hotel. There never can be a complete onciliation between the North and he South," he declared, "until you people up here learn one thing. It hasn't anything to do with the color question, and it isn't politics. But every time ou get a chance you offend the South n a certain way that is mighty exasperating. The other day, for instance, a young woman shot herself, here in one of your hotels. She had been living with some man who had no inten tion of marrying her, and it appears that whisky was about the only thing she was in the habit of drinking. Well it was discovered after she had fired a bullet into herself that she had for merly lived in some backwoods place down South. Therefore it was published that she had been a Southern belle that her family belonged to the old Southern aristocracy, and so on. Also it was declared that she was very beautiful-as all Southern belles and daughters of the old Southern aristocracy always are supposed to be. I saw picture of her in one of the papers, and if she was beautiful I'll confess that I don't know what womanly beauty is. It turned out, too, that a brother of hers was found, at about the time she shot herself, in a negro dive, where he had quarreled with some of the inmates and got himself stabbed Of course, a son of the old Southern aristocracy would be sure to seek pleasure in a negro dive. Everybody who knows anything about the Southern aristocracy will tell you that.

"I've wanted to scold somebody about this for a long time. Whenever woman who was born south of Mason and Dixon's line goes on the stage, or takes part in a sensation of any kind up here she is at once listed as a member of the old Southern aristocracy. I've never known of a single slip. And she's always a beautiful Southern belle. even if she has a flat nose and is com-

SUNSTROKE INSURANCE

When the summer's heat gets about 90 degrees, you are liable to be sunstruck any time you are out in the sun, unless you take the proper precautions. Several years ago, the writer of this, who has spent much of his life in the tropics, thought he was safe from sunstroke. One day he collapsed, remained un scious for five hours, and at times his life was dispaired of. As a matter of fact, any person whose stomach and bowels are in bad shape in the summer time, is liable to be sunstruck in temperature that would be harmless under normal fermenting refuse that forms acids and gases, raise the heat of the body and blood many degrees. Scientists have found that natives of the South Sea Islands, living on laxative fruit, bananas, cocoanuts bread-fruit, have a temperature 20 degrees lower than that of white men who are careless about their food or their bowels. It has been found in years of experience, that a CASCARET Candy Cathartic taken at bed-time every night will keep the body clean and cool inside all day, and forms a safe and thoroughly reliable form of sunstroke insurance.
