The Spank in School

The 3543 members of the Brooklyn Public School Teachers' association have with practical unanimity signed petitions for restoration of the good

The movement is not confined to Brooklyn. School teachers everywhere are practically in agreement on this question. It is not to be assumed that these teachers want to be permitted to spank because they enjoy it. It is not a pleasure, but a painful duty which

There has been a lot of maudlin sentimentality against corporal punishment in the public schools. And it is to be observed that in about the same proportion that this sentimentality has prevailed reformatories and juvenile courts have become necessary. Not very long ago the principal of the high school at Evanston. Hil. of the needy and destitute declared that the law which forbids corporal punishment was in large part should be distributed through such an responsible for the bandit evil that seemed to be epidemic among boys in Chicago and vicinity

> "Darn you, you dassent touch me"-the too common cry of defiance to the teacher-is the first expression of incipient desperadoism. It embraces contempt for law and conviction that liberty and license rise above it. It puts a bad boy in a wrong mental and moral attitude toward society.

In forbidding corporal punishment we are asking of teachers what we ask of no government on earth-that they rule without power. Moral suasion is the best corrective influence in the world, as far as goes. But it is just where it is needed most that it does not go very far. The next night he watched with the Captain Cumbie To the boy who really needs correction-the incorrigible-moral suasion is good a thing of mockery and despisement. It is like water on a duck's back. A little woman cannot be expected to rule a half-hundred boys from the streets unless she has back of her some such authority as they are bound to respect. Of course, the first right of correction rests with the parents. And f all parents faithfully and intelligently availed themselves of the right there would be no need of corporal punishment in the schools.

But many parents are unfit to correct their children, many others neglect their duty, and still others spoil them by over-indulgence. And the question is whether the parental deficiency shall be supplied

More than half a century ago a company of United States cavalry stationed at Fort -, in what is now Arizona, had a pet bear they called Uncas. Uncas was as tratable as a Newfoundland dog, moving freely about the post, usually spending his time either begging the cook for something to eat or sleeping in the sunshine in winter and the shade in summer. One day Uncas strayed away from the post and did

Then came news that the neighboring Indians had left their reservations, and Uncas was forgotten in the prevalling excitement. In those days many of the forts in the wild west were little Indians were known to have broken loose, the gates were kept closed and the usual precautions in time of hostilities were observed.

One day an order came for the command to march against the Indians. The garrison, including the families of the officers, was left in charge of a sergeant and eight men. Bergeant Winter was one of those better born and educated young men who in those days rarely entered the ranks of the army. As soon as the command left he shut the gates of the fort and directed them to be kept shut.

The second night after their departure a sentinel was shot. No one heard a report, but this was not considered remarkable, for but one sentry was on post and be could not see for a great distance, first, because all the trees near by had been felled and, second, because the moon was approaching the full in a clear sky.

Sergeant Winter kept the soldier's death from the women, for it indicated that Indians were planning an attack, and he did not wish to create an alarm. sentry, who was relieved every two hours. Winter toward morning went into quarters for a few minutes to get a cup of coffee, and when he returned the sentry was lying on his back with a bullet in his brain.

Winter resolved to sit up and watch the next night himself. He slept several hours during the day, directing the men to make a sentry of straw and clothe it in uniform. At 10 o'clock, while the moon was obscured by a cloud, the dummy sentinel was set up. Then the sergeant posted a real senand tinel in concealment, and after arrang-

Winter waited till after midnight without experiencing anything unusual. Then he say something approach-Mr. Reckefeller has purchased the ing. When it came near enough for world's chief sources of asbestos, which him to see it plainly, he discovered that more in use, and he has the means to it was a bear. It was waddling along, occasionally pausing to nibble, but gradually working nearer. The beast passed within a hundred feet of the sergeant, who then recognized the garrison's pet, Uncas. He watched it silently, not daring to make a sound for fear of a hidden enemy, and saw it

> Winter made up his mind that the wily Indians had sent Uncas in, expecting the garrison to open the gates for him and they would be ready to make a rush at the same time. Doubtless at that very moment they were lying in concealment near by. Worst of all, be feared that those in the fort, seeing their old friend Uncas coming, would not deny him entrance. What should

While he was deliberating Uncas sat up on his hind legs, bear fashion, and the sergeant caught sight of a black line about a yard long extending from the bear's nose toward the fort. Suddenly a bit of flame shot out from the farther end of the black line, and a moment later came a crack. The dummy sentinel on the fort toppled over.

Winter changed his surmises. The Indians had doubtless killed Uncas and were using his skin for a cover under which to pick off the garrison one by one till all were killed. Cautiously the sergeant stole forward toward the disguised savage, the latter meanwhile waddling on toward the fort. Then Winter espled off to his left, but nearor the fort than he, an Indian crawl up from behind the bank of a creek. Then came another and another till Winter counted twenty savages.

It now flashed through the sergeant's brain that the Indians bad killed the sentinel this time with a view to surprising the garrison before they were aware that the only man on guard was dead. Winter's blood ran cold. The garrison would be murdered while he, their commander, was outside and unable to help them. There was but one hope. By firing on the Indians they might think there was a force without on which they had not counted, but in doing so he would give away his presence and would probably be taken and tortured to death

Winter resolved to take his chances on the first of these two suppositions. Raising his rifle, be took a sure aim. with a rest on the stump, and fired at the pretended bear. It sprang up with a yell and fell in a heap. Winter waited, expecting to hear from the Indians, but, whether they did not catch the direction from which his shot was fired and supposed that it came from the fort or whether they feared a concealed force without, no sign of an Indian was seen again. At daylight Winter got up and walked to the fort. On his way he found a dead Indian in Uncas'

Before sunset the command returned and before three months had passed Winter was a commissioned officer. MARK C. BENTLEY.

EVERYBODY'S FOR MARCH

Apropos of the present war in the far east, an intimate personal study of the czar of Russia in Everybody's for March is of unusual interest. Besides a number of readable stories, several articles of interest to the business man, notably "The Word of J. Pierpont Morgan as an Asset." are presented. Vernon Howe Bailey presents the second of his series of "Studies in Pencil," Boston being the city chosen. In presenting pictures of American cities in this form, Everybody's deserves credit for a new departure that is a welcome relief from the garish photographs in which the only feature worthy noon with Miss Edrington for a business of attention is the number of stories in
