THREE NATIONS AGREE

Europeans' Strongest States Show That Though Public Clamor Is for Harsh Measures, the Rulers Are Inclined Toward Peace

LONDON, Oct. 29.—Three of the six great powers whose fiat is law to Europe emerged from the Anglo-Russian crisis committed to the principle of reason in international disputes. That, in the opinion of England's advocates of peace, is the best heritage of the past week's unparalleled events. Diplomacy is acknowledged to have achieved a great triumph and a corresponding defeat.

The czar and the Russian government, President Loubet and the French government are enthusiastically praised. Perhaps the warmest tributes are paid to the first minister, because they labored under the disadvantage of a rampant war spirit, not only in a large section of the Muscovite press, but also among some of the highest personages of the court.

Moreover, their position was peculiarly difficult on account of the warlike movement which the British fleet, the bellicosity of leading British politicians and the menacing tone of the weightiest British papers. Fortunately Edward and his ministers, while sufficiently belligerent, put public clamor aside and followed a course which enabled level-headed men at St. Petersburg to meet British demands without the sacrifice of Russian honor.

France's work in aiding a settlement is deemed of the highest importance, both as regards the peril just averted and as regards the future interests of peace. On the whole, arbitrators deem themselves entitled to a gala day. They rejoice over the humiliation of the cynic demagogue and the yellow journalist. They declare that the ideal of the Hague tribunal is destined to bulk larger and larger in the practical politics and policies of the nations.

HAS SOCIAL AMBITION

The Glasgow Herald, in a strong article, openly charges Mr. McCormick, the Russian ambassador at St. Petersburg, with permitting his pro-Russian sympathies to appear too much on the surface and claims that his advocacy of the cause of Russia is due to his social ambition.

"Interviews with the American ambassador," the paper says, "show that he is inspired not only by a very warm feeling of sympathy for Russia, but by something almost akin to admiration for the Russian government. On a former occasion it was reported by a foreigner and known both by McCormick and St. Petersburg, that there was some astonishment over the American's stand."

"The diplomatic report of the American democracy he said had social ambitions of a very pronounced character, the Russian society had taken very much to heart the frank, not to say markedly hostile, comments on Russia and Russian policy which had found utterance in the American press and had also resented the tone adopted in certain insinuations by the United States government toward Russia."

"Mr. McCormick, as the official representative of the United States, had been made to feel the weight of society's displeasure. Of course, the ambassador could not be exactly boycotted, but St. Petersburg society, my informant adds, are past masters in the art of giving the cold shoulder."

In concluding the Glasgow paper says that under the circumstances Mr. McCormick can hardly be blamed for permitting his personal views to differ from those of the bulk of the American people.

THE CZAR REALIZED IT WAS SERIOUS

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—Russian trials since the news of Admiral Rozhdestvensky's exploit about the world have revealed the Czar in a favorable light. Among Russian statesmen alone he grasped the seriousness of the incident, he realized that the British people would be aroused and the Government driven to drastic measures. At once he telegraphed an apologetic message to King Edward and commanded Count Lamsdorf to handle the crisis with consideration for the British feeling.

Watchful for a chance to embroil Russia and England in the hope that victory in the Middle East and Near East would more than counterbalance the destructions in the Far East, the bear to eviom the press and prejudice the governing circle against concessions. It made all that was possible out of Rojdestvensky's melo-dramatic story of an alleged Anglo-Japanese conspiracy and filled the air with mischievous rumors and advice. The Czar, however, saw clearly through the haze, appreciated that a disgraceful provocative act had been done and that reparations was imperative in Russia cared for the respect of mankind. Hence he kept a determined hand on the wheel and safely navigated the appalling channel.

Then His Majesty belies the effusions of enemies at home and abroad. He is said to be rather weak, insane nor insensitive to the interest of his sorely-tried people. Whatever he may do hereafter to realize or disappoint the new hope that has arisen in Russia he has fought his way over great difficulties during the past few days, as the champion of the best opinion in the country. The crisis will leave a deep impression on the Russian diplomatic methods and entirely upset the dilatory traditions of centuries.

Chairman Cowherd of Democratic Congressional Committee Estimate Democrats Will Carry Many Districts

THE NATIONAL TICKET

Will Be Cause of Gains in the East—Republican Dissensions in a Number of States Will Help the Democrats in Congressional Districts

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—W. S. Cowherd, chairman of the Democratic campaign committee, issued the following tonight before his departure for the West:

"The following is my estimate on the results on the Congressional districts in the coming election: Alabama 9, Arkansas 7, California 4, Colorado 3, Connecticut 2, Delaware 1, Florida 3, Georgia 1, Idaho 1, Illinois 10, Indiana 8, Iowa 2, Kansas 2, Kentucky 10, Louisiana 7, Maryland 5, Massachusetts 4, Michigan 2, Minnesota 2, Mississippi 8, Missouri 14, Montana 1, Nebraska 3, Nevada 1, New Jersey 5, New York 19, North Carolina 10, Ohio 19, Pennsylvania 8, Rhode Island 2, South Carolina 7, Tennessee 8, Texas 16, Utah 1, Virginia 10, West Virginia 3, Wisconsin 6, Wyoming 1; total 225.

"As the situation stands at present the prospects are that the Democrats will carry 225 out of 352 districts. In the above table I have included the States of Idaho, Utah and Wyoming. These are all doubtful as matters now stand. The Democratic chances are excellent in two of the three. Our gains in the East will be due largely to the strength of the National ticket. In the Middle West it will be due more particularly to local dissensions in the Republican ranks. The long hold on patronage has been so much trouble in Republican districts and the Democrats will profit correspondingly by reason of it."

"The membership of the House consists of 205 Republicans and 177 Democrats, there being vacancies in the Republican side. The majority of the party may be said to be thirty-three."

PARKER TO SPEAK

ESOPUS, N. Y., Oct. 29.—Judge Parker will make several speeches next week, in addition to those already announced. Following his address he will make at Newark, N. J., Tuesday night, he will go to Jersey City the same night and make another speech. He will also address a mass meeting at Cooper Union, in New York city, on Wednesday night, owing to the fact that Mr. Cleveland will not speak there.

George F. Parker, chairman of the literary bureau of the Democratic National Committee, is at Rosemont and will remain over Sunday, planning the details of the candidate's itinerary. Some of the details in the original plan have been arranged, but will not be announced just now.

Judge Parker spent the day preparing speeches to be delivered next week. He has received numerous letters of congratulation upon Friday's speech to the delegations from Orange and Rockland Counties, in which he replied to United States Senator Knox's counter charges of campaign abuses.

At Rosemont tonight it is authoritatively denied that Judge Parker has received a letter from Chairman Taggart with a suggestion that, after the Hartford meeting next Thursday night he start immediately for the West and deliver there two addresses, thus changing territory with William J. Bryan, who was to be sent East for the same purpose. No such plan, it is added, has been contemplated or is likely to be broached.

BELIEVES MONTANA DEMOCRATIC

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 27.—Senator W. A. Clark of Montana, in a interview here today, said:

"I come on a very busy campaigning trail since the news of Admiral Rozhdestvensky's exploit about the world have revealed the Czar in a favorable light. Among Russian statesmen alone he grasped the seriousness of the incident, he realized that the British people would be aroused and the Government driven to drastic measures. At once he telegraphed an apologetic message to King Edward and commanded Count Lamsdorf to handle the crisis with consideration for the British feeling."

BOTH CLAIMING IT

HELENA, Mont., Oct. 29.—Chairman H. L. Frank and Lee Mantle of the democratic and republican state central committees, respectively, in interviews today expressed the utmost confidence as to the outcome of the November election, each claiming the state by handsome majorities.

Chairman Frank said that he predicted that Governor Toole's re-election by 15,000 majority, and the state for Parker electors by at least 8,900 majority.

Chairman Mantle said the state of the entire republican ticket was assured by confident majorities. His estimates, based on reliable reports, showed that President Roosevelt would sweep the state by at least 10,900 majority.

WOMEN IN THE PULPIT

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 29.—The missionaries who are attending the annual session of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society here have been assigned to fill the pulpits of Kansas City tomorrow. So far twenty women have been assigned and it is probable that there will not be a male preacher in a city pulpit tomorrow.

BULL-FIGHTING AND BEAR-BAITING SEASONS IN BOSTON'S NEW PASTURES

LAWSON IS WILLING TO BET

HELENA, Mont., Oct. 29.—The Heintz-Lawson controversy is becoming quite heated and is rapidly approaching a crisis. To start with, Mr. Lawson charged that Heintz sold to the Amalgamated company and offered to forfeit $1,000,000 if he could not produce a controlling interest in the United Copper Company's shares, which Lawson charged him with disposing of. Lawson today wired $5,000 to a Butte man to be deposited as a forfeit. This has been placed on exhibition in Butte and has created not a little excitement. Its effect on the approaching election is becoming a prominent factor and the outcome is awaited with general interest.

FLOODS IN EGYPT DAMAGE THE CROPS

LONDON, Oct. 29.—A. L. Webb, acting under secretary for public works at Cairo, has sent an extensive report to London regarding the crop outlook in Egypt. For the first time in many years the floods in the Blue Nile and Atbara river have been so bad that the population is faced with starvation. The total arid areas in East Ghizeh and Kenah provinces will be nearly 50,000 acres and 40,000 more are likely to remain dry in other parts of the country.

ARCHBISHOP ELDER IS MUCH IMPROVED

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Oct. 29.—Archbishop William Elder, who was taken seriously ill yesterday, was pronounced not improved at 9 o'clock tonight.

"His fever is higher," said his physician. "I do not think the end will come tonight, but I do not expect him to recover from this illness."

At 11 o'clock Dr. Decourtesy reported Archbishop Elder much better. His fever has abated and he was much improved in every way.

"If he keeps improving this way," said the doctor, "he will pull through."

SENATOR MORGAN WRITES A CAUSTIC LETTER TO JOHN HAY

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 29.—Smarting under the recent criticism of Secretary of State Hay in his speech at New York upon the attitude of democratic senators toward the Hay-Bunau-Varilla canal treaty, Senator John H. Morgan of Alabama has tonight addressed a public letter to Mr. Hay. It is caustic in its tone and reviews at length the canal negotiations between this government and that of Colombia.

"I can not understand," writes the senator, "the injustice and unseemly nature of your assault on the senators who voted against the ratification of your treaty when I know that they have always treated you with marked respect and on frequent occasions with much forbearance because of the severe pressure you have been subjected to in the conduct of your high office since the death of President McKinley. They did not count upon your ability to resist such control, but have not expected that its strenuous force upon your capitulation to its obvious in your speech in New York."

statement. After declaiming against this opposition to your treaty with that French interloper you say: 'There is one inevitable conclusion—they do not believe one word they say.' With such opinions as to the senators who oppose your policies they fully understand the sovereignty that they represent would not sink into subject provinces through your disdain and would be snuffed out as you and Buena Varilla have virtually extinguished the Republic of Colombia—the cherished friend of the United States during all its existence.

"God save us from the arrogance of your contempt and disdain, when you are compelled, in your high office to do the imperial will of a master whom you fear, and are led by the mercenary cunning of Bunau-Varilla and turn upon American senators who refuse to follow you."

The senator declares that it is not the "sneaking out of Panama" that disturbs the country, but it is "the sneaking into Panama," after having first "sneaked under the wing of the Panama canal," to find an excuse for a course that the country deeply deplored.

In speaking of Mr. Hay's letter to the late Dr. Herran, quoted recently by Senator Culberson in a public speech, the senator said: "Senator Culberson says you withheld that letter from the senate, as I understand his statement. I can only say that I never saw that letter, nor had I heard of it until it was mentioned in the (Culberson's) recent speech in New York. If it was suppressed it was not by any 'sneaking act' of the democrats."

In referring to Secretary Hay's declaration that it is not within the power of the president to declare war, the senator writes: "You seem to forget that you and the president can create situations through the use of the powers of the diplomacy that can compel any American citizen to enter the army and expose his life without respect to his opinion of your conduct in thus exposing him to danger of death. So you have been able to force the country into a situation which they were bound to maintain at any price. Still you chide and reprimand us for being true to the honor of the country and to use personality in supporting your acts, which we denounce as arbitrary, unjust and wicked. This is the advantage that might have over right when despotism instead of justice is in power."

FOREIGN TRADE A FIERCE FIGHT

Senator Fairbanks Addresses a Large Audience at Cincinnati During Which He Lauds the Memory of McKinley

SEVEN YEARS OF SUCCESS

Claims the Republican Party in That Time Has Increased the Foreign Balance of United States Over Three Billion Dollars, All in Gold

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Oct. 29.—Senators Fairbanks and Foraker addressed a great republican meeting tonight at Music Hall. About five thousand persons heard the speeches and half as many more were turned away. Several political clubs and other marchers paraded before the meeting and with many bands, the line of march was glaringly illuminated with fireworks.

Senator Fairbanks said in part: "In all the story of the republic there has been no greater, no wiser, no better president than our great leader in 1896 and 1900, William McKinley. When he laid down his mighty responsibility at Buffalo his constitutional successor took up his uncompleted task. It was a serious moment. The American people were bowed with an uncommon sorrow. They loved their president dearly and lovingly their was his master passion. In that serious moment, Theodore Roosevelt, brave-hearted, honest-headed, loyally unchanged, stood up before the American people and said: 'I pledge myself to carry out the great policies of William McKinley. For three years I have been that pledge.' The policies of William McKinley have been carried out and they are policies upon which the republican party invokes the intelligent and deliberate judgment of the American people on November 8."

"Now, my democratic friends, would you think it reasonable to expect the republican party in seven years to so adjust the affairs of the government to so stimulate the activity of the people through the adoption of its policies as to increase our foreign balance $383,000,000? Yet we have done it. Our foreign balance in the last seven years has been more than $3,900,000,000. It has been more than a billion dollars. Is that not enough? Well, we have increased it more than three billion. Yes, more than that. In the past seven years we have increased the foreign balance of the United States more than $3,900,000,000. Our democratic friends deliberately propose to overturn the present administration and its policies. Will the adoption of democratic policies yield such results as I have given you? Will the democratic administration inspire the people with confidence? Will it enable them to extend our trade and commerce so as to win our trophies from all nations of the earth? That $3,900,000,000 paid to the United States was not in paper or silver; it was in gold, of equal gold, for international commerce knows nothing but gold."

FAIRBANKS SPEAKS IN HIS HOME STATE

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 29.—Senator Fairbanks made seven speeches at Indiana points today, and on Monday will begin the tour of the state as laid out in the platform agreed upon by the state and national committees.

He has just received at all the places where his train stopped today, and crowds ranging from 2,500 to 4,000 greeted him. At Lawrence, there was a rush of people to the train of shakelands. The senator received a bouquet shower from the hands of some twenty ladies just as his train pulled out.

In his speeches at English, Huntington, Merano, Croydon Junction, North Vernon, and other points, he contrasted conditions under the last democratic administration and those which have prevailed for the last seven years. He said that the political parties should be judged by their past record and not by promises for the future; that the voters who cast their ballot for the republican national ticket cast it for continuation of the present conditions; the best the country has ever known. In closing he appealed for the voters to support President Roosevelt.

REPUBLICANS CLAIM KANSAS

TOPEKA, Kan., Oct. 29.—W. R. Stubbs, Republican State chairman, says today that the roll of voters in 1904 out of a total of 2,200 precincts shows that Roosevelt will have 160,000 votes more than Parker in Kansas. He claims the election of the state ticket, the re-election of eight Congressmen and a majority in each branch of the State Legislature.

TAFT A SPEAKER

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 29.—Secretary of War Taft, former Governor Black and Julius M. May, republican candidate for state attorney general, were the speakers tonight at a largely attended republican mass meeting. They will receive grants of crown land in the vicinity of the new Orenburg-Tashkent railway.

Japanese Are on the Offensive in Second Battle of Shahke, and Hand-to-hand Engagements Have Occurred

THEY TAKE HIGH HILL

Was Strongly Entrenched Position, But Japs Climbed Its Sides and Forced Russians From It—Machine Guns Are Captured by Japanese

LONDON, Oct. 30.—The second battle of the Shaike river is today raging in all fury along the line and terrific slaughter attends the fighting. Dispatches from Mukden announce that the Japanese are on the offensive and had already driven the Russians from at least two positions of strategic importance south of the Shaike river. The fighting is characterized by the same ferocity as the first Shaike battle and the losses on both sides are enormous.

Dispatches from St. Petersburg assert that the Russians are attacking at some points along the front, but that neither side has yet gained a material advantage.

Dispatches from Mukden announce that the army under General Kuroki was again taking the most active part in the engagement. A detachment of his troops gave a stirring exhibition of sharp and determined fighting in the direction of high hill ten miles from the railroad. The hill was the important position held by the Russians south of the Shaike, and was strongly defended. A regiment of Russians, with five machine guns was entrenched at the summit of the hill. The Japanese attack was entirely unsuspected and was launched with the greatest dash and daring. In the face of a galling fire the Japanese rushed the Russians' trenches and drove the defenders from their positions. Two machine guns were captured by the Japanese and many Russians were shot down as they fled in disorder down the steep hill side. The fiercest kind of hand to hand fighting raged for half an hour before the last of the Russians were driven from the trenches.

General Gakhov's reports to St. Petersburg today is as follows: "On October 26, the Russian cavalry made a reconnaissance in force in the direction of Kekoulai. A division commanded by Prince Tumanoff forced the enemy from the village of Hailaosa, on the right bank of the Hun, opposite the village of Kekoulai."

"To assume a battle formation a detachment of about 1,500 infantry, with four guns and two squadrons, under Lieutenant Yagodin, supported on the flank of another squadron of cavalry, attacked the enemy, who fled to the village of Hailaosa. We had three soldiers killed and two wounded."

"On October 26 a reconnaissance was made on our right flank by several detachments of sharpshooters, after an hour and a half's preparation by fire from mortars and the firing guns the detachments advanced at 1 p. m. toward the villages of Tehailampu and Bozmanny. The latter was taken by assault by sharpshooters, the enemy's forces retiring. Two of our officers were wounded."

THE RUSSIAN LOSSES

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—General Sakharoff reports no general fighting on October 28. There was occasional fighting on Monday, but the firing was insignificant. The nights of October 28 and 29 were quiet. The general staff today issued a statement that the number of killed, wounded and missing in the fighting which began October 9, and ended October 18, totaled 500 officers and 45,000 men.

SPECIAL HONORS FOR HIM

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—A rumor is prevalent in official circles here that Admiral Alexieff will be appointed vice president of the committee on the far eastern affairs. Those who are responsible for the report profess ignorance as to the extent of the powers with which the viceroy will be invested in that capacity. According to this rumor Alexieff will reside at the winter palace. This proves conclusively that his party is still a powerful one, and that they have succeeded in persuading the czar to follow the viceroy's recall with the conferring of special honors in order to confound Alexieff's opponents.

BENBOW'S AIRSHIP FAILS TO FLY IN AIR

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Oct. 29.—The anticipated Benbow airship flight at the World's Fair Saturday afternoon was a fiasco. Fully 15,000 persons who had paid admission did not hesitate to express their opinions in no mild terms regarding the failure.

At 2:20 p. m., under perfect atmospheric conditions, Mr. Benbow, the California inventor, was apparently ready to start on a lengthy flight. At the last minute, however, he announced that he feared the bag had been over-inflated and would burst. A large amount of the gas was allowed to escape and when the ascent was attempted the "Meteor" failed to rise more than twenty feet, and after bouncing back and forth from the ground several times the attempt was abandoned.

STEEL MONGERS VISIT THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—Members of the British Iron and Steel Institute, with Andrew Carnegie at their head, were received at the White House this afternoon by President Roosevelt. The reception took place in the blue parlor as the social functions are held in winter, while the arsenal band played patriotic airs in the corridor.

President Roosevelt chatted with many of the visitors, and expressed the greatest interest in their organization.

A reception is being tendered the visitors at the Corcoran art gallery tonight. Tomorrow will be spent in sight seeing.

I will gladly give any sick one a full dollar's worth of my remedy to test. Can any ailing one refuse this?

No one else has ever tried so hard to remove every possible excuse for doubt.

In eighty thousand communities—in more than a million homes—Dr. Shoop's Restorative is known. There are those all around you—your friends and neighbors, perhaps—whose suffering it has relieved. There is not a physician anywhere who dares tell you I am wrong in the new medical principles which I apply. And for six solid years my remedy has stood the severest test a medicine was ever put to—I have said, "If it fails it is free"—and it has never failed where there was a possible chance for it to succeed.

But this mountain of evidence is of no avail to those who shut their eyes and doze away in doubt. For doubt is harder to overcome than disease. I can not cure those who lack the faith to try.

So now I have made this offer. I disregard the evidence. I lay aside the fact that mine is the largest medical practice in the world, and come to you as stranger. I ask you to believe not one word that I say till you have proven it for yourself. I offer to give you outright a full dollar's worth of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. It is the utmost unbounded confidence that I suggest. It's open and frank and fair. It is the supreme test of my limitless belief.

I ask no deposit--no promise. There is nothing to pay, either now or later. The dollar bottle is free

I want no references—no security. The poor have the same opportunity as the rich. The very sick, the slightly ill, invalids, and women whose only trouble is an occasional "dull day"—to one and all I say, "Merely write and ask. I will send you an order on your druggist. He will give you free, the full dollar package."
My offer is as broad as humanity itself. For sickness knows no distinction in its ravages. And the restless patient on a downy couch is no more welcome than the wasting sufferer who staggers through the lagging hours in a dismal hotel.
I want EVERYONE, EVERYWHERE to test my remedy.

There is no mystery—no miracle. I can explain my treatment to you as easily as I can tell you why cold freezes water and why heat melts ice. Nor do I claim a discovery. For every detail of my treatment is based on truths so fundamental that none can deny them. And every ingredient of my medicine is as old as the hills it grows on. I simply applied the truths and combined the ingredients into a remedy that is practically certain.
But my years of patient experiment will avail you nothing if you do not accept my offer. For facts and reason and even belief will not cure. Only the remedy can do that.

Inside Nerves!

Only one out of every 98 has perfect health. Of the 97 sick ones, some are bed-ridden, some are half sick, and some are only dull and listless. But most of the sickness comes from common cause. The nerves are weak. Not the nerves you ordinarily think about—not the nerves that govern your movements and your thoughts.
But the nerves that unguided and unknown night and day, keep your heart in motion—control your digestive apparatus—regulate your liver—operate your kidneys.
These are the nerves that wear out and break down.
It does no good to treat the ailing organ—the irregular heart—the disordered liver—the rebellious stomach—the deranged kidneys. They are not to blame. But go back to the nerves that control them. There you will find the seat of the trouble.
There is nothing new about this—nothing any physician would dispute. But it remained for Dr. Shoop to apply this knowledge—to put it to practical use. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is the result of a quarter century of research along this very line. It does not dose the organ or deplete the pain—but it does go at once to the nerve—the inside nerve—the control nerve—and builds it up, and strengthens it and makes it well.

A Bond of Sympathy

The inside nerve system is plainly the most important system in the human body. Our life rests on the action of the vital organs. While they work we live. When they stop we die. While they perform their duties properly we are well. When they perform their duties poorly we are ill. And the vital organs, each and every one, depend upon the inside nerve system, for it not only regulates them—it operates and controls them.
The work of the inside nerves is not only the most important—it is the most laborious. For our other nerves are excited only as we feel inclined, and when we are tired we rest. But the stomach, the heart, the liver, the kidneys, must constantly and continuously—day and night—fresh or tired, perform their necessary duties. We have no way of knowing even that they are tired or fatigued save the weakening of the organs they supply.
But this strong bond of sympathy has a useful purpose. For it shows us clearly that we are all one. It tells us that if we strengthen every branch. This is why so many ailments can be cured by one form of treatment. For almost all sickness is nerve sickness—inside nerve sickness and other kinds of sickness, such as purely organic derangements are frequently due to lack of proper inside nerve treatment.

Many Ailments—One Cure

I have called these the inside nerves for simplicity's sake. Their usual name is the "sympathetic" nerves. Physicians call them by this name because they are so closely allied—because each is in such close sympathy with the others. The result is that when one branch is allowed to become impaired, the others weaken. That is why one kind of sickness leads into another. That is why cases become "complicated." For this delicate nerve is the most sensitive part of the human system.
Does this not explain to you some of the uncertainties of medicine—is it not a good reason to your mind why other kinds of treatment may have failed? I will help you to understand your case. What more can I do to convince you of my interest—of my sincerity?

Simply Write Me

The first free bottle may be enough to effect a cure—but I do not promise that. Nor do I fear a loss of possible profit if it does. For such a test will surely convince the cured one beyond doubt, or dispel, or disbelieve, that every word I say is true.
The offer is open to everyone, everywhere. But you must write ME for the free dollar bottle. It is free. I will help you to understand your case. What more can I do to convince you of my interest—of my sincerity?
For a free order Book 1 on Dyspepsia, a full dollar bottle Book 2 on the Heart, address Dr. Shoop, Box 383, Racine, Wis. State which book you want. Book on Rheumatism.

FOR STOMACH TROUBLES

The stomach is controlled by a delicate nerve called the solar plexus. Prize fighters know that a blow over the stomach—solar plexus blow—means a sure knockout. For this nerve is ten times as sensitive as the pupil of your eye. Yet the solar plexus is only one of the centers of the great inside nerve—the control nerve. It is one of the master nerves. The stomach is its slave. Practically all stomach trouble is nerve trouble—inside nerve trouble—solar plexus trouble. Dr. Shoop's Restorative strengthens the inside nerves—strengthens the solar plexus—and the stomach trouble disappears.

FOR KIDNEY TROUBLES

The kidneys are the blood filters. They are operated solely by the inside nerves. The branch which operates them and regulates them is called the renal plexus. When the renal plexus is weak or irregular, the kidneys become clogged with the very poisons they should throw off. No kidney treatment can clean them out, or cure them and one stage leads into another until after a while the kidneys themselves begin to break down and dissolve. There is only one way to reach the kidneys and the renal plexus—inside nerves that control them, which Dr. Shoop's Restorative alone strengthens and restores.

FOR HEART TROUBLE

Your heart beats more than ten thousand times a day. And every heart beat is an impulse of the inside nerve branch called the cardiac plexus. The heart is a muscle, but it is the nerve that makes the muscle do the work. An irregular or weak heart is, almost in every instance, the direct result of a weak or irregular nerve. Dr. Shoop's Restorative restores the cardiac plexus, just as it restores the renal plexus and the renal nerves. For all are equal parts of the great inside nerve system—the power nerves—the master nerves.

FOR WOMANLY TROUBLES

Almost all of the troubles that are peculiar to woman are caused by weakness of the inside nerves. There is no need to doctor or dose an ailing organ when it depends alone for its supply of energy on the inside nerves. Inside nerve weakness, if not attended to, will spread. The common name for the inside nerves is the "Sympathetic Nerves." Each center is in close sympathy with the other, and when one becomes deranged, general weakness and derangement frequently ensue. Dr. Shoop's Restorative acts on the inside nerves and removes the cause of weakness, permanently and forever.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative

For economy's sake, keep a bottle of Dr. Shoop's Restorative always on the pantry shelf. When off days come a few doses will increase your appetite—relieve your dullness—set you right. Neglected, these dull, listless spells may develop into serious illness. A dose in time is the truest economy.

In The Churches

Today will be a great day for Fort Worth Methodism. There will be no services at any of the Methodist churches in this city at the 11 o'clock hour. All the pastors have called in their regular morning service and will unite in one great service at the city hall. Dr. Alonzo Monk, pastor of the First Methodist church, will preach the sermon of the occasion. Dr. Monk will, no doubt, be at his best for this great gathering. The city hall will be filled to its capacity. The Polytechnic students will come in on eight extra cars for this service. They will occupy the western side of the first floor.
The Polytechnic College has been making the most remarkable strides during the past two years. The class rooms in the large three-story stone building are crowded to their capacity. The three-story brick building known as the "George Mulkey" hall, was filled during the opening day of school. The other buildings used formerly are also filled with students. The young ladies' home is crowded to its utmost capacity, and every student is desiring to enter. Every available room for piano practice has been put into service and new ones are needed.

The Christian church which has this at its special plea, held last week in St. Louis the greatest convention in the history of Christianity. The communion service of 12,000 people, the overtures from the Free Baptists at this meeting, the movements in all great religious bodies toward unity, will be discussed in this address.

At 7:30 p. m., immediately after the evening prayer, the third of the "Free Talk on Religion From Representative Citizens" will be given by Professor Hogg, superintendent of the public schools. His topic will be, "Why I am a Public School Man."

WHY YOU SHOULD TAKE WINE OF CARDUI

Wine of Cardui is a mild medicine, but a powerful tonic that is unrivalled in its success in the treatment of the diseases peculiar to women.

Over 1,500,000 suffering women have been cured of troubles that ordinarily are thought to require the expensive treatment of specialists, simply by taking this great woman's tonic.

Wine of Cardui recommends itself to modest women of moderate means, because it can be taken in the privacy of the home without submitting to a humiliating local examination and subsequent dangerous treatment.

The treatment is not costly and every sufferer can afford it.

If you are a victim of female weakness in any form Wine of Cardui is the medicine that you should take and you cannot afford to lose any time in starting the treatment. Your trouble is ever growing worse—never better.

Wine of Cardui never fails to benefit even chronic troubles of the most serious nature, and in nine out of ten cases it brings an absolute cure. 1,500,000 cured women endorse Wine of Cardui.

GETTING A DIVORCE
(Special Cable to Telegram. Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

VIENNA, Oct. 29.—Princess Alice of Bourbon, who created a sensation some time ago by getting a divorce from her husband, the Prince of Schoenbergr-Waldenburg, and who afterwards made up with him and started on a pilgrimage on foot to Rome, only to leave him for good, has again stirred up gossip by falling in love with an Italian, Lieutenant del Prado.

In spite of the furious opposition of her father, Don Carlos, the princess declares that she will marry the penniless officer in November, after the birth of her child which is expected to take place in the beginning of that month.

FAVORITE PERFUMES OF ROYAL WOMEN

True it is that certain perfumes and certain flowers suggest certain persons. A knowledge of the favorite perfumes of royal women of Europe will be of interest.

The favorite perfume of Queen Alexandra is Ess bouquet, which has been in use in the royal family since the year 1829. The recipe is supposed to be secret, and to be handed down from one generation to another of the court perfumers. The fact is that this perfume is a combination of musk, amber, attar of roses, violets, jasmine, orange-flowers and lavender.

Queen Wilhelmina of Holland is particularly fond of eau de Cologne, of which she uses a large bottle every day. At the same time she prefers the use of specially-prepared soaps, creams and powders, as she considers that a daily warm bath, followed by a cold douche, is the best thing possible to preserve the admirable complexion which she is justly proud of.

Carmen Sylva, the white-haired queen of Roumania, uses an essence of which she alone possesses the recipe. It is made of flowers secretly gathered in an unknown forest, but which she is as justly proud of as the crown she wears.

The princess of Roumania is far simpler in her tastes, and uses only three perfumes—attar of roses, triple essence of jasmine, and white heliotrope.

SOMETHING NEW IN SOUTACHE AND EMBROIDERY

Soutache braid, both silk and wool, is extensively used for the ornamentation of silk and wool fabrics. Here is a design in soutache and embroidery, with a brocade background. The waist is of golden brown silk. The silk soutache is of a lighter brown and the embroidery is done in the various shades of brown silk. "A" shows the detail of the embroidery. "B" is the embroidered portion of the design; "C" is the French knot; "D" and "E" represent the soutache braid. The embroidery down the front is done upon a separate band of the material and set on to the bodice. The collar design completes the embroidery at the throat. The larger design at the shoulders may or may not be used. The cuff has the same design. The yoke of the waist may be finished with rows of soutache and French knots in scalloped or straight effect. If the waist is to be more dressy, chenille may be substituted for the silk embroidery.

MASONIC HOME

Annual Report of Dr. Frank Rainey, the Manager, as Submitted to the Directors in Their Regular Meeting

MUCH GOOD IS DONE

There Is Training for the Orphans Who Are Cared For, and They Are Sent Out in the World Capable of Earning Their Own Way

Following is in part the report of the management of the Masonic Widows and Orphan Home during the fiscal year which began Oct. 1, 1903, and ended Sept. 30, 1904, submitted recently by Dr. Frank Rainey.

The Household. During the period just mentioned the highest number of residents at any one time to be cared for was sixty-nine girls, sixty boys and nine aged widows. Everything moved along so smoothly that there was no unusual occurrence, unless the graduation of eleven pupils should be deemed a matter of unusual interest. The fiscal year of this institution begins Oct. 1 each year and ends Sept. 30 of the following year, therefore my report covers a history of the condition and management of the affairs of the home during the period which commenced Oct. 1, 1903, and ended Sept. 30, 1904.

The expenses for that year exceed those of any preceding year, because of the increased number of residents who had to be clothed, fed and otherwise cared for, and because of increased facilities provided for the instruction of boys in manual training; also for improvements on steam heating system, unusual consumption of coal and the lengthening of the sewer.

The Object of It. There is an impression among those of our fraternity who have never visited this institution that it was established for aged and destitute Masons as well as widows and children, and also for those who are self-supporting and able to pay board for adults and board and tuition for the children. Therefore it should not be admitted to the institution for which this institution was established. The Grand Lodge of Texas conceived the idea of helping those only who need help, and to do it, as far as possible, in a philanthropic way. In order to do this it was thought best to establish an institution for the benefit and care of Masonic orphans and Masonic aged widows who have no means of support. It was decided that no widow or orphan should be admitted into the institution, unless the husband of the widow or the father of the orphans were Master Masons, and members in good standing of subordinate lodges in the State of Texas at the time of their death. Then it is plain that this home was not intended for widows and orphans who can maintain themselves at home or abroad or for aged and destitute Masonic brethren. If a Masonic widow marry a man who is not a Mason she divorces herself, but not her Masonic children, from the privileges of Free Masonry. Unless some restrictions should be placed upon admissions this will have to be covered with buildings to accommodate the host of applicants, many of whom it would be folly to entertain. The Masonic fraternity is willing to help, but not willing to care all creation. By firmly keeping within the limits prescribed by prudence and administrative ability, the home has been able to do much good to many worthy persons. If in the beginning sentiment and sympathy had had the upper hand, giving way to indiscriminate admissions, all of the available funds of the home would have to be devoted solely to the purpose of feeding and clothing the residents dealing with them merely as paupers. Prudent limitations to admission enable the work of the institution to rise to the dignity of righteous benevolence and future benefit. The residents are not only clothed and fed, but many of them—the children—are educated in a way that relieves the home of their care and to make themselves useful, self-sustaining citizens. The boys and girls in this institution are taught some useful work, and none allowed to sow the seeds of idleness. The household, manual and manual training departments, taken as a whole form a great busy hive of industry. These students assist in all household

TREATMENT OF PILES

Permanence of Cure the True Test. Many so-called pile remedies will afford the user slight relief, but the majority of those afflicted do not expect more than this.

The average sufferer, after having tried every preparation recommended for the cure, comes to the conclusion that there is no cure except by an operation, and rather than undergo this "last resort" he suffers on, resigned to the situation, so far as may be. The attention of those interested is invited to the following experience: "After ten years of suffering from blind, bleeding and protruding piles, and after using every remedy I could hear of without any benefit, I finally bought a fifty-cent box of Pyramid Pile Cure, and used it with such good results I bought next a dollar box, which finished up the job. That was nearly six years ago, and as far as piles is concerned I am cured, and have never felt a symptom of them since. Many others have used this remedy by my advice, with the same results, and I always recommend it to sufferers with piles." C. H. Fotts, Burlington, Kan.

Testimony like this should convince the most skeptical the Pyramid Pile Cure not only cures, but cures to stay cured. It is in the form of a suppository, can be applied in the privacy of the home, directly to the parts affected, and does its work quickly and painlessly.

Druggists generally sell this famous remedy for fifty cents a package and sufferers are urged to buy a package now and give it a trial tonight. Accept no substitutes. A little book describing the causes and cure of piles is published by the Pyramid Drug Company, Marshall, Mich., and same will be sent free to any address for the asking.

and farm work, outside of the exercises in the schoolroom, and their technical and shop work.

No Dangerous Illness. There have been no dangerous cases of sickness or epidemics of any kind, and no death since the opening of the institution, which occurred five years ago. Although quite a number of aged widows have had their rooms here for years, their ages running from 82 to 90, none of them have passed away. They have a residence, dining-room, provisions and a cook set apart for them and comfortable bedrooms, which are well heated with steam and lighted with electricity, hence they know but little about trouble. They have learned to regard this place as their home, and so when off on a visit, if taken sick, make haste to return, knowing that they will receive careful attention and good nursing in their Masonic home.

The School and Manual Training. The school session, which closed July 1, was a useful one in every respect. Fairly good work was done in all the schoolrooms under excellent teachers, in spite of the fact that the boys were frequently interrupted during school, to answer emergency calls for assistance in the household and farm work. This difficulty is now, to some extent, obviated by rearrangement of the schoolroom classes. One great feature of the session was the graduation of five boys, ages 16, 17, 17, 17, 18, and six girls, ages 17, 17, 17, 18, 18, 19. The girls had studied the literary course and besides had taken such technical studies as bookkeeping, typewriting and stenography and practical work in the way of sewing and millinery. A teacher from the High School at Fort Worth came twice a week to teach the graduating girls how to do good cooking. The boys also took the same literary course, and were sent for practice at certain hours each day in the work of the shop, and of the manual training rooms, and also in the boiler and engine rooms, learning to govern the steam heating and electric light plants under the instruction of the engineer. Boys at the age of 17 every week, two hours each day, that they may, during their school days, learn the correct and useful way from the beginning to handle all kinds of woodworking tools. It is worth noting that the school studies co-ordinated with the manual studies in order that the brain, the hands and the eyes may be in training, hand and hand, being mutually beneficial, because of the physical and mental reaction arising from the shifting of school studies from the manual exercises during the day and strengthening of the mental powers in school work, derived from the studies in the concrete, as illustrated by shop exercises.

FARM AND DAIRY. In accordance with custom, it is well to say that farming is and that there are not many who fully understand its advantages and disadvantages, more especially the latter. There is a greater difference of opinion concerning the best methods of cultivation than there is about any other one subject. The ability to adapt methods to climatic conditions requires constant vigilance, good judgment and great perseverance; yet failure comes easily, and may be conservatively regarded as the normal outcome, and suggests an exception. Johnson grass, intelligently considered, may be regarded as a product of the farm, because, in order to make it thrive and produce abundantly, every farmer endeavors to do with corn, cotton, wheat, oats, etc., the ground must be plowed and harrowed or diked every year, early in March. Of this kind of hay, two crops were harvested. The number of bales was 2,450, which averaged about thirty-five bales to the ton, making about seventy tons, valued at $5.50 per ton. The price is low, but as there was no place to stow away the second crop until winter, it was prudent to sell it at that price, rather than attempt to keep it for better prices later on. As this is strictly a hay farm, it might be just as well to build a shed to protect the hay until February. When better prices usually prevail. In this connection, it is well to suggest that some shelter for milk cows, in winter, should be provided. On account of inferior seed corn, unreliable labor and consequent bad stand, the corn crop was a poor one. Only about two hundred and seventy bushels were gathered from eighteen acres of land. A two-acre crop of alfalfa, on the upland, did fairly well for its first year. In the dairy department of the farm a herd of from eighteen to twenty-two cows was milked during the year 1903 and 1904, the fiscal or business year of this institution, and the amount of milk obtained was about twelve thousand gallons, all of which could easily have been sold at 16 2-3 cents per gallon, delivered at the dairy. All of it was consumed in the raising of hogs. During the five years' existence of the institution, not a hog or pig was lost from disease, and only a few from accidents. The Poland-China breed is the kind we raise, and they are fed mainly on house slops and corn, with some sorghum in the spring and summer months. Plenty of good artesian water. The three largest hogs weighed 480, 462 and 425 pounds, respectively. Fresh pork to the amount of 6,500 pounds was butchered, and was eaten by the residents during the year. There is no expense in raising hogs except for corn, because the boys care for them. Chickens and turkeys are not successfully raised on this farm, chiefly because of the inability to get some experienced person to look after them. Boys can not handle business of that kind except in a disastrous way. I respectfully suggest that some further improvement of our front lawn should be made. Our spasmodic efforts toward cultivating and adorning the grounds, resulting from want of funds and from the scarcity of reliable labor, has delayed, rather too long, such improvements as would have adorned and beautified the grounds, and it is necessary that the same be done before the year closes to completion. It can be done without very great expense.

THE HEATING PLANT. The board directed at the last meeting, June 24, that the superintendent should have the steam heating pipes rearranged throughout all the buildings, and completely covered with asbestos. The work has been satisfactorily done up to the present, at a cost of $512.95. The main line steam pipe, from the boiler house to the center of the original building, was first covered with asbestos and then encased in eight-inch sewer pipe before being covered. The pipe which leads to the well, for pumping purposes, was covered the same way so when everything is completed, which will be soon, the consumption of coal should be much less.

DUCKS GOING WEST

WACO, Texas, Oct. 29.—Homer Wells of this city, who is good authority in such matters, states that most of the ducks which should have passed southward through this section this fall have gone further west in their passage to the coast, owing to the fact that there had been rains out in that country and there was more water and also other things needed as food. The country out about Midland, he says, has had plenty of ducks some time, and in fact the entire strip visited by rain appears to have attracted the ducks. They followed the rain belt in numbers and comparatively few early ducks came this way. However, they have appeared at points in north Texas and the territory and it may be that the second installment will pass through this portion of Texas, as rains have now fallen generally.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING

Colonel West also said yesterday that in January there will be a meeting held at Fort Worth of all officers of the Third Regiment known as the "Third Regiment Association," the object of which association is to elevate the standard of the personnel of its regiment and to work with the legislature for the proper recognition of the military of the state. All of the other officers of the National Guard will be invited to attend the meeting and urged to form similar associations in each regiment. Colonel West said, when asked further the objects of the association: "The fact is, we do more police duty for the state of Texas than is commonly known to the public. In fact it is a matter of record that there has never been a time that a prisoner or a jail needed guarding from mob law, but that the military of the state have been called out to assist the peace officers, yet this fact has never seemed to be appreciated by the legislators. There is a whole lot of things the military of the state needs, and an effort will be made this year to have the legislature help supply these needs. Above all

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty. Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose. Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system. Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables. Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic. It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh. All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered charcoal, low charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey. The daily use of these lozenges will soon result in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit. A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, indigestion, flatulency, and all the ailments that purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

AMUSEMENTS

Several years ago "The Telegram" ventured the prediction that "The Burgo-master" would live longer than any of the musical comedies which had come out of the east, and the production so far has carried out the truth of the prediction. It is now in its fifth season, and its reception yesterday at the matinee and last night in this city proved that it has lost none of its popularity, and the large audience at the matinee convinced Manager Cullen that he made no mistake in taking a special train out of El Paso to reach this city in time for the afternoon performance. The play was well received. There have been some improving touches given it since its last appearance here, and with more wardrobe and new scenery, with pretty girls and more of them, added to the familiar features which have made it so popular, it won much applause. The matinee was crowded and last night the house was filled to the doors. Oscar Figman is again in the leading role as the Burgomaster, and his excellent make-up and comedy pleasings, Olga von Hatzfeldt is singing the part of Willie Van Astorbilt, and right cleverly does she carry the part of the young man about town. She is pretty, looks good in trowsers and her rendition of "The Tale of the Kangaroo" and "I Love You, Dear, and Only You" gained loud applause. "The Tale of the Kangaroo" is one of the popular airs of the popular comedy, and the other song is one of the sweetest sentiment ever heard. Miss Louise Bracke is good to look upon in the part of Ruth, and he has a very good voice. Fred Bailey has the part of Talkington, the actor in hard luck. The performance was good from start to finish.

Kansas City Southern Railroad, Dallas headquarters, is in the city. Messrs. Thomas and William Conlan, Belfast, Ireland, are registered at the Rosen Hotel. Mrs. J. A. If you wish to win a home with your best girl, take her to Blythe's today and try these lovely hot drinks. Blythe's confectionery is headquarters for all the latest drinks. The most complete menu of this kind to be found in the State. Miss Susie Johnson of Palestine, who has been visiting the Misses Mayfield at the Rosen hotel for the past two months, returned home last evening. Mrs. Groom will sing "Ave Maria," with violin obligato, by Professor Schreiner at the morning services at the Christian Tabernacle today. The little 5-year-old daughter of J. W. Pemberton, the night Texas and Pacific station master, is recovering from a severe case of typhoid fever. The little one has been sick for over two months. Abner Cobb, connected with the Albert Taylor Dramatic Company, will spend Sunday with his parents, returning to the company at Chickasha, I. T., Monday morning. A place of ease, quiet and luxury, where good service is guaranteed and the menu the most elaborate at popular prices. Visit Blythe's and test that which delights the connoisseur of hot drinks. The law firm of Stanley, Spoons & Thompson, which has been in existence for many years, was yesterday dissolved, and hereafter the old firm will be known as Spoons & Thompson. These gentlemen will continue to represent the Fort Worth and Denver City Railroad Company, with offices in the Fort Worth National bank. F. O. Stanley, who retires from the firm, will do a general law practice. Daily complaints are coming to the police concerning negro washwomen about the city, who are making the life of some of the housewives a burden by their arbitrary methods. Cases are reported where these women take away washing and in a short time afterward return to the house and wish money paid to them in advance for the work. If they are refused they tell the housewife that they will not do the washing, neither will they return it. The result is that the police are called in to straighten out the difficulty.

A ST. LOUIS BOY IS WINNING HONOR IN GERMANY

He is the First American Male Singer to Be So Much Sought After in That Country—Has Fine Voice

(Special Cable to The Telegram—Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.) COLOGNE-ON-THE-RHINE, Oct. 29.—American girls who win grand opera honors in Europe had best look to their laurels. For the first time in history an American boy has built for himself a solid success in that line, even to the extent of being sought after by two of the most important Stadt theaters in Germany—here and in Munich. His name is Louis Bauer, and up to ten years ago he was a resident of St. Louis, Mo. He studied singing in Vienna, where he developed into a basso of such range and volume that upon completion of his studies he was engaged as the principal basso of the company, whose performances of the standard Italian and German operas have made Cologne one of the most esteemed opera centers on the continent. During the last three years Bauer has sung all the famous roles of Edouard de Reszke and Plancon, beside many others in the characteristically German repertoire. Especially his singing of the great part of Hagen in "Goettedaemmerung"—the crucial Wagner role for bass, as that of "Brunnhilde" is for soprano—has endeared him to German audiences. Other roles in which he has distinguished himself and which make him an invaluable member of any grand opera organization, are: Landgraf Hermann in "Tannhaeuser," Caspar in "Freischutz," Daland in "The Flying Dutchman," beside Mephistopheles in "Faust," Marcellino in "Les Huguenots" and the other first bass roles of Italian opera. With the exception of Geraldine Farrar, no young American of the gentler sex has made any such record, and the proof of this statement lies in the spirited rivalry now going on between the Cologne and Munich theaters for Bauer's services. Bauer visited America last summer, and was one of the big soloists at the St. Louis Exposition's musical occasion. Before leaving Germany he had renewed his contract with the Cologne Opera for three years. As he was boarding the ship to return early in September two cablegrams were handed to him. One announced the death of the director of the Cologne Opera—which, technically, relieved him of responsibility as to his contract; the other, noting this fact, was a pressing offer from the director of the Munich Opera. Arriving in Cologne, Bauer decided not to forsake his old companions, among whom he had become famous, but refused to sign for more than one year. Upon this the Munich director offered a three years' contract, going into effect at the close of the current opera year, and a large increase of salary, and the rivalry now going on between the Cologne and Munich theaters for Bauer's services is the result. It is perhaps not known to Americans that while tenors are plenty, first-class basses are hard to find. It therefore comes as no surprise that this American boy is likely to command the record salary in Europe for a basso. Bauer says he has not yet made up his mind, the choice between Munich and Cologne being about even. This year the Cologne critics—notably the critic of the Rheinische Tagesblatt—proclaim him the first among operatic basses in Germany.

TEXAS HUNTERS TO BE ARRESTED IN TERRITORY

Indian Police Are Watching for the Sportsmen From This State Who Get Birds in That Territory

DENISON, Texas, Oct. 29.—A member of the Indian police informs your correspondent that Indian Agent Shoemaker will make a heroic effort this fall and winter to protect game in the Five Nations. The Indian police have been instructed particularly to watch for Texas hunting parties, who are the worst offenders against the game laws. Any person caught taking game out of the territory will not only be arrested and fined, but their guns and all hunting appointments will be confiscated.

AN "OLD HOSS" SALE. DALLAS, Texas, Oct. 29.—One of the busiest scenes on Elm street today and up to a late hour tonight was at the building near Akard street, at which the Wells Fargo Express Company held its public auction sale of unclaimed goods. As fast as a bidder closed a sale he was given a number by the auctioneer, which number he was instructed to present after the sales had concluded and receive the package bearing the corresponding number. After the last package had been auctioned off there was a general rush by the parties holding the cards bearing numbers for the packages which they had purchased. As soon as a package was delivered the purchaser hurried to a light place to open it and ascertain what he had received for his money. In some cases the contents of the packages were of very small value, while in others the purchasers found they had made very good investments. In one case a package of carpenter's tools, valued at several dollars, was bought for 75 cents, and another party paid 50 cents for a large quantity of hair packing.

ENGLAND LOSES COTTON TRADE IN JAPAN

Reports From Kobe Are That There Is a Falling Off in Imports of Textile Goods This Year. LONDON, Oct. 29.—Reports from Kobe have caused alarm in British exporting circles. There is a falling off of many thousands of pounds in the imports of all kinds of textile goods. Cotton yarn manufactured in Japan is ousting the Lancashire produce and worsted goods and flannels are being manufactured in Osaka in such good quantity that the English goods no longer find a market. There is an increase in grain and sugar imports, but this does not make up for the loss in other lines. It is slowly dawning upon the British manufacturers that the much praised enterprises of the "little brown men" is likely to have its painful side and that British antagonism over their achievements will be considerably dampened by the cost of their enterprise to Great Britain.

STROKE OF PARALYSIS DALLAS, Texas, Oct. 29.—Henry Bell, a resident of Dallas for more than fifty years, is critically ill at his home, No. 142 Liberty street, as the result of a stroke of paralysis, which he received Friday afternoon. Mr. Bell was walking home about 4 o'clock and when he received the stroke he was in the neighborhood of Swiss and Cantrelog streets. He was conveyed to his home by friends.

BANKER COMMITS SUICIDE DELAVAN, Wis., Oct. 29.—Driven suddenly insane, James F. Latimore, vice president of the Latimore bank, shot and killed himself in the bank today. He was 71 years old and considered to be worth about $20,000. He had been very ill for some time with brain trouble, which is supposed to be the cause of the accident.

EDWARD J. JUDD ACCUSES OTHERS AND AS HE LEAVES COURT ROOM IS TAKEN INTO CUSTODY

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 29.—Edward J. Judd was arrested late today as he was leaving Justice Everett's court room, where he made sensational charges of bribery and falsifying of city council records against President Albert G. Wheeler of the Illinois Tunnel Company, former City Clerk Loeffler and Chief Clerk Edward H. Erhorn. The warrant charges Judd with embezzlement of $60 and was sworn out by Mrs. Mary C. Overlock before Justice Prindiville. Judd was taken before Justice Prindiville, where he gave bond in the sum of $300. His explanation of the charge is that some years ago he handled a case against an insurance company for Mrs. Overlock. He declares the woman owes him money and that the charges were trumped up to get him into trouble and block proceedings in the bribery case. Judd admitted on cross-examination before Justice Everett today that he had written repeated letters to the Illinois Tunnel Company in his alleged efforts to extort money from Mr. Wheeler. He also contradicted statements he had sworn to on the witness stand yesterday. "We propose to show that this is a black-mailing plot from beginning to end," said Attorney Alfred Austrian, counsel for Mr. Wheeler. On taking the stand Judd admitted he had written a letter to Mr. Wheeler, which was shown him yesterday and another letter written in New York, in which Judd had demanded for a loan of $200. "Didn't you lie in your statements you made to Mr. Wheeler in your letters?" "Well, yes, I said some things I did not mean."

MAKES CHARGES AND IS SELF ARRESTED

"In one letter you say you will repay him. Had you any such intention?" "No, I had not."

"Didn't you write Mr. Wheeler a letter threatening him with criminal prosecution if he did not give you $3,000?" "Yes, I believe I did."

"Yes, I believe I did." He had a contingent interest in the Illinois Tunnel Company, for which he asserted, Mr. Wheeler agreed that he should receive $50,000 in cash or its equivalent in stocks or bonds. He also stated that he was to receive a salary of $5,000 a year and that he drew the first quarter from July to October, 1902. Judd was at one time a very prominent attorney here, but lost cast and clients because of personal habits.

TURKEY GRANTS RIGHT TO A CABLE COMPANY. LONDON, Oct. 29.—The grant of a concession for laying a telegraph cable to Constantia, Turkey, has been signed by Hassab Bey and Baron Nordenflicht, representing the Eastern Europe Telegraph Company. The ceremony took place at the imperial palace at Constantinople. One of the conditions relates to the laying of the line from Cairo to El Arish and renewing the necessary plant in a way which will put Berlin in direct communication over German-Turkish wires only with Africa. The exclusive German right to land a cable in Roumania debarbs the Eastern Europe Telegraph Company from extending the new line in that direction.

The Clifton Case Reaches the Point of Argument After the Testimony for Both Sides Has Been Offered to Jury

EYE WITNESS TELLS OF IT

Alleges He Saw a Woman Do the Shooting as He Was Riding Along Rusk Street—Judge Smith Does Not Interfere With Federal Prisoner

In the forty-eighth district court the murder trial of the state agent Edward Clifton, who charged with having shot and killed Ab Patterson in the front of defendant's place on Rusk street several months ago, has occupied the attention of Judge Irbey Dunklin the greater part of the past week, and finally went to the jury late last night, after several hours of argument by both the representatives of the state and the defendant.

The defense held all along that the shot which killed Ab Patterson was fired by some one other than Edward Clifton and undertook to show this to be the case. It was held that one of the party with whom young Patterson was enjoying the night did the shooting, but the testimony introduced in the trial did not prove this to be the case, with the examining trial before Justice of the Peace John L. Terrell, testimony along these lines developed.

The most damaging testimony that was introduced was that of a man named Black, who lived in Fort Worth at the time of the tragedy, but who has since taken up his residence at Amarillo, Black, according to his statement, was employed at the packing house and in order to reach the plant by 1 o'clock in the morning, started from home about an hour earlier. He was riding a horse up Rusk street and was in front of the Clifton place when the shooting occurred. He testified that he saw a tall woman with dark hair emerge from the front door, with one hand holding the railing of the porch, and with the other shoot in the direction of several parties who were in the act of leaving the place. Black swore he heard a woman say: "See the n—r's run when I shoot."

This testimony, however, was not in harmony with that of the companions of unfortunate Ab Patterson, who swore that they heard the woman ask another inmate of the place for her gun. The testimony from these two sources proved to be conflicting.

There was an array of witnesses introduced by both the state and the defendant, much of which was at variance. The last witness was placed on the stand about 10 o'clock Saturday morning and a half hour later the arguments were commenced. Prosecuting Attorney O. S. Lattimore opened for the state in an hour's speech. He was followed by Jeff D. McLean, who is representing the accused, and the arguments were closed by Senator Odell of Johnson county, who made a strong speech in the interest of his side of the case.

During the entire day the forty-eighth district court room was packed to the doors with both men and women, drawn there, many of them, by idle curiosity. Late in the evening Judge Dunklin read the charge to the jury, which retired for the night.

At 9 o'clock last night Judge Dunklin before whom the Edward Clifton murder case was tried, concluded his lengthy charge to the jury. He charged in four counts as follows: Murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, manslaughter and negligent homicide. The charge was a voluminous one and covered every legal phase of the case, requiring nearly an hour in its delivery.

The court remained on the bench until 11 o'clock, when he announced that he would retire and instructed the deputy in charge of the defendant and the jury that in case the jury agreed to notify him and he would return to the court room.

The crowd remained in their seats until 11 o'clock, when the foreman of the jury notified Deputy Sheriff T. W. Jackson that it could not agree on a verdict and desired to retire for the night.

The defendant was escorted to the jail and the audience which had been in the court room the greater part of the day, quietly dispersed.

It is the opinion of attorneys who heard the case in its entirety that it will be a hung jury, while some believe that the defendant will be found guilty. The prisoner sat near her attorney, Jeff D. McLean, very much engrossed in what was going on in the court room that referred to her case, but in a rather dejected mood. When the jury received its charge the agent to the jury room she suddenly became very dispirited and frequently shed tears.

She told The Telegram that she regrets the affair and maintains her innocence of the charge on which she has just been tried for her life.

Should she come clear of the charge of murder she gave assurances that she would never again be compelled to face such a trying ordeal as this if she could possibly prevent it. The prisoner is a woman of education and is the daughter of one of the wealthiest stockmen in West Texas. On the stand during the trial she related the circumstances responsible for her fall. It's the same old story of misplaced confidence and love.

EAGLES OF TEXAS EXPECT MANY MEMBERS

Twenty-five initiations will be made by the Eagles tonight. The order is rapidly growing in Texas and by the time the next national convention of this order is held at Denver in September next Texas expects to send one of the largest delegations to this meeting of any of the states.

Speaking of the Denver convention Nat Kramer last night said that it would require two sections to carry the delegates from Texas. He said that the intention was to carry a brass band from this state and go to the convention in flying colors.

Mr. Kramer has just returned from making his annual visit to his sister, who lives in Louisville, Ky. Returning home he stopped over in St. Louis to see the World's Fair. He also paid a fraternal visit to the local lodge of Eagles in that city. The Eagles of St. Louis, he says, have just completed a new home at a cost of $40,000. Everywhere he went he says he noticed that the order was prosperous.

TO ASK FOR BIDS FOR CANAL LUMBER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—Bids for several million feet of lumber for use in the construction of the Panama canal are to be asked for by the canal commission shortly, and it is believed that under changed conditions of the bids the southern mills will get some large contracts.

In these new bids it will be stipulated that the material offered is for delivery on the isthmus either at Colon or Panama, and not at a port in this country, as was the stipulation in the first requisition for lumber, awards for which were made a few days ago.

It is hoped by the commission that this will stimulate the lumbermen of the south to get the transportation lines flying between the South Atlantic and Gulf coast to name reasonable rates of freight on this class of material from ports along these coasts to Colon.

The rubber exported from the Amazon river in the season of 1903-4 amounted to 67,314,116 pounds. The steam tramway line of Tiel-Buren-Culemborg, Holland, is open for bids on rails, ties and other materials.

Newbro's Herpicide

The Original Remedy that "Kills the Dandruff Germ."

THE HUNTERS CAME TOO LATE!

Their Faithful Dog has pointed out the True Remedy to Prevent Baldness, but the Hunters came too late—Chronic Baldness is incurable.

HERPICIDE A "HAIR-SAVER."

Newbro's Herpicide saves the hair by destroying the germ of microbe that is now known to be the cause of dandruff, falling hair and baldness. In chronic baldness the hair follicles are completely atrophied, causing the scalp to shrink and shine; little can be done in such cases except to save the remaining "fringe," and this is well worth saving, for it offers some protection against the cold.

The "Hair Grower" is a fallacy. It requires but a slight knowledge of Anatomy to know that the hair gets its life and strength from the hair-papilla at the bottom of the hair follicle, and the papilla in turn gets its nourishment direct from the blood; therefore nature is the only true hair grower. There are enemies of hair growth that cause hair loss and baldness. Invisible microbe germs enter the sebaceous glands, situated at the top of the hair follicles (Dr. Sabouraud of Paris says the microbe usually enters the scalp in youth), where one colony after another is established, until finally, after months and sometimes years, there is dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair. The Sebura also solidifies, causing dry, lustreless and brittle hair. Destroy this microbe growth with Newbro's Herpicide and protect the hair against reinfection, and it will grow as nature intended.

Newbro's Herpicide is a Twentieth Century Remedy. Its mission is to teach new rules for scalp cleanliness, new rules for hair preservation, and to supply a germ-destroying solution that will enable careful persons to have beautiful and luxuriant hair. Almost marvelous results follow the use of Herpicide, and if it does not do more than we claim for it, your money will refund your purchase price. As a hair dressing, it is truly exquisite, on account of its dainty and refreshing odor, which is characteristic. It contains no oil, grease or sedimentary substance, neither does it stain nor dye the hair. Stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

ADDITIONAL SOCIETY

MEMBERS AND GUESTS PRESENT WERE

THE HARMONY CLUB
Mrs. R. B. West read the following interesting paper on "Rag Time" in music at the last meeting of the Harmony Club. A number of her hearers requested its publication, which The Telegram takes pleasure in granting:

"Do you believe in rag time music? Yes, and no. An authority informs me that rag time music is marked by a peculiar rhythm which arises from regularly beginning each bar or phrase on an unaccented beat, which is prolonged into the accented one, so that the emphasis that would naturally fall on the latter is anticipated or hurried. This results in a peculiarly propulsive and exciting rhythm. The technical name for it is syncopation.

I am aware that rag time is quite the fad just now—but one must be a little careful sometimes in picking up a new fad and using it too extravagantly, for it is apt as in this case to hold unseemly dangers. On the other hand, that our government (made rag time to our military bands (the St. Louis Fair commission did the same) appears to me not wholly wise—for the American student feels in it a very true expression of American life. Not the best side to be sure, but the best he can find musically expressed.

The "yellow" side, fresh today, first heard—sensational and therefore wearing when heard a few times in succession. All the finer phases of American life have not yet found expression by our native composers.

The musical vulgarity in rag time is, of course, undeniable; but in spite of its trying vulgarity rag time is a national rhythm and in part a home product. It should not be suppressed by power (our government, for instance), but merely controlled by the musicians in the field and the growing improvement of taste.

Rag time appeals mostly to those who have not had musical advantages, and as all have not the opportunity of either hearing or studying the established standard of music—should those who possess cultivated taste wish to suppress it? Oh, no; not entirely—they would not even if it were possible.

There are perhaps no two terms more confused than good taste and cultivated taste. A child with a musical ear may have an inborn taste for music, but he can never have a cultivated taste until his perceptive faculties have been developed and he has studied thoroughly those masterpieces of beauty which are conceded to have established a standard.

Rag time has a respectable genesis; a venerable one, indeed. We need not go further back than to the music of the god-like Beethoven to find examples of rag time music, though formally known under a more respectable technical name, that of syncopation. So rag time music is simply syncopated rhythm overdone to please the present public taste.

That philosopher who contends that this music is popular just so far as its rhythmic movement—not its melodic or harmonic—is popular, is happy in his putting of a fine point on it.

Call it "coon time," "rag time," "syncopated time" or "what-not time." It unquestionably meets the demand for the man's present mundane environment. If you were to ask me if rag time music will be used among the glorified souls when time is no more, I unhesitatingly say, no.

"Music is a thing of the soul," "A rose lipped shell that murmurs of the eternal sea," "A strange bird singing the songs of another shore."

The more one studies and the deeper one delves into the tone wealth of the old masters the more does he chaff at rub-a-dub rhythmic rag time! That rag time is musically effective nobody denies.

Watch its effect on any audience if you happen to think differently about it. Nevertheless is rag time of the earth, earthy; rub-a-dub, rub-a-dub, rub-a-dub of the lower, lowest earth, earthy. The ordinary music listener wants to hear something that sets the head to nodding and the foot to stamping—something that he can grasp with his present rhythmic sense.

The present American music age has in it a noisy element which exalts rhythm pure and simple above tone. Hence it wants rag time in its music just now, not as Beethoven, Haydn and the other old masters sparingly used it, but as the gourmand does pepper in his food, it wants its music to be all pepper, so to speak.

It is the habit of the Philistine to get what he deems subtle irony. "Oh, yes; these Wagner fanatics and worshippers of classical music! Bah! It is all put on! It is cultivated taste." Of course it is cultivated taste, the result of long years of growth towards the appreciation of the noblest and best music.

I will close by giving a few simple and amusing ruses (out from "Tid-Bits") for judging the different styles of composition. By carefully following these one may know to what category a piece belongs and also whether it is to be admired or not.

"If it seems to be saying, 'One, two, three; hop, hop, hop,' or 'One, two, three, bang, bang, bang,' you may conclude that you are listening to something of a very low order, which is your duty to despise. But when you hear something that sounds as if an assorted lot of notes had been put into a barrel and were being persistently stirred up, like a kind of harmonious gruel, you may know its a fuge, and may safely assume an expression of profound interest.

"If the notes appear to have been dropped by accident and are fished up at irregular intervals in a sort of drowned condition. It is likely to be a nocturne, and nocturnes, you know, are lovely.

"Finally, if the notes appear to be dumped out in masses, and shoved vigorously into heaps, and then blown wildly into the air by explosions of dynamite, that's a rhapsody and rhapsodies are among the latest things in music."

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result. The inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular free.

SAVED HIS LIFE J. W. Davenport, Wingo, Ky., writes, June 14, 1902: "I want to tell you I believe Ballard's Snow Liniment saved my life. I was under the treatment of two doctors, and they told me one of my lungs was entirely gone, and the other badly affected. I also had a lump in my side. I don't think that I could have lived over two months longer. I was induced by a friend to try Ballard's Snow Liniment. The first application gave me great relief; two fifty-cent bottles cured me sound and well. It is a wonderful medicine and I recommend it to suffering humanity."

Every-Day Evidence!

New York Doctors have been located here a year now and have from time to time given dozens of testimonials from the most prominent people of not only Fort Worth, but over North Texas, of the wonderful cures received, many of whom had been told there was no cure for them by their family doctor. These doctors came here with the very highest endorsement commercially, as well as professionally, and the work done by them in the past has demonstrated that Specialists can do an advertising work and make cures and be honest with their patrons the same as any doctor or other profession. They have made cures here that entitle them to be recognized as specialists, and as they have continued to live here as announced from the beginning, they certainly have demonstrated that they are resident specialists. Dr. Milam has by his department and cures promised, at all times shown that he beyond the average, and since he and his able assistants have been here a new phase has been established in medicine.

THE FACT THAT THEY GIVE RESULTS OR YOUR MONEY BACK has proven beyond anything that could be said that they have confidence in their ability to cure special, chronic and private diseases of men and women.

If you need more evidence from first-class specialists, you will have to cross to the other end of the world to get it. These doctors invite physicians, and the general public, to call on them with difficult cases. After a diagnosis has been made they will stand to the old and constant proposition that they will do all they promise or give you back every dollar you pay.

Their consultation and examination is always free to all applicants. Office at 613 Main Street.

RAILROAD NEWS

Great Problem to Defeat the Scalping of Tickets Has Been Attempted by Many, But as Yet Problem Is Not Solved

LOCAL MAN IS WORKING

City Ticket Agent Here Believes He Will Be Able to Evolve Plan Which Will Be Successful—Does Not Give Out System He Proposes

The greatest man in modern railroad circles will be the man that successfully solves the ticket scalping problem, according to the statement of a leading traffic man.

It is therefore no wonder that the problem has been tackled by hundreds and hundreds, and it is probable that of all the hosts of railroad employees of this country, from the crossing watchman to the presidents of the largest systems, ninety-nine out of every hundred have spent some portion of their time in planning to avoid the practice.

The wonderful possibilities resulting from such a successful plan can scarcely be realized, it having been estimated that the roads would be willing to pay a royalty of 25 cents on every through ticket sold if the scalping could thus be stopped.

Fort Worth with its army of railroaders is not without its ponderers on this subject, and one city ticket agent is now at work upon a plan which, according to his statement, gives every promise of proving successful. The assistant ticket agent in the same office has also studied the same problem and has even gone so far as to submit a plan to the railroad commission. The plan, however, was not considered suitable by them and the industrious railroad man is still hammering away upon his monthly pay check instead of clipping coupons. He has not been discouraged, however by his first failure and is back at the problem again.

Numerous other Fort Worth railroaders who are not so frank are doubtless at work along the same lines, and the day may not be far distant when the successful answer to the all absorbing problem will be given from the railroad center of the southwest and a Main street ticket man will leave the office to begin a life of affluence and ease.

MEXICO FREIGHT

Good reports are being received of the fast freight service established by the Mexican National from Laredo to the City of Mexico.

This improved service cuts the time down to sixty hours, or two days and a half, as against the five or six days that was formerly required.

NOVEMBER CONVENTIONS

The only important railroad conventions set for the coming month both occur upon the same day, November 15.

One, the railroad commissioners' annual convention, will meet at Birmingham, Ala., continuing for three days.

President John V. Smith of the Alabama commission is also president of the National Association, and will preside over the sessions.

The Association of Transportation and Car Accounting Officers will be held in Cleveland, Ohio, Texas representatives will be present at both gatherings.

NOTES AND PERSONALS

M. E. Sebree, trainmaster of the Rock Island, has returned from Amarillo.

Charles L. Hoffman, clerk in the car accountant's office, and O. C. Hamilton, paymaster of the Denver, left last night for Big Sandy on a hunting trip.

W. F. Jetmore, live stock agent of the Frisco system, was here yesterday from St. Louis headquarters and pronounces conditions satisfactory.

W. C. Knowles, district passenger agent of the Katy at Oklahoma City, was in the city yesterday.

Contracting Freight Agent Herman Terry of the Fort Arthur Route, with headquarters at Dallas, was here yesterday.

COTTON BELT OFFICIALS HERE

There was a party of prominent officials of the Cotton Belt Company in the city yesterday. Among those in the party were H. E. Terrell, traffic manager, of St. Louis; J. F. Lehane, general freight and passenger agent, and R. C. Pyfe, assistant general freight agent, of Tyler. These gentlemen were here on business connected with traffic affairs, but the specific reason for their visit could not be learned.

The party remained in the city over night, and it is learned will leave here this morning for Dallas.

NO TRACE OF THE MISSING MONEY IS FOUND

Lady Who Reached the City Wednesday Night Is Robbed But the Matter Is a Mystery to Police

The police of Fort Worth are anxious to know who got $50, which was supposed to have been in the bosom of the night dress of Mrs. Sallie Thornton of El Paso, who occupied room No. 9 at the Windsor Hotel, just across from the Santa depot on Jones street last Wednesday night. So far all efforts to locate either the money or the person or persons who got the money have been of no avail. Officer Sebe Maddox, who has been working on the case, is as perplexed as all the other parties interested in the matter, and anxiously awaits some solution of the whole affair.

Mrs. Thornton came to Fort Worth Wednesday night from El Paso. She was on her way to Wyoming, where she was to attend a court where she had a litigation of some nature pending. Her husband deemed it safe for the lady to make the trip by herself, as he was busy with a contract on a railroad near El Paso. She started on the journey and reached this city with no mishap. She came here on the evening Texas and Pacific train and reached Fort Worth shortly after 9 o'clock. She at once took a cab to the Windsor, where she had stopped before. Asking at once to be shown to her room she registered. The manager of the hotel, W. Varabile, showed the lady to room No. 9. During the night, which was a wet and rainy one, few people came in the hotel after that hour. All the doors to the hotel were locked except the entrance door to the office, and it hardly seems possible that anyone could have entered the house unknown to the manager, Mr. Varabile, who spent the night in the office.

The lady upon retiring took the money from her purse and put it in the bosom of her night dress and then went to sleep. When she awoke in the morning the money was gone and she had a most severe headache. Dressing, she at once reported the matter of the missing money to the police and Detective Maddox was detailed on the case. He

ROBBED THE GRAVE

A startling incident is narrated by John Oliver of Philadelphia, as follows: "I was in an awful condition, my skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue was coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite, growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Then I was advised to use Electric Bitter; to my great joy, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they robbed the grave of another victim. No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cents. Guaranteed at Matt S. Blanton & Co., Reeves' Pharmacy."

interviewed the lady and all the employees of the hotel, but could learn nothing, neither did he or does he now entertain a suspicion of anyone about the hotel. The woman was evidently drugged and the money taken from her while in that condition, but the question, if such is the case, is how it was done and by whom?

People sleeping in the adjoining room to No. 9 heard no noise in the night, the hotel manager heard no one enter the hotel and all are perplexed as to where the money has gone. It is known that the lady had quite a roll of paper money when she entered the hotel, and the thing that mystifies all is how anyone could get into the room, chloroform or drug the lady and get away as cleverly as was done in this case without being heard or seen.

Willie Brown's Visit Out West.

Such excitement prevailed in the home of Willie Brown...

But I can come whenever I get the invitation. When I do come if I ever do...

Ge, that'll be great! Then Willie cast a farwello glance up at the tall buildings that walled him in...

Then he began to figure out the geography of his surroundings.

How Teddy Became a Hero.

BY LEONIE COLLISTER.

When Teddy was seven years old the great grief of his life was the fact that the remaining Mudd, the first day of school, when teacher asked his name...

shrieks of encouragement urged Teddy to put forth his best efforts. When the remaining Mudd, who had fought shoulder to shoulder with Teddy, deserted, limp with exhaustion, it was hastily called by the referee "man to man."

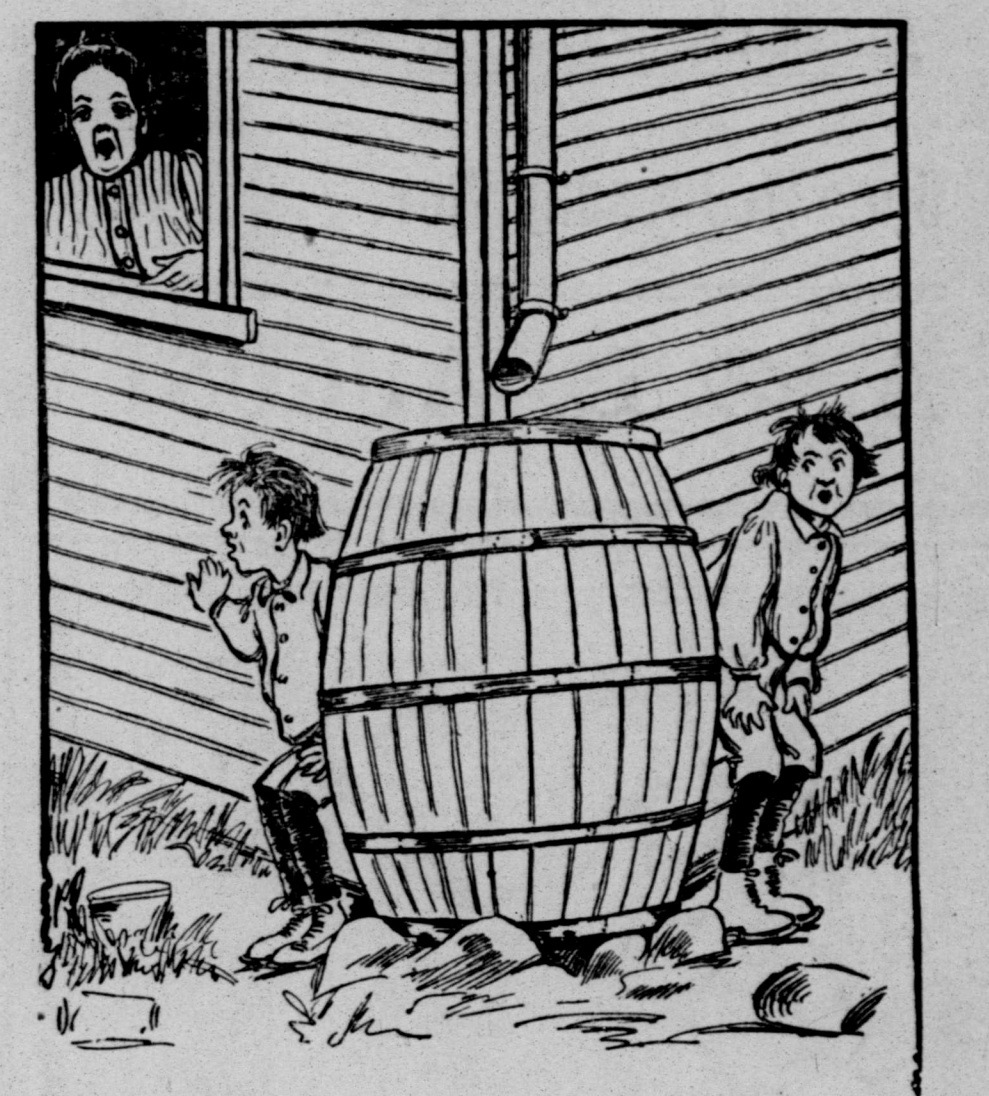

The fight did not last long. Stony was bigger than Teddy (but so was Tige), and Teddy kept Stony from reaching the pole just as he had kept Tige from reaching the meat tied to the clothes-line post in the back yard at home.

With eyes glued on his book saying the words over and over, Teddy, without intention, was becoming a prize pupil.

So it came about that his grief grew into an accustomed thing, and ceased to loom so heavily before him. In the evening, after school was out, he could be a real boy, with the name of Mudd in the background.

A crowd of picked "Seconds" encircled the pole while the remaining ones, the Reserve Squad, stood ready to take the places of exhausted comrades. After much placing and shouting of excited

The Brave Chatteemaker.

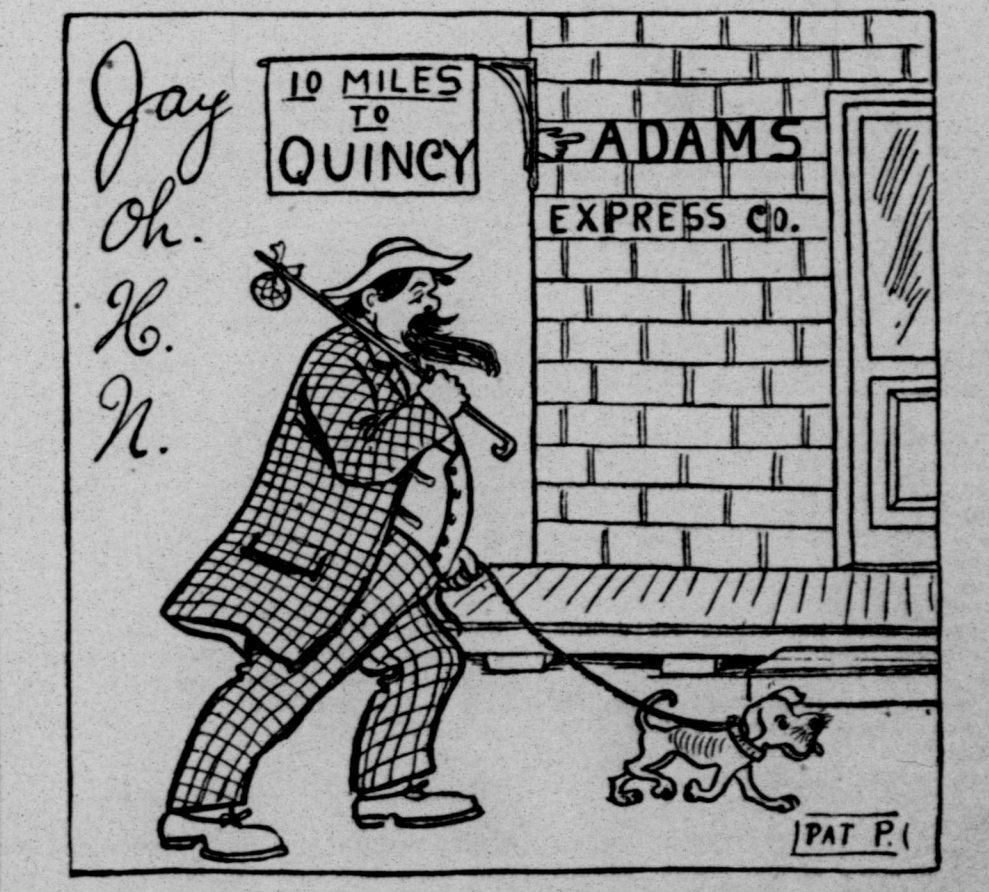

"Way over in India, where tigers striped and leopards speckled creep through the jungles by night, long ago, there lived a man who has become famous as the Brave Chatteemaker. He wasn't brave and he knew he wasn't brave, but everybody thought he was, and that counts a great deal with people who write history."

and she thought he must be very brave to think no more than this of handling a fierce tiger with long, sharp claws and a fierce, long teeth.

So he bridled and mounted the beast, and he was too drunk to notice its long, sharp claws and its long, sharp teeth. I don't know why the fierce beast submitted to being bridled, but they say nothing will harm a fool. He "roared" on this side and he hit it on that side; he pulled it this way and he pulled it that way. He rode it home and hitched it in front of the door. Then he staggered in and went to bed.

When his good wife awakened in the morning she went to the door, and behold you, there was a tiger all striped and bridled hitched to the post. The tiger looked up and said, "Gr-r-r-o-o-or!" The poor woman rushed within and slammed the door. She shook her sleeping husband and screamed in his ear: "What was that beast you rode home last night?" The Chatteemaker rolled over and said, "Huh?" Again she dug him in the side. "Get up and see what you rode home last night." "Take the bride off and let him go," drawled the sleepy man. But the woman was afraid to do this,

PANCREATIS IN PLACE MONEY AT WORTH

Backers of the Horse in Races a Few Days Ago Are Now Convinced That Is Where Bets Were Won

WORTH, Ill., Oct. 29.—Backers of Pancreatis, which horsemen are convinced finished second a few days ago to Cutter, when Flight, at 100 to 1 was given the place and Pancreatis was not placed, were partially convinced in their belief after the running of the second race today, in which both two started and Pancreatis again finished second and Flight sixth, both in the positions where they are believed to have finished on the occasion of their previous start. Colonel Ruppert proved easily the best of the field, despite his heavy impost. He allowed Pancreatis to set all the pace to the stretch, where he overhauled him and then won easily by two and a half lengths. A killing was pulled off on Jigger in the first, he having been backed from 75 to 35 and nearly off the board. He won in a romp with three lengths to spare. Gold Enamel, which ran Ivan The Terrible to a neck in the world's record time for six furlongs a few days ago, won the Chicago Ridge handicap easily from Monte and Dr. Leggo today. Summary: First race—One mile: Jigger, 110 (Trubell), 3 to 1, won; Bard of Avon, 116 (Dominick), 15 to 1, second; Mezzo (B. Johnson), 2 to 1, third. Time—1:12 3-5.

AUTO RECORDS BROKEN
YONKERS, N. Y., Oct. 29.—Records went by the board today at the Empire City track, where Barney Oldfield, Paul Sartori, Leon Thery and M. G. Bernin whizzed around the oval in their racing automobiles. Oldfield's car, the Green Dragon, acted disappointingly in the meet which was held at Brighton Beach a week ago, but today the Dragon was in perfect working order and Oldfield won handily in addition to making new records for every mile up to five from a standing start and establishing a world's record from any kind of a start, having covered ten miles in 1:12 3-5.

There were three exhibitions during the afternoon and the contest between the four big cars, ten miles was divided into three races, two trial heats and a final. Sartori, having the pole with Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's 90-horsepower car, got off in the lead, but Thery, who drove his own car, kept closely to his opponent for two miles, after which the race was a procession, Sartori winning the first heat in 9:45 4-5. They finished in 10:00 flat. Bernin, having the rail, driving W. G. Brokaw's 60-horsepower car, and Barney Oldfield in his Green Dragon, were the competitors in the second heat. Oldfield led all the way, finishing in 9:20. Bernin made it in 9:44 4-5. Sartori and Oldfield set off at a wild clip in the final heat, during which Oldfield made every pole a winning one, finally crossing the finish mark with the new world's 12 to 2-5. Sartori's previous record was 9:13, made at Providence by Charles Basle, Sept. 10, 1904.

IN THESE DAYS BOYS DO NOT READ STUFF

Books-stall Man Says the Dime Novel Heroes Are Neglected and the Library Is the Cause of the Change

"Are young boys buying as many of the 'Deadwood Dick' stuff that a few years ago were so widely read by the youngsters of this city?" asked The Telegram of a book stallman yesterday evening.

"Well I should say not," answered the dealer. "The time for the reading of the blood and thunder literature has almost passed away. There was a time, not very long ago, when almost every boy in town would hurry the moment school was out to some store to get an enticing novel of some impossible hero of the Western plains, who did deeds of daring so thrilling that it made one's hair stand on end and read it. They would hurry home and back of the barn or out in the woods--back to read them and there was no work to be gotten from Johnny as long as a chapter remained unfinished. But that time has passed.

"If you will notice," continued the book stall man, "the children are now quicker in their studies and many, unless the devilment is just born in them, are a much better class of youths. They are eager to teach and brighter and of a better disposition. They obey their parents and do not run off to the woods on Saturday as they used to half the time during school hours to play 'Diamond Dick' or 'Terrible Bill.' Now they spend the extra time they have in studying or in reading good books."

"What do you think caused such a radical change in the youth of the land?" queried The Telegram.

"I am sure I do not know, but I can only tell by the young people's looks and their actions. Something has wrought a wonderful change for it has only been in the last couple of years that this has been the case. Now there is no profit in handling that kind of literature, but there was several years ago. Perhaps the public library at the school libraries have had something to do with it. Someone else must tell me why, for I really do not know," concluded the book man.

Anxious to know what had caused the great change in the last several years among the youth of Fort Worth The Telegram visited the public library and there the information is given that many juvenile books by the best authors are taken out of the institution almost daily and from the information given they are evidently well read, for often the pages are badly marked with finger prints and other evidences of close and diligent perusal.

MINNESOTA 16, NEBRASKA 12
MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 29.—Fifteen thousand people saw Minnesota defeat Nebraska by a score of 16 to 12. Nebraska played the fastest and cleverest game she has since the Michigan game last year, and although Minnesota's work was a shade the best throughout the game, the score nearly indicates the merits of the teams. The score was a surprise to the Minnesota supporters, who thought it would be easy money for Minnesota.

MICHIGAN 28, WISCONSIN 0
MADISON, Wis., Oct. 29.—Michigan beat the Wisconsin team this afternoon 28 to 0 before a crowd of 1,000. Such a magnificent game and such a tremendous starting showing by one lone player has rarely been seen on a gridiron as the wonderful work of Heston, who played left half for the Michigan team. Wisconsin played gamely and with knowledge all the way through, but their efforts could not stop the Michigans and Heston.

PRINCETON 18, CORNELL 6
ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 29.—For the first time in three years, Cornell crossed the Princeton goal line today, during a magnificent game, which ended with the score 18 to 6 in favor of Princeton. During the first half Cornell outplayed the visitors, being able to advance the ball at will and three times held the Tigers for downs. The Cornell team, however, shot its charge during this play and later went down before the onslaught of its heavier rival, which varied its play but little from a tackle-back formation. Eight thousand people were present.

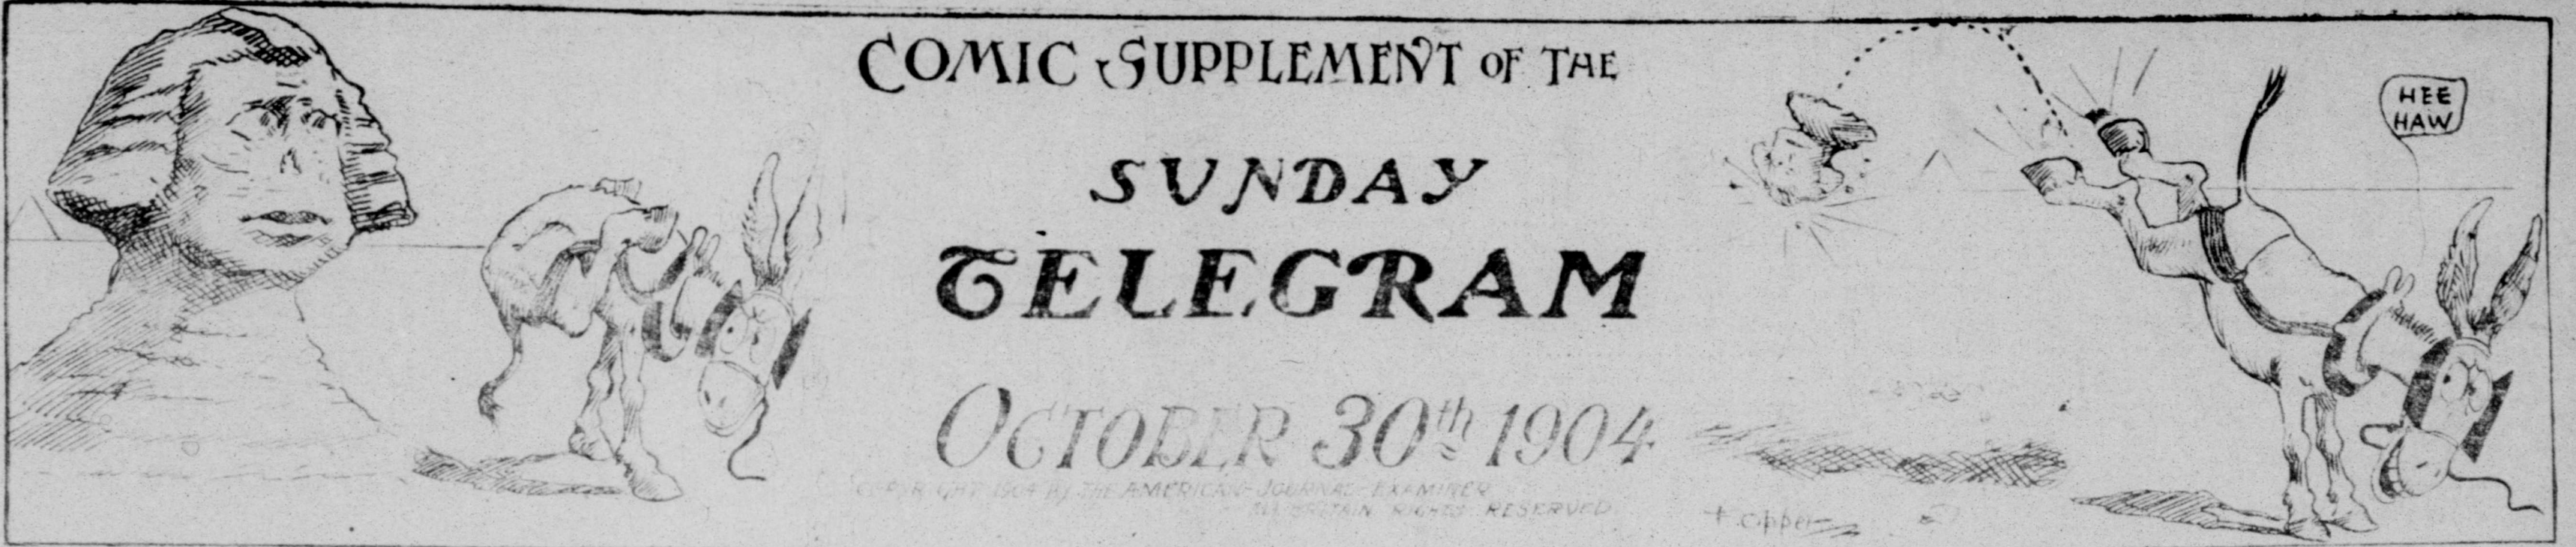

LAFAYETTE 54, MANHATTAN 0
EASTON, Pa., Oct. 29.—Lafayette made her largest score of the season against Manhattan College of New York, today, winning by 54 to 0. The New Yorkers could not hold Lafayette and her halves and ends made long runs. Scammel ran

CARLISLE 14, VIRGINIA 6
NORFOLK, Va., Oct. 29.—The Carlisle Indians scored a victory over Virginia today by 14 to 6. Virginia's scoring was done in the first half, Pollard breaking through the Indian's line and running fifty-six yards for a touchdown. An easy goal followed. The Indians failed to score in the first half, but early in the second half kicked a goal from the field and a goal from touchdown followed, resulting from Virginia losing the ball through a fumble on her seven-yard line. Another field goal by the Indians from the fifty-yard line ended the scoring. The fumbling of both eleven was the chief feature of the game. Neither size could gain much through rushing, but the Indians were slightly superior in that respect. Eight thousand people witnessed the game, one of the largest football crowds that ever assembled in the south.

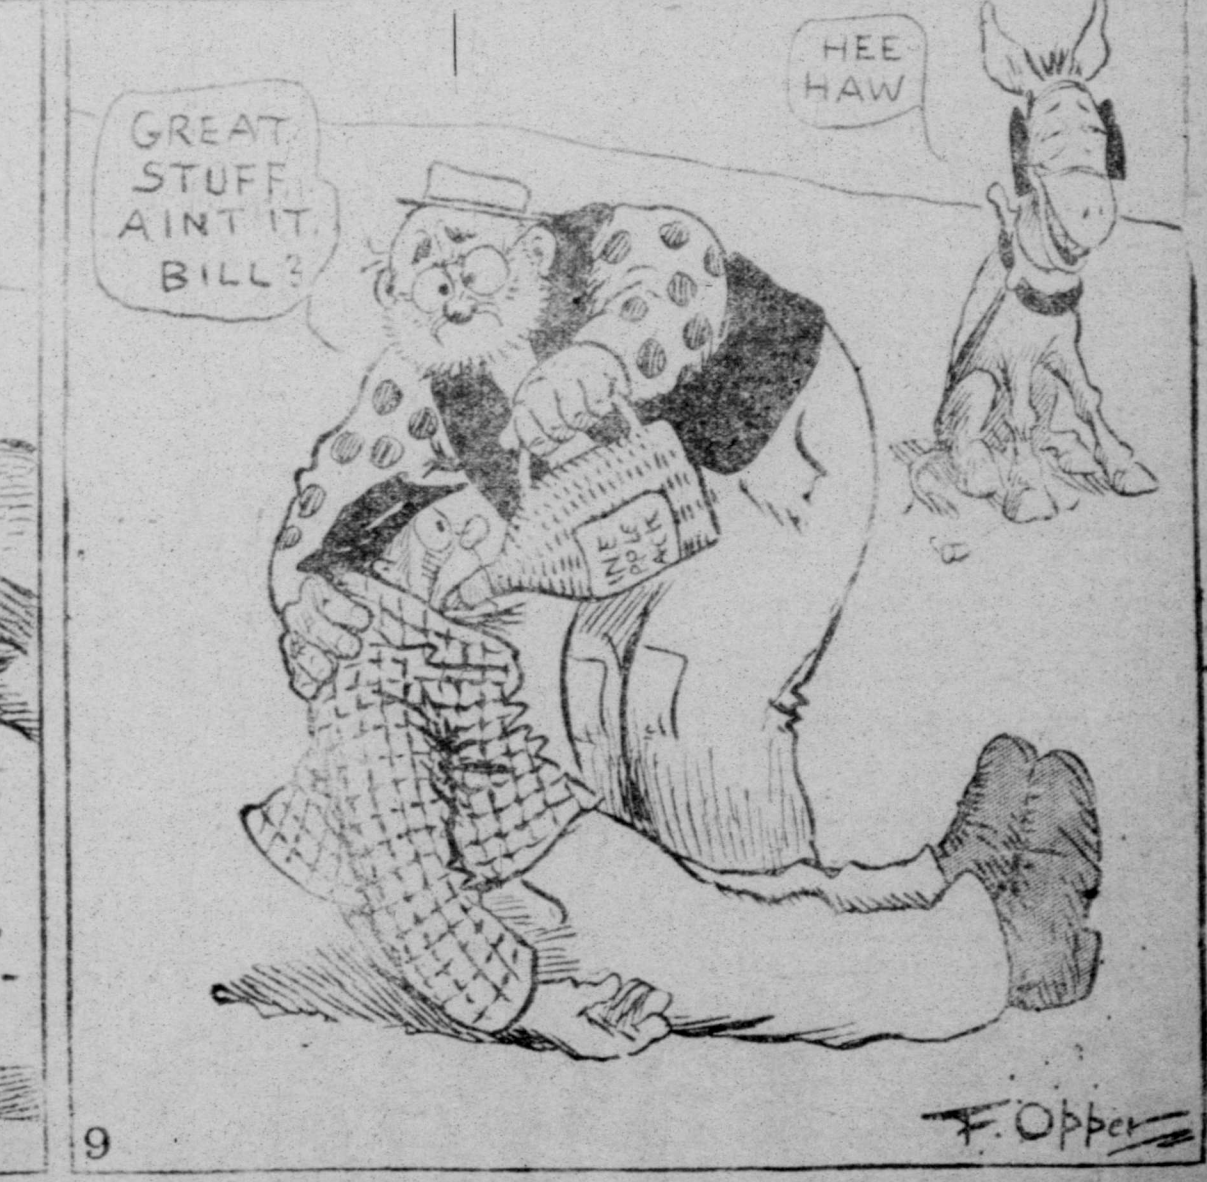

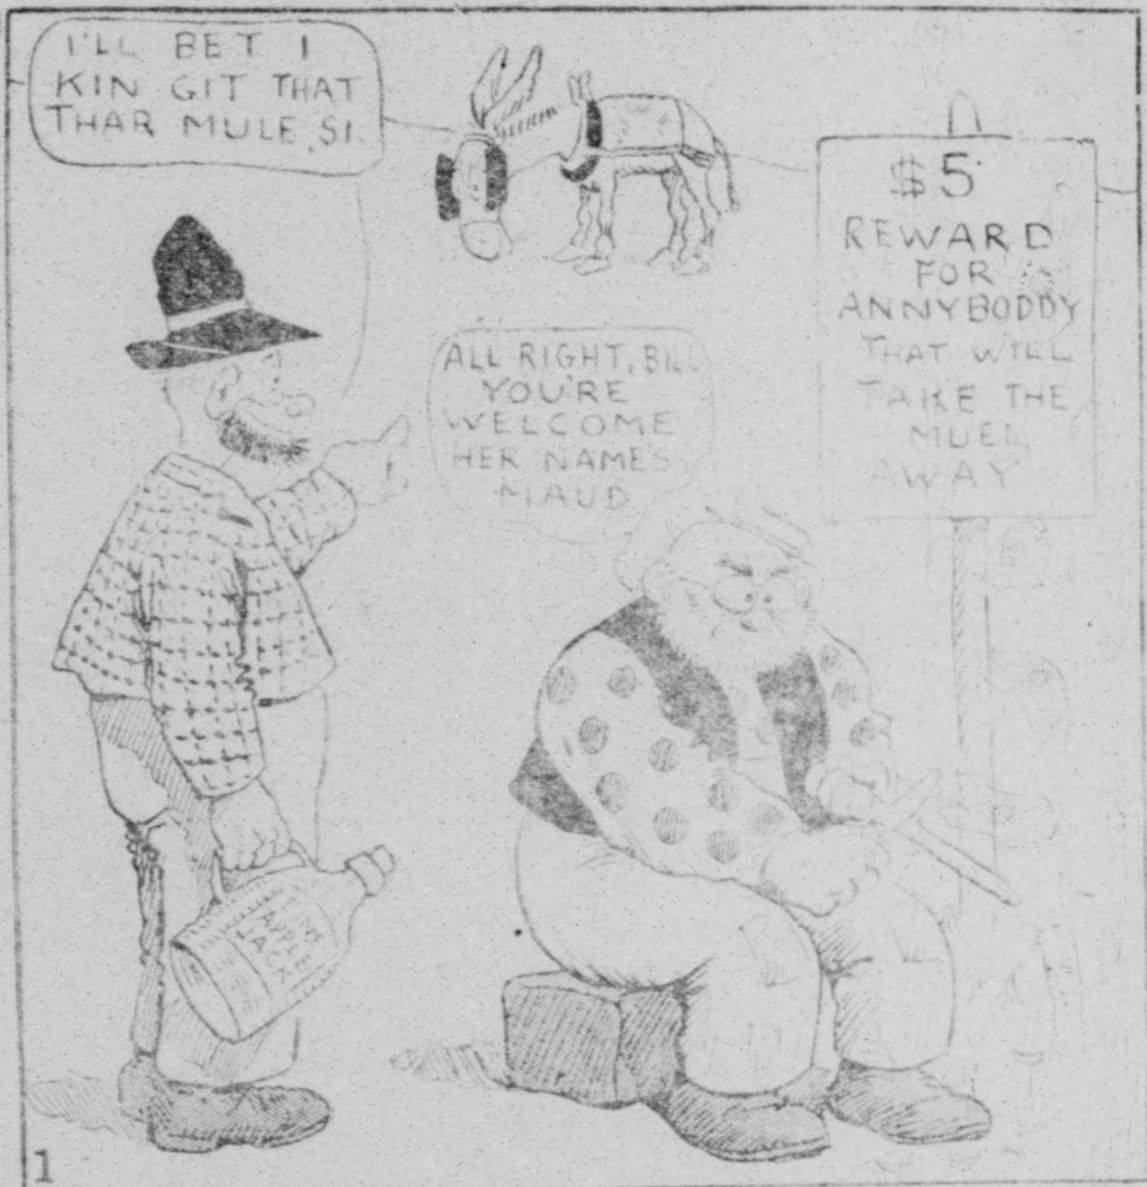

SEWANEE 12, TENNESSE 0
KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 29.—The University of Tennessee team, although they put up a good fight against Sewanee University here today, were no match for the visitors, the latter winning 12 to 0. Sewanee repeatedly went through Tennessee's line for substantial gains and these in the end meant touchdowns.

DICKINSON 6, LEHIGH 0
BETHLEHEM, Pa., Oct. 29.—By scoring a touchdown on a fluke after one minute of play in the first half, Dickinson was just able to beat Lehigh today. Final score, Dickinson 6, Lehigh 0.

WEST POINT 16, WILLIAMS 0
WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 29.—The army defeated the Williams College team here today, 16 to 0. Only once was West Point's goal in danger and that was when Williams got to within ten yards of the line. Unfortunately, they lost the ball on downs and the

Even though through seas of flowing streets,
The cruise to Greenwall's Monday night was worth the taking just to get acquainted with Candida. Candida has succeeded in getting her name in the papers all over, and has won a host of masculine admirers.

George Bernard Shaw is responsible for Candida, and if he is not having a good time about the result one guess has gone wrong.

Like many dramatists, Shaw has taken a married woman for his "motif." Around her he builds a character study that might deceive anybody without discredit, so cleverly has he drawn his picture.

Candida's husband is a clergyman, a popular one, with large congregations on Sundays. He has discovered a young poet, who is without home or friends. The poet is well aware of his poetic gifts, but a realizing sense of his youth is denied him.

The husband adores Candida. So does the poet. So does the clergyman's curate. So does Candida's father. These are all the men introduced. If more men had been needed they would all have adored Candida.

Candida goes off on a vacation from being Mrs. Clergyman. The poet goes with her. The hours are weary for the three men who have been left behind. When Candida and the poet return she hastens to take up her household duties and the poet to inform the husband of how things stand. In fact the poet knows he loves Candida and tells the husband so.

The poet thinks Candida loves him. This he also tells the husband. The husband is not capable of appreciating the beauties of Candida's soul. This to the poet tells the husband. The poet's frankness finally becomes so insolent that the husband lays hands upon him with such violence that the poet's tie and hair get out of order.

Candida, entering, notices quickly the poet's attire and proceeds to fix him up, adding a loving pat to the hair that she so gently smooths into place. Her husband's appearance is not noted.

An engagement takes the husband away after dinner, and Candida and her poet are left behind. The poet seats himself on the floor at Candida's feet and proceeds to read poetry to her, much of it of his own manufacture, about boats floating on sunlit seas, or lilies bending from perfumed banks, through an eternity where soul communes with soul, and where there will be no dish washing or carrying out ashes. The reading closes with the poet leaning against Candida's knees with his head in her lap, while she gently caresses the broad and poetic brow.

He remarks: "I have been good all evening and have been miserable. Now I am not good and I am happy."

Candida comes to him, to tell her every thing that is on his mind and heart, and tells him to press the button. The husband returns before the current gets to working, but while the headlamp combination is still on. It ceases to exist the moment he enters and there are voluble enquiries as to the meeting.

Previously Candida had told the husband's appearance is not noted.

After the fireside episode when the poet tells the husband a lot of things, Candida has led him to believe, Candida upbraids him with not having kept his own counsel.

What ordinarily could pass between a married woman even of thirty-three, and a poet of only eighteen, that might not be told to the woman's husband without disaster?

At the last, when Candida recounts a few of her virtues, she says to her husband that she has been mother and mistress to three sisters. The poet knows if she has been mother and three sisters to him. In his answer is the key that unlocks the entrance to an appreciation of Candida as a woman. She has not been a "mother and three mistresses." The poet knows it. Only the poor clergyman fails to realize what it means for her not to have been it.

If Candida had been mother and three sisters to the poet would he have had an idea of the man who he leaned his back against her knees by the fireside with her hand caressing his forehead?

It is because Candida aimed at being the thing that her pride, social position and cleverness prevented her from being to its fullest conclusion, that has made her the most discussed character on the stage today.

The woman who openly sins is at least above the reproach of moral cowardice. She is so common a figure, however, that she fails to interest save in special circumstances. The woman who delights in masculine atmosphere, who attracts by the many arts of femininity and yet keeps aloof with the pale of discretion, is a far rarer character, so rare indeed that she is seldom encountered, and then seldom recognized.

Shaw has evidently known at least one such. He has presented her with wonderful effect. The fact that every man who came within her radius felt her charm need not be conclusive, though carrying something of suspicion.

"When flies are swarming around a molasses jug it is a safe guess that the jug has molasses in it.

And, too, the swarming is not apt to be noticeable when the woman is truly a wife in spirit as well as in name, and a mother made sacred by maternity.

If a canvass was made of a thousand women, nine hundred and ninety-nine would say that a boy of eighteen, poet or any other kind, would never get the "go-go" habit for a woman of thirty-three, married or single, unless the woman made the advances. That is a law of youth and age that will have a few exceptions as any that can be formulated about human nature.

When Candida cooed around that disordered she plainly made the necessary advance, possibly not the first one. The wall of the poet that he was "so shy, so shy," might have been his recognition of the advances and his failure to accept them.

The clergyman won the respect of the audience, notwithstanding the remarks made about him by others. He was accused as being "wordy and much given to bombast," but his own part did not convey that character. The poet was far more given to gab, and not specially elevating gab either. The clergyman had some of the dogmatism of the cloth, but do not all clergymen? Even those who have no Candida to be a "mother and three sisters" to them, carry a little of the air of infallibility about them. But do we withhold honor and respect and recognition of the work they are trying to do on that account? Candida's husband was manly, honest, a believer in his own doctrines and surely that is something! He loved his wife, and believed in her love for him until she dwelt so long and elo-quently of his love for her.

band that the poet was in love with her, but he did not know it!

While Candida is out of the room the poet upbraids the husband because she has to perform household duties when she might be floating on a sea of gold, etc. The discussion grows stormy and Candida enters. She sees that something is wrong and turns to the poet and says: "You are annoying my boy! You are naughty! I am very angry with you. What have you been telling him. Things he should not know? Why could you not keep things to yourself?" or words to that effect.

The husband now demands that she choose between them. She asks each to give a "bid" for her affections.

Then she tells her clergyman what a fine wife she has been to him. She makes plain that she knows how very nice and perfect she is. She has ordered the meat, she has looked after his ties and socks. She has even met solicitors when a refusal of funds was to be handed out instead of the requested donation. She has been "mother and three sisters" to him.

Turning to the poet she asks: "Have I been mother and three sisters to you?" The poet replies, "No," with emphasis. Then Candida reminds him of her seniority and kisses him gently on the poetic forehead. He passes out of the room.

Candida then proceeds to fall into her husband's arms and the curtain comes down.

A bit of a problem until the key is found. Then there seems to be no problem at all.

Candida is 32. The poet is 18. Candida is a wife and the mother of children, though happily they do not seem to bear down upon her much, and they are heard of, but not seen.

When a married woman goes off on a vacation with a young cub of 18, and smooths his hair and pats his cheeks and hovers around him, generally will some student of human nature kindly state the kind of problem involved?

That Candida was a skillful player on masculine affections was disclosed in two or three situations. In the first act she tells the poet that her husband will ask him to dinner, but that he must not stay. The husband does not really want him.

Since the husband discovered the poet and sent him off with Candida on that vacation, why this statement? The poet tells this to the husband, thinking to convince him that he is Candida's affinity.

The husband is inclined to think the poet has not understood and only laughs. The idea is preposterous. At another time she snuggles up to her husband and tells him what a wonderful man he is; that everybody is in love with him, even his plain spinster typist. He is greatly impressed, though modestly disclaiming her estimate.

After the fireside episode when the poet tells the husband a lot of things, Candida has led him to believe, Candida upbraids him with not having kept his own counsel.

What ordinarily could pass between a married woman even of thirty-three, and a poet of only eighteen, that might not be told to the woman's husband without disaster?

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium Sulphide and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and the cretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe, and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

THE STORY OF GREAT BATTLE OF LIAO YANG

WRITTEN FOR THE TELEGRAM BY W. H. BRILL, CORRESPONDENT
IN THE FAR EAST FOR NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSOCIATION

PURIFYING JAPS AND RUSSIANS TOGETHER IN A DEEP TRENCH

(From Photograph by the Newspaper Enterprise Association.)
This ghastly photograph shows the burial of both Japanese and Russian soldiers by Chinese coolies at Shusanpo. Like bags of meal the mangled bodies of Japanese and Muscovite are thrown without regard to order, and entangled in most ghastly fashion in a deep trench. The coolies with long bamboo poles covered the bodies with dirt and broken stone, and these trenches were left unmarked.

Written for The Telegram by W. H. Brill, special correspondent with the Japanese forces.

FIELD HEADQUARTERS, Second Corps, Imperial Japanese Army, Aug. 31.—The second day of the great battle of Liao Yang is over. The Japanese have secured a foothold on the Russian hills and tonight they are making a desperate assault which, it is expected, will result in the occupation of the entire Russian line.

When we arrived on the field we found that during the night the Japanese batteries had moved forward through the cornfields.

The gray dawn was breaking when we reached the hill this morning. Dark stormclouds scudded across the sky. The roads were seas of mud as the result of the heavy rains of last night. The firing was hot and heavy. All along the Japanese front the guns roared and the shrapnel shrieked. Scores of shells burst against the hills in the distance and the fields before us shivered with the thousands of shrapnel bullets that passed through them. The Russian artillery practice was good. We could see the little cloud of smoke and the flash of flame that marked the discharge of a Japanese gun in the field and a moment later a Russian shrapnel would burst over the exact spot. The damage to the Japanese gunners there in the fields must have been terrible, but the guns were not silenced; not once did the fire slacken. All the morning we lay there on the little knoll listening to the sound of the guns and watching the hurrying of the shells.

INFANTRY BEGINS WORK
To the right and left all day long we could see the supplies of ammunition going to the front. Over there to the left are nearly a score of artillery ammunition wagons, each with its six powerful horses, creeping towards the front with their loads of shells which will soon see bursting against the hills; there to the left a long, sinuous line winds through the corn; it is a pack train, each animal loaded with two large boxes of rifle ammunition, a sure sign that the infantry has its work to do and is preparing for it. Suddenly during a short interval in the artillery firing we hear a new sound, a long, low crash followed by another and another and then by a long rattle. It was musketry. The infantry was at work.

During the night the infantry had moved up and had taken positions under the hills. On the left a large force of infantry had occupied Wart Hill. The firing seemed to come from that position. Scrub Hill, which was joined to Wart Hill by a long, narrow slope, was defended by lines of trenches. On the far end and above the slope leading to Wart Hill was a trench in front of which heavy embankments had been thrown up. Suddenly, as we were watching, the fire of all the artillery on the right of the Japanese position opened on this trench. Almost immediately afterwards the artillery of the center and the right opened on the same spot. For half an hour this bombardment continued. A perfect hail of shell rained on the trench.

CHARGE FROM THE TRENCHES
As suddenly as it had begun the bombardment ceased. We could see the Japanese leaving the trenches and disappearing over the crest of the hill. A few minutes later a man leaped over the Japanese trenches on Wart Hill and started across the slope toward the Russian trench. He was followed by another and another, then by two or three, then a half dozen—within a minute a thick black line of men were on their way forward. The artillery had ceased, and the crack of the rifles was heard. Suddenly on the slope the shrapnel began to burst. Men fell on every side and for a moment it looked as if the charge would be stopped. The shrapnel came evidently from some position in the rear, which we could not see. It was very heavy, but it did not stop the charge. By this time the head of the line had passed a wire entanglement within a very short distance of the Russian trench. Suddenly a great cloud of dust arose from a spot just in front of the Russian trench, followed by another and another. They were mines laid there to stop the charge of troops against the trench.

ENGINES OF DEATH FAILED
But their mission was not carried out. When the dust settled again, great crowds of Japanese were seen rushing over the edge of the trenches and a tiny Japanese flag was flying over the trench, the trench which had a moment before been the extreme right of the Russian position on the hills. It was the first piercing of the line. It was a desperate charge and one that cost the Japanese dearly. The Japanese left had in the meantime started a turning movement around the Russian right and the artillery of that end of the line was very busy. But the artillery of the Russian center and left was at once turned on the trench which the Japanese had been so violently shelling; but a few minutes before. Again the crest of the hill was hidden in dust and smoke and the roar of the guns was constant. When we left the hill at dusk the shelling was still going on as strongly as when it first began.

WON BY A BRIGADE
Field Headquarters, Second Corps, Imperial Japanese Army, Sept. 1.—The battle of Shan-sam-po was won last night. It was won by a brigade, although there were divisions engaged. It was won by a comparatively few men and of those few, more than half lie stark and cold upon the field today. The battle was won in the charge upon the center of the Russian position, the charge on what we have called Green Hill for want of a better name.

Green Hill is the center of the position and it is one of the nastiest positions troops were ever sent to take. The hill is perhaps 200 feet high and it rises from the plain in a gentle slope followed by a very steep rise. The Russians had this hill strongly fortified with three lines of trenches. All day yesterday the Japanese lay at the foot of this hill in trenches which they had hastily thrown up during the night. Last night they charged—and they took the hill. That is one of the most desperate charges imaginable anyone who has seen the hill today knows.

The strongest line of defenses on the hill were those at the very top. We knew that yesterday and the day before; we have seen them today and that has only verified our previous opinion. For two days the Japanese artillery played on these trenches with little apparent effect. While the artillery was firing on the trenches the soldiers were not there. They were safely ensconced in the bombproofs in the rear playing cards and drinking vodka. But when the charge came they were there and they fought like demons.

TOOK THE HILL AT NIGHT
Last night the men of Nagoya were sent to take the hill. These soldiers who have done splendid work all the way north from Nanshan Hill has been lying in the trenches at the foot of the hill all day. The order came for them to take the hill, and—well they took it.

In command of the brigade which took the hill was Major General Kodama. We met the general on the hill this afternoon. He shook hands with all of us and gave us his card. He posed for a photograph without objection. He smiled all the time he talked to us, through our interpreter, by the way. I tried to get General Kodama to tell me the story of that charge.

"We were ordered to take the hill and we took it," he said.
"Wasn't it pretty hard fighting?" I suggested.
"Oh, yes, but we expected that." Not another word could I get out of him.

We had seen the hill and we had seen the trenches, a description of the fight was not necessary. We knew what it had been.

The first line of trenches which the Nagoya men were sent to take were about half way up the hill. They took them, but at a cost that it is even now hard to estimate. Starting from the shelters at the foot of the hill where they had been all day lying in little shallow holes which they had dug with their bayonets, or sheltered behind the scores of conical Chinese graves which cover the plain, they went up the first easy slope of the hill at a rush without stopping to fire.

FOUGHT HAND TO HAND
The fire from the Russian trenches was terrific and every step of the upward course was marked by the death of a soldier. But they kept on until the trenches were reached and they fought the Russians hand to hand, driving them out of the trenches at the point of the bayonet. The loss at this trench was something appalling, but it did not stop the onward march of the conquering Japanese. Across the trench they went treading on the mangled bodies of friends and foes that overflowed the trench, and on they went up the now steep sides of the hill to the main trenches on the crest. The bullets rained down that hillside like hail, but they did not stop the desperate uprush of those brave little soldiers. Hundreds of them fell, but the others went to the very edge of the trench where, with bayonets and clubbed muskets, they struggled desperately until they won the trench. When we reached the hill this morning the bodies had not been moved from the trenches. There they lay, Japanese and Russians in inextinguishable confusion as they fell in that bloody hand-to-hand fight.

ENEMIES EMBRACE IN DEATH
In several cases Japanese and Russian actually in each other's arms. Death had been dealt out to every conceivable form. Bullets had done their work, scores of lives had escaped through ghastly bayonet wounds and here and there a skull had been crushed by clubbed musket. Again we saw war in all its horror.

And then we heard that among the victims of that terrible charge was an old friend, Major Tachibana. He was the officer who took us to his quarters and gave us tea and beer and little candy hearts with mottoes on them. I stood uncovered beside his dead body today. His servant stood by and told us the story. The stars running down his face the night the major had been on duty at headquarters in the commissariat, but he had been relieved at his own request to take active service with his battalion. When the charge was ordered, Major Tachibana led his battalion, the sword of his ancestors in his hand. Up the hill he went through that awful storm of bullets, cheering on his men. Twice he met Russian officers in single combat and twice he was victorious. At last, as he mounted the trench, as the Russians broke and fled, he fell, pierced by seven wounds, his last word a cheer for his emperor.

STORY OF RUSSIAN BRAVERY.
Just for a change I want to recount for you a story of Russian bravery, a story of the desperation of a little party of Russian soldiers. I have told plenty of stories of Japanese bravery and this, I think, is of interest because it explains why the Japanese need all their bravery. This was the Japanese soldier has been proven beyond all question in this war beyond all question in the world to be the last person in the world to deny the same quality to his enemy.

We saw the final act of the story this afternoon, the first act occurred yesterday. I have told how, after a most desperate charge, the Japanese drove the Russians out of the trench at the point of the bayonet at Scrub Hill and occupied it themselves after a charge in the face of rifle and shrapnel fire that cut great gaps in their ranks. The Russians, it was believed, were all driven out of the trench. But this was not the case. Hardly had the Japanese settled themselves in the trench before there was a crack from a rifle in one end of it and a Japanese soldier fell dead. This was followed by another and another shot and several Japanese died before it was discovered where the shots came from.

IN A MINIATURE FORTRESS
Finally it was found there was a hole, the entrance to what had evidently been an ammunition magazine. It was from this hole the shots had been fired. Careful investigation showed that several Russian soldiers had taken refuge there. They were called upon to surrender, but refused to do so and answered all further demands with shots. The Japanese could not reach the Russians in the hole without exposing themselves to certain death before they could fire, and after several unavailing attempts to make the Russians evacuate their position, they simply covered the mouth of the hole with bags of sand from the breastworks and left the Russians to think the matter over. This morning two officers who spoke Russian had the bags taken away and again called on the Russians to surrender. The result was that one of the officers was killed and the other wounded.

It was shortly after noon yesterday when the Japanese took the trench. It was 3 o'clock this afternoon when the correspondents, making a tour of inspection of the hills, arrived at the spot. We were told that we were just in time to see something peculiar. One of the officers explained to us about the Russians who had been in the hole for twenty-seven hours and said that they had just expressed to an interpreter a willingness to give themselves up.

SURRENDER TO FACE CAMERA
As he spoke a soldier pulled away a bag of sand and through a crack between two bags a bayonet protruded. A Japanese soldier caught the gun that was thrust up, on his own bayonet and pulled it out. A second gun followed and a third and finally six lay in the trench beside the hole. Then the sand bags were pulled away and the interpreter called out some-thing in Russian. A moment later a flat cap appeared of yellow hair, followed by a shocked face and a figure clothed in a brownish gray overcoat. A dozen cameras were trained on the man in an instant. The Russian was half way out of the hole when a Japanese soldier touched him on the shoulder and signed for him to stop a moment until the battery of cameras had been discharged.

I shall not soon forget the look on that pock-marked face. There was no emotion there, nothing but a mild curiosity as the Russian looked into the cannon-like mouths of the cameras. The eyes were open wide and were staring and in them one could read the thoughts of the stolid brain behind them. If ever a man expected instant death and had nerved himself for it, this Siberian soldier was the man.

"SNAPPED," BUT LIFE SPARED
But he wasn't killed. He was passed down into the trench and another was called out. This man was a hospital corps man and wore the red cross on his sleeve. He did not look to right or left, but at once reached down to help out a comrade. The third man's head was covered with bloody bandages and he was evidently badly wounded. He staggered as he came out of the hole, and leaned heavily on his comrade for support. Two others, also wounded, followed, and then another Red Cross man. The Japanese were gentle with them, even when they were stopping them one after another to give the anxious correspondents and their cameras a chance. After the men were all out they were lined up and final rattle of camera shutters ended the play, so far as we were concerned.

The wounded Russians were at once removed to the nearest field hospital, where they were given the very best of care. The unwounded are being taken to the rear as prisoners of war.

ADVANCE IS DELAYED

Field Headquarters, Second Corps, Imperial Japanese Army, Sept. 3.—The battle is not yet over. When the Russians retreated from Shan-Sam-Po Hills the correspondents thought the fighting was finished and that all we had to do was to march into Liao Yang. But yesterday we were informed that we would not get into the town that day. This morning they were told the same thing, and it is not at all improbable that the statement will be repeated tomorrow morning.

The Russians have made another desperate stand on the plain between Shan-Sam-Po Hills and the town. The fighting has been going on for two days now, and while it is evident even from our places on the hills that the Russians are preparing for a general retreat, they have not retreated yet, and we are at a loss to know when they will.

IN PURSUIT OF THE SLAV

When we landed on the hills yesterday morning we discovered that the entire army, except such detachments as were required to clear up the battlefield, has been sent forward to pursue the enemy. And they were not having an easy time of it. We could see the infantry forging ahead through the little village at the foot of the hill, covered with a violent artillery attack from the groves that scattered plain or the cornfield that covered it. From the direction of the town came a steady return fire as the Russian batteries fired on the Japanese in the cornfields. Away over on the left we could hear the roar of the guns captured at Nan-Shan as they battered away at the railway station and the Russian town. All across the plains the Japanese field guns were throwing their shells at the fortifications and trenches, which we could not see but which we knew must cover the plains.

IN SIGHT OF LIAO YANG
Away to the north we could see the town. It stretched across our front to the right from the railway. On the right was the old walled Chinese city, evidently the largest one we have yet seen. Just outside the walls to the left we could see the tall column-like pagoda which has made Liao Yang famous and which was erected as a memorial to a missionary, who, hundreds of years ago, came to Manchuria from Tibet to teach the Manchurians the beauty of the religion of Buddha, who died there. Between the pagoda and the railway lay the Russian town. We could see the substantial buildings in the background and the scores of temporary warehouses along the railway which told of the great quantities of supplies which have been gathered at the town. Away over to the left, close to the railway station, a column of black smoke arose which increased in size every minute, showing that the Russian or the shells have set fire to something, probably the big railway shops, we are told.

KUROKI FIGHTING HARD

During the morning the artillery fire on the left was very strong and about 11 o'clock we heard artillery fire to the right of where we knew our army lay on the plains. It was the Fourth army advancing to our aid. All day, as for several days, we could hear, during the faint sound of gun firing away off to the northeast of the town, and we knew that Gen. Kuroki and the First Army had engaged the flank of the Russian position and was having a hard time of it.

A little before noon the artillery on our right increased in vigor and for some time kept up the heaviest firing we have yet heard. This could mean but one thing—an infantry attack. Shortly after noon the artillery suddenly ceased and we could hear the volleying of musketry, which told that the attack was on. Then the Russian artillery began with redoubled vigor and more musketry fire was heard. All the afternoon this continued, while the fight went on in the center and right and when night fell the Russian again a their right had not been silenced, and we knew that the attack of our left wing had failed.

THE FIGHT STILL ON

This morning we were awakened before daylight by the fire of the artillery and we knew that the fight was still on. The sound of the bombardment told us that a general artillery attack had been ordered. All day long the duel continued and while at times the fire of the Russians seemed to slacken, it was only to break out again a few minutes later with renewed vigor. Around the foot of the hill on which we sat artillery wagons tolled to and fro, carrying their loads of death-dealing shells to the batteries on the plain and then returning for more. Occasionally a pack train carrying rifle ammunition would crawl across the plains and now and then a small body of men would pass hurriedly forward to join their comrades on the battle line.

In the afternoon a conflagration broke out among the provision sheds on the south edge of the Russian town. In a moment dozens of these sheds were in flames. The great clouds of black smoke hid the pagoda and hid the Russian town. The Russians were burning their stores before retreating.

A NIGHT ATTACK

Darkness fell with no change in the situation. Tonight the firing is going on with redoubled vigor. It is evident that the Russians have made a stand which is even stronger than the one made on the hills, and that the Japanese are having a hard time getting into the town. We are told that the Russians have at least two lines of very heavy fortifications across the plain and that all the corn in front of them has been cut down that the Japanese may have no cover under which to approach for the attack. That there is a large force of Russians on the plain there can be no doubt, and it is evident that all the artillery which was used to defend the position on the hills is again being used to defend the approach to the town.

We do not know exactly what has happened but it seems probable that Kuroki and the First Army have failed in their flanking movement and that the town is only being held until Kuroki can retreat from the position in good order.

AFTER NINE DAYS

LIAO YANG, Sept. 5.—We have captured Liao Yang, and after nine days' fighting, the enemy is resting. But while we have occupied the town and have forced Kurokatkin to retreat, the great strategical movement which was planned to crush the Russians has failed.

Pursuit would have been practically out of the question under any circumstances, for the soldiers were in no condition to do more work for some time. They had seen nine days' hard fighting and had lived all that time on little else than a few handfuls of cooked rice. They needed rest and food, and a stop was imperative.

As it is, the Japanese fought the greatest battle since Sedan, and Gravelotte and they won it against overwhelming odds. Their plans for catching Kurokatkin worked out exactly, except for one thing. The three armies came together just at the time and the place planned: It was one of those things that are beyond human control. Incidentally, General Kurokatkin exhibited the first clevidence that has emanated from him since the war began. He, of course, was aware of the Japanese plan and the massing of his men and the entire plan of battle showed that he thoroughly appreciated what the Japanese were planning for him.

THE REST OF TRIUMPH

The excitement of the great battle has passed and we have settled down to the routine life of a great military station. Our only excitement now-a-days is watching the transport carts and the ammunition wagons go by and receiving calls from the correspondents of the First army, to whom we said good-bye five months ago in Tokio.

We are quartered here in the most comfortable house we have occupied since we left Tokio. It is a Russian house situated in the center of the Russian town.

As we sit here on the veranda in the moonlight our main topic of conversation is not the recent great battle, it is not the movements of the army and the probability of another great battle. We speculate and argue on the former occupants of the house. There was a woman here certainly, for her hand can be seen in the planting of the morning glories, in the potted roses, in the flower beds. Even the big, plain-topped table on which I write is covered with dotted lines made by one of those little wheels such as dressmakers use to mark out their patterns. A little pug dog runs through the rooms of the house and about the veranda whining and seeking for his mistress, the woman whose home this once was and who was forced to fly before the specter of war.

There are three or four hundred of these black brick buildings in the Russian town, outside the great walls of the Chinese city of Liao Yang. There are large station buildings and many buildings designed as office buildings for the Russian administrative force. Over on the other side of the railroad track are great shops and roundhouses, nearly all of them destroyed by fire or by shell. Liao Yang was not only a division point, it was the main headquarters of the Manchurian Railway, which runs more than 600 miles from Harbin to Port Arthur.

SIGNS OF THE WOMAN

But it is the home that one thinks of most. There are scores and scores of them, easily distinguished among the hundreds of black brick buildings. They are not less ugly than the other buildings, but about them there remains the mark of the woman who have occupied them; a vine over a veranda here, a potted plant dead or neglected there, a flower bed, a bit of lace curtain in a window—these and a hundred more signs of the presence of women, the makers of homes.

Here one sees a side of war that is seldom thought of, the personal home side. Women came thousands of miles out into this wilderness, into a strange country among stranger people and here they made their homes, those homes which mean so much more to women than they do to men. Here they brought their household gods, here they reared their children and prepared to live their lives. Then came war. Husbands, brothers, sons were called away and the women were left alone. Finally defeat came and retreat. The women were forced to pack their most treasured belongings and start back again over that long line of railroad, back to civilization. It is true, but away from that place they had learned to call home.

I wish I knew the name and the present whereabouts of the woman who lived in this house. I should like her to know that we are watering her roses.

WAR'S TERRIBLE MARK

All about the town the signs of war are visible. Here and there a shell has torn away a corner of a roof, or had blown a great hole in the side of a house. Soldiers are quartered in the pretty little church, a Japanese flag floats over the railway station. Officers occupy the residences, the house where General Kurokatkin lived is now the residence of Field Marshal Oyama. A squadron of Japanese cavalry is camped in the public square where the Russian band used to play on summer evenings. Transport carts and ammunition wagons drag through the flower beds. Great piles of furniture gathered from the deserted homes have been cared for and stored by the Japanese soldiers. There has been no wanton destruction of property, but whatever there is that is of value to the conquering army that has been put to use. Near the railway station lies a Russian carriage, one wheel broken; in a back yard is a broken down baby carriage which some Chinaman will repair and use for transporting bundles. Away over across the railway track is a deserted cemetery, the flowers on the graves withered, the graves themselves almost hidden by the rank growth of weeds.

LEFT IN A HURRY

LIAO YANG, Sept. 26.—When the Russians left Liao Yang for some place further north, as they have been leaving places ever since the war began, they left in a hurry. We saw some of them going, at least we saw the trains hurriedly leaving the railway station, and it was evident then that they were in a hurry. But the best proof of their anxiety to get away from the advancing Japanese army is the great mass of things they left behind.

A determined effort was made to burn a large quantity of the stores and supplies which the Russians could not carry away with them, but in this they were only partly successful. Large quantities of supplies were left which will be useful to the Japanese. These stores have been carefully gathered together and are being used by the Japanese.

PROOF OF HIS CAPTURE

There was no artillery captured at Liao Yang, but under the guidance of a Major of Artillery, I examined a battery, eight guns, which was captured at An-Shan-Sheng, ten miles south of here. The breech-blocks had been removed from several of these guns. Without a breech-block a gun is not of any particular use, and I asked the Major why he was so proud of the capture. He laughed. At the Nan-Shan battle, he told me, the Japanese had captured a large number of extra pieces of guns and among the other things were a number of breech-blocks. These are now on the way to Liao Yang, they are only a few miles distant, and within a week the guns will be ready for use. The Russians have stated on several occasions that the only guns the Japanese had taken at any fight were old-model guns that were practically useless, and that the only reason they had been captured was because they were so worn out as not to be worth removing from the field of battle. This is but another instance of the fact that the Russian Nation, or at least the Russian General, has developed an imaginative quality of brain that has never before been suspected.

SOMETHING WORTH TAKING

We looked into those field guns today, and if they are worn out and useless, then artillery is a branch of the service which might well be abandoned. Not one of those eight guns shows to the untrained eye the slightest wear. Artillerists said this morning that the rifling showed that they had been fired but so few times as to be hardly worth considering. They are practically as good as they were the day they left the factory, and they are out of the very latest model adopted by the Russian army. Every gun has forty rounds of shrapnel in its limber and there are more than fifty double ammunition wagons among the captured stores each one filled with ammunition.

When we visited the guns this morning the soldiers of the artillery corps were painting the carriages and the limbers, painting them a beautiful green. The Japanese gun carriages are a dull gray, and we wondered. Again the Major laughed.

"Ye see," he said, "this is the color the Russian gun carriages are always painted, and besides we captured the paint." And so on the next battlefield Russian guns, painted with Russian paint, will throw Russian shells at Russian soldiers.

LUCK WITH THE JAPS

The big six-inch guns captured by the Japanese at Nan-Shan proved very valuable to the Japanese in that fight and in the one outside of Liao Yang, but their usefulness was practically at an end for the ammunition which was captured at Nan-Shan was almost exhausted. But now they are useful again, for among the spoils at Liao Yang are more than 2,000 shells and shrapnel for these very guns. They are a very great addition to the Japanese ordnance stores.

The Japanese captured many supplies in addition to the guns and the ordnance stores. There are 3,500 splendid winter overcoats, which are now giving warmth and comfort to the wounded in the big general hospital here. Then there were supplies of fodder and food—10,000 bushels of barley, 20,000 bushels of flour, 5,000 bushels of Chinese rice, 2,500 bushels of rolled flour—think of the buckwheat cakes for breakfast this winter—27,500 bushels of kowliang, 700 bean cakes, 27 barrels of cube sugar, as well as large quantities of cigarettes, wines, sardines, coffee and all sorts of fancy groceries which were evidently intended for the officers' messes.

The value of the ordnance and commissary stores captured by the Japanese during the nine days' fighting, which ended in the capture of Liao Yang, is not less than half a million. A few railway cars were left behind, and these the Japanese are using.

ALL HALLOW TIDE

Hostesses preparing for the coming halloween are planning to greet their guests robed in some unusual costume. The witch hostess will wear a black or bright red cap, loose fitting gown with a pointed hood. She will carry a broom and a black cat, real or stuffed, as is most convenient. Lines may be added to the face if desirable. Grease paint pencils may be obtained for the purpose.

The ghost hostess shrouds herself in white and paints face and hands to give them the appearance of skull and bones. To accomplish this powder the face very white and carefully paint with black about the eyes, nose and mouth. For a little practice a really ghastly effect can be produced. Enlarge the mouth and mark in teeth, to produce the ghastly grin. The forearm and the hand can be made to look like bones, by painting the arm a ghastly white and over the white drawing, with the black grease paint, two lines to represent the bones. Paint the hands white and draw in the bones of the fingers and the back of the hands with the black. Turn the lights low and let the ghost meet the guests at the door with a lighted candle held high above her head.

The hostess who wishes to make herself attractive will adopt the corn husk dress. The dress is made by completely covering an old, simple frock with plain or fringed corn husks. It is an easy matter to sew them on. The necklace and the girdle are made of strung buckeyes, chestnuts, the red rose seeds, or from beans, etc. A garland of grape leaves makes a pretty ornamentation for the hair.

These costumes may be worn by guests as well as hostesses, if the party is a costume affair.

THE FORTUNATE PIE

Everyone interested in Halloween festivities knows what a never failing source of amusement is the fortune cake. The newest thing in the fortune line is the fortune pumpkin pie. The pie contains the ring, the thimble and the various articles which were baked in the cake.

Bake the pie in a deep pie tin, wrap the fortunes in paraffin paper and stir them well into the custard before it is baked. Serve the pie in a hollowed out pumpkin by setting the pie, still in the pie tin, inside a shapely half pumpkin.

Into the pie should be stirred the ring, which signifies marriage before the year is closed; a tiny euchre card, your husband will be a gambler; spoon of thread, you will be an old maid; pencil, marry an author; brush, an artist; chestnut, a joker; penny, marry a fortune; ball, you will marry a sportsman; pistol, a burglar. If men are to be present prepare a similar pie for them.

An ingenious hostess will find other symbols which will be appropriate to her guests. These may be obtained in a toy store and must be as tiny as possible. Let every guest be served before any pie is eaten that the fun may be at its height when the ring is discovered. This discovery is usually the most interesting feature.

WHAT TO EAT

An appropriate menu for halloween is the following:

Chicken and Nut Salad.

Walnut Sandwiches.

Fruit Jelly and Whipped Cream.

Cider and Doughnuts.

Pumpkin Pie with Grated Nuts.

Salted Peanuts or Almonds.

Tea.

Tea is served for the grounds from which a clever hostess can tell the fortunes of those present. The tea is brewed in a weak shaken before the tea is poured and permit the guests to use neither sugar nor cream.

TO TELL FORTUNES BY GROUNDS

To tell fortunes by tea grounds is a trick and requires a vivid imagination and a quick reader of nature. It is folly to attempt to tell things that every one in the room knows. Trust to the cup for the inspiration and as the fortune proceeds gather as much information as possible. Certain it is that the hostess that searches in the cup for pictures and suggestions will find them. A few old symbols are all that are needed to make the fortune telling a success.

First there must be grounds in the cup. The cup must be in good view, the drinker's saucer. It must never be turned down in the saucer because that shuts the evil under it. It must be turned quite around three times, either above the saucer or about the head, as the hostess dictates. While the cup is being turned the three times the owner must wish, keeping the wish well in mind until the telling of the fortune begins. If, when the cup passes into the fortune teller's hands, there are drops clinging to the inverted cup it is a sure sign of tears to come.

To read the grounds begin at the upper edge of the cup and read to the bottom, and begin at the handle and read to you to the left. What is to be seen near the handle and next to the handle is coming first. A succession of long lines, in the form of a path, signify a journey. If broken and continued, a journey over a body of water. Short paths signify visits, toward the bottom of the cup a visit away from home. If leading to the edge of the cup, a visitor to come. Square or oblong formations, solid, indicate letters. Larger formations of the same kind mean packages. A circle means an engagement, a marriage or a proposal, this to be determined by the fortune teller's knowledge of the owner of the cup. In the cup of a married woman, a ring means a business proposition. A bird promises news. If the bird is light and apparently springy the news is good; a dejected, black bird means bad news. A cat means difficulties at home, and the formations about the animal often lead to an interpretation of the difficulty. Three dots in a row signify the fulfillment of the wish, near the edge of the cup, soon; toward the bottom, later. A broken heart, a broken engagement or a divorce. Many small dots in a group signify money. If near a letter, a check or order. If the cup contains a timber formation, it may signify the building of a house. A long hair stick, if upright, promises a visitor; if down, a sick friend. The complexion is told by the lightness or darkness of the tea stick. The cup should be turned three times if there is time, once in case there are many guests.

Peculiar pictures will appear, such as stoves, altars, horses, etc. These in connection with the symbols given will make a story of the fortune. Figures will frequently be turned, and these always convenient in timing the arrival or departure of friends and visitors, letters, packages, etc.

THE TABLE

To decorate the table for the Halloween festivities use yellow in profusion. Let the candle shades be of yellow paper painted with water colors to represent pumpkins. Jack-o'-lanterns are always attractive. The center piece should be of mixed fruits and nuts and is most effective when scattered over a large mirror, the frame of which is hidden in grapes and grape vines. Serve the cider from jugs in tin cups; cookies, from a butter crock; apples, from baskets; pie, from the baking tins; cakes, in tins, etc.

THE ROD OF DESTINY

The wheel of fortune has had its day is the symbol. This symbol represents the occupation of the future wife or husband, as the case may be. Two canes must be prepared, one for the young men and one for the young women.

THE SPIRIT OF HALLOWEEN

The symbols hung upon the young men's rod of fortune, with their meanings, are as follows:

A ring, you will marry a coquet; a thimble, a dressmaker; a pen, an author; a rolling pin, a cook; a dustier, a housekeeper; a tape measure, a clerk; a typewriter, a stenographer; a cookie, a waiter; a black glove, a widow; an invitation, a society belle; a canary, an old maid.

The rod of fortune, which shows the fate of the girl, holds the following:

A nail, you will marry a carpenter; a turnip, a farmer; an apple, a fruit grower; grapes, a wine merchant; sugar, a grocer; newspaper, an editor; dice, a gambler; book, a novelist; penny, a baker; wig, a barber; legal document, a lawyer; a button, a merchant.

HALLOWEEN FORTUNES

When preparing for Halloween festivities the apple fortune corner must not be forgotten. Curtain or screen one corner of the room. Let it be lighted with dim candle light, the candles set in jack-o'-lanterns. A table and two chairs are the necessities. The fortune teller should be supplied with a basket of apples and a sharp paring knife.

From the curtain pole, or any high point, an apple is suspended for each guest in his turn. Blindfold him, lead him to a basket of apples and let him make his choice. The first apple touched is the one which holds the mysteries of his future. The apple is then suspended and he is unblindfolded and made to "bob" for a bite of it. After he has taken out one bite he is permitted to pass into the screened corner, where his fortune is told.

Once inside the curtained recess the fortune teller, after three magic circles about the apple, solemnly sets into it the sharp knife. She then instructs the guest to cut the apple in halves, in quarters and to remove the seeds, placing them in a straight row across the table. All the while he must keep in mind a wish. The fortune teller then gives him a pencil and paper. He must name and number each seed, beginning at the right and naming to the left. While he is thus engaged the fortune teller collects the bits of apple left from the seeding and drops them to boil into a tiny pot of water already simmering over a tiny alcohol lamp at one end of the table. A jug of water stands near and it is the duty of the guest to add water and stir the contents of the tiny kettle, for the greatest misfortune attends him who permits the boiling apple to boil dry and burn before the fortune is complete. If it occurs the fortune stops abruptly, since the omen is considered ill and the future is too black to be forecast. This must be told the guest before his fortune is begun. A bob is given him with which to stir.

The first rhyme chanted by the fortune teller runs thus:

"One I love; two I love; three I love I say;
Four I love with all my heart; five I cast away;
Six he loves; seven she loves;
Eight they love;
Nine he comes; ten he tarries;
Eleven he courts and twelve he marries;
Thirteen quarrel; fourteen part;
Fifteen die with a broken heart."

The paper upon which the names are written is then closely folded and given to the fortune teller, who holds it during the entire fortune, when she burns it unopened, over the candle flame.

Next came the getting ready to drive to the train. Some men who had waited, half sentimentally, to go down with the bride, bustled about cheerfully, glad of the nearer prospect of sleep. One of the girls called to know in which carriage the heroine was going, and the hero's heart stopped as he waited to hear her answer, certain that she would not dare, before them all, to say that she was going with him. But the heroine was upstairs, and the hero kept on telling himself that at the last minute something would happen to prevent.

At last she came down. There was a block of various vehicles driving up to the door, and he asked her in a low tone if she would mind walking to where his horse was tied to a tree. "He does not stand well," he explained. She went with him, disbelieving the excuse, out into the dark beneath the trees; and they drove down the winding road behind a "dayton" full of cheerful men, his horse plunging and trying to run, from his long wait in the cool air.

"It was true, you see, you boy of little faith."
"And now I can look at you in the starlight without fear and without reproach—or rather without fear of reproach."
"No, you can't. I can look at you in the starlight; but you, poor thing, have to be circumspect, as though there were a dozen people around, because the road is narrow and on your driving depends the unbrokenness of two very nice necks—and it's so unromantic to break a girl's neck."
They trotted swiftly along the sinuous undulating road. On the left the dark, wooded hills rose steeply from the edge of the road, while on the right the meadow, three or four feet below them, invited an easy upset. The red Piedmont clay makes night driving an affair of keen sight, not reflecting that glimmer of light which and like all good things must give place to something new. This something new is the fortune rod, or the rod of destiny. The rod may be a stout staff or cane, supported from some high point by a cord at each end. To this rod are hung the symbols of destiny. These symbols may be either the article itself or a picture of the article, each hung by a cord, and no two cords of the same length. Blindfold the one who seeks to look into the future, turn him thrice around and let him reach out his hand to seize his fortune. The article he first touches

ONE VIRGINIA NIGHT

By KENNETH BROWN

(Copyright by S. S. McClure Co.)

Most of the wedding guests were in the parlor. In one corner of the sitting room were the hero and the heroine. Of what? Oh, nothing much, only of each other. The room was bare of furniture, for dancing; she sat on a footstool, clasping her hands around her knees and looking down at him; and he sat on a music book, for the sake of his clothes, at the heroine's feet, for sake of her. A red-headed girl and her escort were over in the opposite corner, and she made complimentary remarks about the heroine in a stage undertone. The remarks were strictly true, but the heroine despised the red-headed girl, and considered them impertinent; the hero considered them superfluous.

"If she does not stop talking about me," said the heroine, "I shall go away."

"And punish me for the sins of the red-headed girl," the hero asked, "when I have been so good all the evening? This is almost the only time I have monopolized you tonight."

"Yes; but you have been rewarded by knowing that I wanted to talk with you, instead of the others."

"Trying to believe that, by myself, isn't over satisfactory?"

"Isn't this satisfactory?" Her eyes had a slightly hurt look in them that was very effective.

He half-way reached his hand out to hers; then remembered the red-headed girl. "It is worth ages of being good, dear," he said, softly. "It is worth so much that I shan't even tease you to do something which I know you can't, but which I do wish you could."

"What is that?"

"It is to drive down to the station with me when the bride goes away. I know you can't, but wouldn't it be nice?"

The heroine sat a minute thinking. "Yes, it would be nice," she said slowly, reflecting. "I don't suppose I could go."

"Oh! can't you?" he cried, eagerly, hope springing up where he had thought there was no room for hope. "I must go away now," she said, jumping to her feet. She turned as she reached the door. "I'll see," she called back.

He would have followed her, except that that would not have been "good," and he knew he would lose everything unless he were good. It was an unfair game; she could move swiftly away from him without attracting attention; while he could not move after her at all, though really a better walker than she. And by practice he had become philosophic, which is a good thing if one become not so philosophic as to seem indifferent—and even that has its uses.

He went into the parlor and danced with the bride. They were very good friends, and, had his mind not been filled with the heroine, he would have regretted that so nice a girl should be married. The guests dwindled away a few at a time, except some of the more intimate friends who were going to stay until the bride went to the train at 2 o'clock. By and by the dancing stopped and some one began to play plaintive airs from Heller's "Studies" and "Martha" and part of the "Pathetic Sonata" which fitted in.

The people sat down on the sofa and the chairs, then on footstools, and the men on the floor. The bride nestled down at her father's feet and leaned against his knees, arranging her dress around her in the way girls have to keep it from getting soiled, until she appeared like a fuffy nautilus.

Some listened to the music, and some talked softly of the wedding and of the bride's chances for happiness. They were those who had married and lived unhappily ever after; yet the woman who had suffered most was the most optimistic. To the hero it seemed a long time that the heroine required him to be good. He was really more unhappy than if she had not given him the hope of driving with her; he kept telling himself that there was not the faintest chance—he was Polycurates throwing his ring into the sea.

At last she came and stood beside him. "I will come if I can," she said in a low tone; then moved a step away from him, and raising her voice spoke of other matters, for the room to hear. She asked him one or two questions without getting an answer; stopped, and looked inquiringly at him.

"You may as well go on talking for the gallery," he said; "I am paying absolutely no attention, except to what you said first; there is nothing else I care for now—if it is only true."

She moved a step nearer to him, and stooped down to examine the ferns on the mantelpiece. "Please don't look at me like that," she whispered. "It's such a—such a giveaway."

He dropped his eyes to her hands nervously arranging the ferns. "I must be good with my eyes, too, must I? But it isn't polite to gaze at the ceiling while talking with—now don't give the obvious retort that in that case it would be wiser not to talk."

They were standing very close together, as people who examine ferns dirt or gravel roads do. Providence has wisely given the red roads to the South, where such obstacles to social intercourse are not considered.

The heroine held the hero's left hand between hers. At times he had to snatch it suddenly away, to save them from driving over the edge of an unprotected bridge or down into a more than usually encroaching ditch; for the driving of a not over-well-broken horse with one hand requires more care than the hero was willing to give, when the heroine was beside him. The stars above them gave that light more clear and unearthly than any moonlight; and for a time the hero was content.

When they got out on the country road he no longer had to pay so much attention to the horse. He looked at her pure, starlit face beside him, and once or twice he leaned toward her till his cheek touched hers.

"Some one will see," she said gently, but not moving from him.

"Please, ma'am, how good do you think people's sight is?" he asked.

"But it is getting lighter!" she protested.

"Yes, I expect the moon is beginning to rise—I shall have to drive a little more slowly."

"Oh! she laughed; "I wish I hadn't spoken."

A long hill was before them, and when they got to the top, they saw the waning moon just rising in the east and dimming the stars.

"And you are coming back with me, too, aren't you?" he asked when they were halfway to town.

"Why are you never content?" she reproached him. "When you have something, you are always worrying about something else."

"But you will, won't you?" he persisted.

"Please don't ask me! No, I don't believe I can. There will be plenty of room in the trap and it would be silly for you to drive 'way out in the country again with me."

It was the bitter in the sweet, the thought of this drive back which he could not have. It in a way spoiled the present for him, and yet in a way also it made every moment with her inexpressibly dear. He pleaded most of the rest of the way to be allowed to drive her home, but she would not promise. "It would look so," she said, which is a strong argument with a girl. Just before they got to the station she yielded a little. "Well, if I can without its seeming funny, I will," she said reluctantly; and with that he had small hope.

The train was late, as the night train in Virginia always is when any one is going away. The bride sat on a bench, near the stove which tempered the chill of the October night. The other girls clustered around her; sitting off and getting up again to stroll down into the corners of the room with the men. At times couples went out on the platform to see whether the train was coming, and to watch the moon and the long shadows it cast across the country.

The bride and the heroine sat all the time together, loving each other as girls do on mournful occasions. The heroine was the only one of the girls who didn't wander off; and she stayed partly because the bride cared for her more than she did for any of the others, but more because as

While attending the Fourth Annual Meeting of the American Roentgen Ray Society in St. Louis a few weeks ago I purchased the finest X-Ray apparatus ever constructed in the United States. I have had the coil and accessories mounted in an especially constructed room, and am now prepared to do any kind of diagnostic or radiographic work as cheaply and as satisfactorily as it can be done in the north or east. Correspondence solicited. The following letter was received by me from the makers of this magnificent machine:

heroine said. "Yes," he answered, and she said no more.

The moonlit landscape stretched out at their feet; it was hard to believe that anything sordid or wicked could exist amid such beauty. The hero turned to the heroine:

"It seems to me now, dear, as if even if we were married, I should be satisfied with this. I don't suppose I should, but it seems so tonight."

She did not answer, she only pressed a little closer to her bosom the hand she held in hers. The horse began of his own accord to trot down the other side of the hill, and the hero let the reins flap on his back.

"Such a night as this, dearest, is worth dying for; it would make a life worth having lived." His voice was so low that she could hardly hear him.

"Yes," she answered. Far below, where the two roads came together, they could hear the trap and the hoof-beats of the horses.

"We must hurry a little now," she said, turning to him. He slapped the reins on the horse's back, and the horse jumped forward and clattered down the hill.

if she must do penance for that. The hero stood in front of them, that the electric light might not shine into their eyes. This was kind of him, since he wanted to see the heroine's eyes; but he was willing to do anything to earn the drive home.

The three happened to be alone once, and he resolved to risk everything on one throw.

"I wish to ask you something," he leaned toward the bride. "Mayn't I drive her home?"

"Oh! but that's absurd," quickly interposed the heroine, "to take you all that way out into the country again, when I can just as well as not get back in the trap with the others."

Then the hero was glad he had not awaited the course of events. He paid no attention to the heroine's disclaimer; the bride was his friend, and he felt that she would understand.

"Mayn't I?" he asked again. "You're a nice married lady now, and can say, 'Why, yes—' The bride broke off and turned to the heroine. "Do you want to go with him?" she demanded.

It was the critical moment. The hero dared not glance at the heroine. His eyes would have implored too much, and others might see the imploring, and then she certainly would say no.

For just an instant she hesitated. Then quite naturally, she answered, "Yes, I think I should like to go with him."

She got up and stood by the stove as some of the moon gazers came in. "Then it is all settled?" he said in an undertone.

She nodded, moved slightly away from him and talked to others with vivacity. Then he knew the safest way now was to act as though there were only one course open. He thought the train would never come, and when it came, it did not hasten away again as a well regulated train should, but loitered about, puffing and panting like a broken-winded old horse that has been over-driven.

When the heroine was safe in the hero's buckboard at last, he sighed. "That was such a sigh," she said. "Now I am perfectly happy," he said.

"Are you, dear?" she answered. "I don't believe I have ever seen you perfectly happy before. It's worth something to make you so." She put out her hand and took his again, and he gave it, though there were still corners to turn. He was willing to drive by faith.

The trap took the other road, and for a time the heroine did not even worry lest they should not get home as soon as it. The splendor of the moon descended on them. Late as the hour was, there was not yet the feel of morning that, earlier in the summer, so soon changes the glorious night away. When the road dipped into the hollows it was cool—so cool that the hero doubled the rug and wrapped it all around the heroine's knees—and she did not protest at his depriving himself, but leaned a little more toward him and thanked him.

The horse traveled steadily along. He seemed to know that this was one of the times when a horse should show his sagacity. Up the long hill, into the warm upper air, the horse walked.

ly kept lawns and many have planted shade trees. In the summer time the place looks much like a park, so pretty are the homes and the lawns. The streets are broad and well graded. The water of the best kind and as pure as ever came from any wells in the state is to be found there. Pipes have been laid up and down the principal streets in many of the alleys, supplying all with water at the doors. There are four large tanks on the Heights. Over 25,000 feet of three-inch pipe completes the system and as the residences increase more is to be laid. The four tanks supplying the water and giving it the desired pressure are large affairs. Two have a capacity of 15,000 barrels, and the other two hold 2,500 barrels each. The tanks are substantial affairs and give plenty of force to the water, thus giving fire protection, as well as other uses. Electric motors pump the water into the tanks and gravitation carries the water through the pipes.

The Southwestern Telephone Company has strung wires over the additional and many have already had telephones installed in their homes. The Fort Worth Telephone Company is also stringing wires there with the intention of letting all who wish have their choice of the two services. Through this method the residents there can talk to any one in Fort Worth without any additional charge.

APPROACHING ROSEN HEIGHTS FROM NORTH FORT WORTH, GOING WEST ON MAIN STREET.

When Sam Rosen came to Texas more than twenty-one years ago Texas was not the state it is today. In those days Texas was a wild country and Fort Worth was not even a respectable sized village. He came all the way from Poland, in Europe, where he was born in the year 1871. Leaving behind him his parents and friends he resolved to strike out in the world for himself, as he saw no opportunity to make either fame or fortune in that oppressed land. Mr. Rosen only did, as many thousands of others have done, and came to the land of the free, America, ultimately getting to Texas.

Coming to America with practically no funds or no friends, he drifted with the westward tide and naturally came to Texas. Here he found that few knew the tongue he spoke and few had use for a youth of his years. With that indomitable courage which in later years has stood by him so resolutely, he decided to fight it out, for as Mr. Rosen has truly said to his intimate friends on several occasions, there was nothing else for him to do. Looking about him in the great state for employment he found none. Nobody wanted a mere youth to work for them. Men were plentiful and wages were good and men wanted men's labor. Sam was up against it, but with that characteristic determination he kept up the search for work and at last secured it. He was given a position by a farmer and for a year from early morning to late at night his time was spent in doing the hardest kind of work for the handsome stipend of $5 per month.

The poverty and want of Poland, of which when a boy he had opportunities to learn, early taught him to be thrifty and to save his money. At the end of the year he had the bulk of the money for which he had toiled so hard and he was determined to hold on to it. Seeing with that shrewdness which has been his lot to possess, that the farm offered nothing for him, but a life of drudgery and toil, he readily grasped an opportunity to accept a position in a crockery store at Dallas, at but a small increase in salary. As a clerk he was a success, and after some time at this business he decided to come to Fort Worth, which was attracting many of the Dallas citizens, who saw more of a future in this city than in the Great Dallas, the name by which it was known at that time.

COMES TO FORT WORTH

With his meager savings of two years of hard work he came to this city and neither Mr. Rosen nor the citizens of Fort Worth regret the fact that he came here, for today he is not only one of the substantial citizens of Fort Worth, but during his residence here he has prospered and has always been ready and willing to assist in any way in the betterment of the city and its upbuilding and growth. From a start of almost nothing he has by his own frugality and honesty in his dealings succeeded in building up a fortune of $60,000 in real property, being at the present time one of the wealthiest taxpayers in Tarrant county, besides known all over the state as a man whose word is as good as his bond.

When Mr. Rosen came to Fort Worth he invested his savings in a stock of goods, such as notions, clothing and crockery. He opened up a store on Main street, between Eleventh and Twelfth. Here he was located for almost two years. From this location he moved to a building between Fifth and Sixth streets and did business in this location for eleven years. From the last named place he moved to the corner of Main and Tenth streets, where the Western National Bank is now located. During all of these years Sam Rosen prospered and as his savings accumulated he would take them and invest in real estate. He was one of the men who saw a future for Fort Worth and at an early date realized the importance of striving to push forward the city's interests and to welcome the time when Fort Worth would no longer be a frontier post, but a city of magnificent proportions, and Sam was about right, for the city has by leaps and bounds outgrown even his most sanguine expectations.

HE BUYS A SUBURB

Square dealings as a merchant and proper treatment to the many tenants of his rent houses, and there was a time when Sam Rosen had a number of such buildings, brought to him prosperity and a reputation among all as a man of honesty of purpose and one in whom every man in the city had confidence. About two and a half years ago as Fort Worth was spreading out with the giant strides of a metropolis, Mr. Rosen began to look about with the idea of giving those who wished an opportunity to get away from the grime and dust of the ever-growing city. He began to realize the fact that the time was not far off when Fort Worth would become the metropolis of the southwest and that the narrow city limits would not and could not hold all the people who were pouring into it from those on the road. About the outskirts of the growing city on all sides he searched for an ideal place. He wanted to find some place where those who labored in the city amid its din and noises could, when the day's work was done, take a street car and in a few minutes be whirled out into the country and there find rest and quietness amid fresh air. In the lap of nature, within a cozy home.

In the search he came across the beautiful suburb to Fort Worth now called Rosen Heights, and rightly so, for it is through Sam Rosen and his efforts that the residents there have the many advantages which they are privileged to enjoy. Rosen Heights is today one of the prettiest suburbs of Fort Worth. Its citizens have all the enjoyments of city life in the way of good water, electric lights and fans, street car facilities, doctors, hotels, stores, good schools, telephones, cozy homes, which they are paying for in many cases on the installment plan, and fresh air untainted by the dust and dirt of the city. When the Rosen car line into Fort Worth is completed, which will be in several weeks, then the residents can come and go from Fort Worth in less than fifteen minutes. Their rent is low, if they be renters, but renters are scarce on Rosen Heights, for almost everybody owns his own home or will in a short time.

ESTABLISHES ROSEN HEIGHTS

To one who has never visited Rosen Heights, a visit will reveal many things of which he never dreamed. A little over two years ago when Sam Rosen bought nearly a section of the finest land about Fort Worth, it was known as Rosen Heights, it was then only known as farm land. The day after he had closed the deal for this property, others, seeing what he foresaw, but a little too late offered him an increase over his purchase price of $25,000. Mr. Rosen thought hard and long over the proposition, but came to the conclusion that his property was located in an ideal spot and that the time was near at hand when many would want to move from the city and yet enjoy a big city's advantages, without the taxes of a city, and the many other hindrances, that he had better keep what he had and let well enough alone, and that is what he did.

The large farm was in time staked off into lots and put on the market and in each deed were certain guarantees given, among others that the purchasers of any of the lots would in so many months have the advantage of a car line right into the heart of Fort Worth. It might be that Sam Rosen was straining a point, for few had even dreamed of such a thing. People who were inclined to be a little skeptical doubted the statement of the man, but Mr. Rosen has since demonstrated that he knew whereof he spoke, and has already shown that he could keep his word and did. Today the Rosen Heights street car line is running into the city of Fort Worth and in a short time will run as far into the city as the Texas and Pacific depot. Cars of a spacious pattern will be put into the service and when the line is opened, which will be in but a short time, as good a car service as one can want will be had. To complete the line all now depends on the completion of the large steel bridge, which is in the process of erection across the Trinity river just to the west of the old wire bridge on the White Settlement road. This structure is to be a modern affair, 150 feet long by twenty feet wide, and will weigh seventy-six tons. The piers have been planted and the work is being pushed as rapidly as possible.

THE SCHOOL SYSTEM

The school system in vogue on Rosen Heights is of a novel kind. At no place can better schools be found. They are under the direction of the county superintendent of instruction. Mr. Rosen, seeing the necessity of the growing population in the way of a school, and not getting the assistance asked for and deemed necessary, had erected a very substantial two-story school building. The county then agreed to supply the teachers which it did, giving the school three of the best county teachers and a principal. The present attendance at the school is in the neighborhood of 300 pupils, and all of them are a bright faced and happy lot, who are taking advantage of the educational opportunities that have been given

SAM ROSEN.

IN TWENTY-ONE MONTHS

Just twenty-one months ago the first house on Rosen Heights was completed. Today there are over three hundred houses there and many more in the process of erection. Six days in the week can one hear the sound of the carpenter's hammer and saw. The man who is a builder there need not be idle. His services are in demand. At the present time at least from five to ten good substantial homes are being built. From no population at all, now one finds a city of almost two thousand people. They are happy and contented. Most of them own their own homes or are paying for them on easy payments and soon will own them. The houses are not rough, unpainted little shanties, but cozy cottages and residences of considerable reputation. They have been built to live in and for the people occupying them to call them homes. In front of the houses are nice-of the promoters of this beautiful suburb is to erect a large artificial lake. This lake is to be an immense affair and to cover almost fifty acres of ground. It will be 120 feet in size. Here next summer two large dams are to be built, which will straighten the water from the lake, making a beautiful effect. Near the lake is to be built a handsome pavilion, 150 feet by 120 feet in size. Here next summer Mr. Rosen has arranged to have a series of baseball games played at the park, and also to have the grounds used by athletic associations in contests. The baseball grounds are the largest in the county and are as fine as could be found anywhere. The ground is surrounded with a large board fence.

NO MUDDY STREETS

Residents of the addition have in the rainy weather often spoken of the dry ground and the walks on Rosen Heights. While but few sidewalks have ever been put down they are indeed a luxury, the residents find it no inconvenience to go about, as if it was the driest season of the year. The soil on the Heights is not of the black waxy kind, but is rather of a sandy formation, and no mud sticks higher than a rain. One has in the dry season very little dust to contend with, and no smell of the packing houses, which are almost one-half mile to the east. Rosen Heights is almost 150 feet higher than the plants, and almost 250 feet above the level of Fort Worth. At all seasons of the year one has a cool breeze

IS FACING STARVATION

(Special Cable to Telegram. Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

PARIS, Oct. 29.—The case of Mme. Marsy Escoussara, who is literally facing starvation while occupying a house in this city full of valuables, is put down as the strangest tragedy of French justice.

For fifteen months a sumptuous mansion in the Rue Londres shared by Mme. Escoussara, her mother and sister has been sealed up by order of the courts.

All the big rooms filled with priceless curios have heavy seals fastened upon their doors, the three women living in a little room, absolutely deprived of all resources.

The house is the one to which Mme. Escoussara induced her mother, Mrs. Marsy, to remove her famous business as a dealer in antiques from the Rue Talbott. Their troubles date from the day their London agent, named Parmeggiani, was staying with them, when the police arrested him as an anarchist, and Mme. Escoussara also because they thought that she had received stolen goods.

There was not the slightest proof against her or the agent, so they were soon released, but the police had in the meantime trumped up a charge of murdering her husband against her. As a matter of fact her husband died a natural death in Spain, and she left his property to his relatives before leaving that country for Paris.

The action of the Paris police, however, gave the Spanish relatives the idea of starting a lawsuit, and at the moment the seals were removed by the police here others were put on at the request of the Spanish consul.

Her business now has been ruined, and although she has been able to get Spanish relatives in the lower court, they have appealed the case, and prospects are that the three women will

CHURCHES ARE TURNING

Those of a religious turn of mind will find there plenty of recreation and opportunities to find succor for their religion. Already one church has been erected, that of the Northern Methodist, the congregation of which has put up a neat and creditable edifice. Besides this place of worship others are soon to be erected, among which is one by the Methodist Episcopal church, South. There are numerous church societies and organizations among the ladies and seldom is it that a week passes that there is not some social feature to which all the residents are invited. The spiritual and social welfare of all are well taken care of.

POWER HOUSE ENLARGED

The already large power house on the Heights has been enlarged so as to give room to handle the new cars, which are now on their way from the builders at St. Louis. The power at the plant has been added to by the installation of several new engines of the latest design and type. This will permit Mr. Rosen extending the line into the city and at all times having plenty of power to properly handle the heavy cars. The power is also used for electric lighting and any one wishing can have incandescent lights put into the home.

One of the innovations introduced on the Heights this year was the offering by Mr. Rosen to give any one who will raise trees or flowers the use of all the water they wanted for that purpose. Many took advantage of the offer and as a result the place looked much improved by the planting of many trees along the streets and in the yards. Most of the women folk took a delight in raising all kinds of the prettiest flowers to be seen. Rosen is to permit the offer to be effective as well next year as this and lovers of flowers and trees will there find an ideal retreat.

AN ARTIFICIAL LAKE

In caring for the pleasure and entertainment of the people, residents of Rosen Heights and those who come there for pleasure and recreation, one of the plans and soul in the venture and are determined to see to it that nothing is lacking to make the Fort Worth suburb what it should and will be, the finest of all. Besides these men there are several other prominent men of capital. It is the intention of all of these men to erect during the coming year elegant residences on the property and to assist in making the place one of elegant residences and homes. Plans have already been drawn for a modern $10,000 residence, to be made of brick, which Mr. Rosen is to put up, and the excavation has already started on the foundation of another fine home for one of the prominent bankers of Fort Worth, who has said that he knew of no place where he would rather live than on Rosen Heights.

MEN OF WEALTH

Associated in the business of building and developing Rosen Heights with Mr. Rosen are several men of wealth. Among them are H. Pearlstein, an oil man and capitalist of Beaumont, who, by the way, is a brother-in-law of Mr. Rosen; I. Gordon and J. Gordon, also from Beaumont, and men of wealth. These men joined with Mr. Rosen after he had taken the initiative steps in the development of the property, they seeing what a future Rosen Heights had. These men are heartily from starvation or be forced to go to the poor house, though they are undoubtedly the legal owners of hundreds of thousands of francs worth of property.

WANT TO BE NEAR HIM

(Special Cable to Telegram. Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

ROME, Oct. 29.—Pope Plus X is being kept busy trying to prevent his numerous relatives from leaving their rustic homes for the Eternal City. His holiness has more nephews and nieces than any pope before him, and since he has been the head of the Roman Catholic church they are all eager to be near him.

So far only two of them have succeeded. These are Signor Parolin and his sister, Signorina Nina Parolin, who formerly lived in Rome.

Signorina Nina, who has become quite a grand lady since she came to live in this city, recently paid a visit to her native town, which turned out in full gala to do her honor. In a letter to her uncle, Pope Plus, she complains that visitors do not leave her one moment's peace.

They want her intercession for the most varied reasons, from blessing an infant which has been named for his holiness to procuring all sorts of positions in the vatican for all kinds of people.

She is kept busy all day telling her townspeople how the pope spends his day, how many hours he sleeps, what he eats, how he looks, what he says, and whether he thinks of his townspeople once in a while.

One thing which has pleased them more than all others is the news that "Our Pope" still declares that the dish of "polenta congruosa" (polenta with birds and tomato sauce) never tastes so good to him as when cooked in his sister's kitchen.

THREATENING THE KING

(Special Cable to Telegram. Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

BELGRADE, Oct. 29.—King Peter has, ever since his coronation, been receiving a number of threatening letters, and in some mysterious way more are found almost daily in the king's private apartments, saying that he will be killed before the New Year in the same manner as his predecessor met death before him.

They writers give various reasons why they want to see him dead, and while some of them say that he has deserved death for instigating the plot against the late king, others give as a reason that he has disgraced the country by his strenuous efforts to procure a crown and by parading the streets with a false crown of ridiculous dimensions.

One letter warned him that he would be murdered when on his way to be anointed at the old monastery of Jitchy, after the manner of Servian monarchs from time immemorial.

Nothing happened to the King, however, on the trip, but just before he started an awkward or mischievous court official called the king's attention to the fact that of all the monarchs anointed at Jitchy not one has died a natural death as a ruler of Servia. Some were assassinated and the others exiled.

This made King Peter change his plans, but fear of creating an unfavorable impression at last decided him to proceed.

The Servian ambassador, who some days ago was ordered by King Peter to find out whether Emperor Francis Joseph would receive the king at Vienna, has reported that the emperor distinctly made him understand that he did not desire any intimate relations with the court of Servia, a reply which has created a very bad impression here.

 There are matinees during the week. One every day except Thursday, which is the only dark day during the week. Quite a bunch of attractions are coming for the week, the first being that familiar play, "In Old Kentucky." The company will arrive today, and having an excellent band, there will be a sacred concert at 7 o'clock this evening for the pleasure of those who care to hear some excellent music. In regular order will then come the "Black Patti Troubadours," "A Hidden Crime," "Human Hearts" and closing the week with "The Little Homestead."

THE PAST WEEK

The past week has been a very enjoyable one. It opened with "Candida," which is one of the prettiest comedies ever staged. Next came Al H. Wilson and then for three nights was the Huntley Savoy Theater Company. Miss Carter, the leading lady of this company, is a woman of much ability, and being young in years she has an opportunity to develop into a star. The week closed with "The Burgomaster." The company jumped across the state from El Paso in a special train to reach here in time for a matinee. The attraction has lost none of its pleasures because of its age, and as presented here yesterday and last night it was much enjoyed. There are good actors and singers in the cast, and the delightful music was much enjoyed.

A TEXAS SINGER

The dramatic papers just now are having much to say of Charles Smith, a Texas boy, who is singing at Proctor's Theater in New York City and is making a decided hit. Charlie is a cousin of J. Bailey Pink of this city, deputy clerk of the Federal court. He is a native of Waco and since early childhood he has possessed a sweet, musical voice. He has been heard in Fort Worth, having toured the state one season with Governor Bob Taylor.

"IN OLD KENTUCKY"

A remarkable example of a successful American play wisely handled is "In Old Kentucky," which will be the attraction at Greenwall's opera house Monday matinee and night, October 31. "In Old Kentucky" was originally produced away back in 1892 and was a big money winner from the start. It has always remained under the same management and has always been kept up to a high standard of excellence by its owner, Jacob Litt. Last season it did the banner business of its entire career. This year—the twelfth season of continuous presentation—the piece is put forth in the same elaborate manner and with the same excellent cast that has characterized former years. Every body knows the story of the play. It tells of a feud between the Frierlys and the Lindsays, two families in the mountains of Kentucky, which resulted some years before the opening of the play in the treacherous killing of the father of Madge Lindsay. Frank Layson, a rich young man from the blue grass valley or at the race track in Lexington; its characters are typical Americans, and none are more strongly typical than the pickaninnies gathered from all parts of the southland. The whole atmosphere of the play is of the glorious land over which triumphantly the playing of brass instruments, the old-time plantation singing and dancing, baton swinging and banjo playing form a most entertaining portion of one act of the play. "In Old Kentucky" has a wonderful grasp upon the affections of the average theater-goer, probably because of its intense, rugged, honest Americanism everywhere in evidence, whether among the mountain peaks of Kentucky, down in the blue grass valley or at the race track in Lexington; its characters are typical Americans, and none are more strongly typical than the pickaninnies gathered from all parts of the southland. The whole atmosphere of the play is of the glorious land over which triumphantly

Herald has termed a "blazing sublimity of mirth, melody and action, followed by a vaudeville olio, and closing with the Offenbach review, with Black Patti and the entire singing forces."

"A HIDDEN CRIME"

J. M. Ward's production of John Lockney's sensational comedy-drama, "A Hidden Crime," comes to Greenwall's opera house for matinee and night Wednesday, November 2. The play is said to be mounted in an extravagant manner and the cast contains many well known names. The story of the play is as follows:

Five massive sets of scenery are carried complete. The first act shows the slums of Chinatown with the Golden Gate harbor in the distance, the second takes place in a magnificent gambling den, and the third shows the exterior of the gambling house on a moonlight night. The fourth, and last, is laid at San Rafael, showing a rose garden in full bloom and the sensational breaking of the suspension bridge.

Matinee prices 25 cents to any part of the house, and night 25c, 35c, 50c.

"HUMAN HEARTS"

Till we have reflected on it, we are scarcely aware how much the sum of human happiness is indebted to the stage. We acquire cheerfulness and vigor from mere association with our fellow men in the theater, and from the looks of happy expectancy radiating from our neighbor's countenance, inspired by the anticipation of prospective enjoyment of a good, clean, wholesome drama, well acted and properly presented.

Such, at least, is the idea brought forcibly to mind in gaining over an audience assembled to witness W. E. Nankeville's great production, "Human Hearts," aptly described as the "forever evergreen success."

"THE LITTLE HOMESTEAD"

The depths to which an unscrupulous man will sink in a base and all-absorbing desire for revenge, is shown in the character of the villain in "The Little Homestead." He seeks to wreak his revenge for an imaginary wrong upon his former college chum, through striking at the sanctity of his home, and in a moment of weakness the wife succumbs to the wiles and assists in wrecking her own home and happiness. The bitterness of her life thereafter with the drunkard's abuse of her soul-destroyer is punishment indeed. The retribution which sooner or later overtakes evil, befalls the villain as he is planning even more wickedness. The unfortunate woman wrecked in health and all that makes life worth the living, she determines to ruin Layson by destroying the latter's favorite mare—Queen Bess—which is to run on the morrow in the great race. The Ashland Oaks. If the race is not won by Queen Bess, Layson is a ruined man. Lindsay's scheme is foiled by Madge, who rescues the horse from the burning stable. On the day of the race the jockey gets drunk and Madge, disguised as a jockey from New York, rides the horse to victory. Eventually Frank Layson weds Madge, Lem Lindsay, alias Horace Holton, is discovered and meets death at the hands of Lorey. A feature of the play of no little importance is the pickaninny scene. SCENE FROM "HUMAN HEARTS."

Horace Holton, having failed to bring about the marriage of his daughter, Barbara, with Frank Layson, attempts to make Lorey murder Layson by stating that Lorey had informed the revenue officers of Lorey's illicit still. Failing in this, he determines to ruin Layson by destroying the latter's favorite mare—Queen Bess—which is to run on the morrow in the great race. The Ashland Oaks. If the race is not won by Queen Bess, Layson is a ruined man. Lindsay's scheme is foiled by Madge, who rescues the horse from the burning stable. The revelry of the little colored lads and wave the stars and stripes. The heart interest is strong, the various situations thrilling, the action swift, the dialogue racy of the Daniel Boone state, the villainy of the sort that is watched with bated breath and the love-making delicious. "In Old Kentucky" has all the elements for the striking of a harmonious chord in the hearts of good people, and so potent that the vibrations are long continued. It is a clean, sweet play from beginning to ending. Grand street parade today (Sunday) at 5 p. m. and grand band concert front of opera house, 7 p. m.

"BLACK PATTI TROUBADOURS"

The "Black Patti Troubadours," which is recognized as one of the most popular and successful stage attractions in the United States, presenting a varied style of entertainment, will be seen at the Greenwall opera house Tuesday matinee and night, November 1. The company consists of forty Afro-Americans, headed by Sissieretta Jones, popularly known as the Black Patti, and considered to be the most accomplished singer of her race, and John Rucker, the Alabama Blossom, reputed to be the funniest colored man alive. Black Patti has appeared with great success in Europe—singing at Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, London and other music centers, and enjoys the distinction of having sung by command for the present king of Great Britain. Her success in the United States covers a period of ten years. During that time she has appeared before the largest audiences that ever assembled to pay homage to a diva. At the Madison Square Garden, New York City, she attracted an audience numbering over 16,000, and at the great Pittsburg exposition 23,000 people assembled to hear her sing.

The stage show is given in three parts—first the darkey fun skit, called "Lookey Dreamland," which the New York

In his earlier days Charles B. Handford was associated with an actor whose main ambition was to occupy the center of the stage under any and all circumstances. One day this actor was seen going toward his hotel with a large square package.

"I wonder what he is carrying?" said a third member of the organization. "I don't know," answered Mr. Handford, "but it is probably the center of the earth."

A GREAT SENSATION

There was a big sensation in Leesville, Ind., when W. H. Brown of that place, who was expected to die, had his life saved by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. He writes: "I endured insufferable agonies from Asthma but your New Discovery gave me immediate relief and soon thereafter effected a complete cure. Similar cases of Consumption, Pneumonia, Bronchitis and Grip are numerous. It's the peerless remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Guaranteed by Matt S. Blanton & Co., Reeves' Pharmacy, W. J. Fisher, druggists. Trial bottle free.

HER HUSBAND IMPRISONED HER
 (Special Cable to Telegram. Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)
 BUDAPEST, Oct. 29.—The wife of an oil merchant named Kund, of this city, was found by the neighbors behind an iron grating at a window, protesting that her husband kept her imprisoned there.
 When her husband was arrested he gave as his excuse that his wife had a mania for buying costly things and contracting large bills for hats, laces and clothing which had nearly ruined him, and as he loved her too much to separate from her, he had kept her imprisoned on week days, letting her out only on Sunday, when the stores were closed.
 The wife admitted that her husband had been justified in doing so and that he had treated her very well in all other respects, and as she said she could not promise to be less extravagant in the future, the court allowed her husband to keep her locked up during the week and she willingly followed him home.
PERIL IN THE HAND-SHAKE.
 Not long ago Dr. J. N. Hirsch, of Chicago, said: "The most delicate perfume upon the hands is not a sign of freedom from germs, and the most refined are not proof against the spread of lung or throat, and the germs are rapidly spread by touching the hand that has handled the handkerchief of one afflicted with a cold, catarrh or consumption. The breath one inhales from the hand of another may contain germs of disease. You will not be able to resist the germs of consumption, but many thousands of cases have been known where persons who were suffering from incipient phthisis, or the early stages of consumption were absolutely cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It maintains a person's nutrition by enabling him to eat, retain, digest and assimilate food. It overcomes the gastric irritability and symptoms of indigestion, and thus the person is saved from those symptoms of fever, night-sweats, headache, etc., which are so common."
 An alternative extract like Dr. Hirsch's Golden Medical Discovery, made of roots and herbs, without the use of alcohol, will assist the stomach in assimilating or taking up from the food such elements as are required for the blood, will assist the liver in throwing off the poisons in the system.
 Do not permit some designing druggist to insult your intelligence by offering you a remedy which he claims is "just as good"—because he made it up himself, or ten chances to one you will get a medicine made up largely of alcohol, which will only weaken the system.
 Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is heartily recommended by every person who has ever used it and it has stood the test of thirty-eight years of approval from people all over the United States.
 Dr. Pierce's Medical Discoveries are sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 31 stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Prize Winners!

The Telegram begs to report that the three following are the winners in the Third Classified Misspelled Word Contest:

Mabel Crabtree, 703 Samuels Avenue.

Mrs. Moore, 404 West First Street.

Mr. Clark, 505 Texas Street.

Checks have been prepared for these prize winners. Many other correct answers came in, but the three who received awards were first received. The envelopes, as they came into the office, were numbered and opened in order of numbering. The first three numbers, which had the correct answers, were made the winners. The "officially" misspelled words were in The Telegram Saturday, and were four in number. Some errors other than the official errors appeared, but these did not count.

Another contest is now on. It started with last Sunday's issue. Some day during the week "officially" misspelled words will appear. The conditions are stated below. Several hundred replies came during the past week. Try for one of these prizes this week.

Three Cash Prizes

To stimulate interest in The Telegram classified pages, three prizes of $1.00 each are going to be awarded EVERY WEEK to the three persons who will each week find certain misspelled words on this page in one of the seven issues of each week. Only the business manager of the paper will know on what day the words will be misspelled. It may be Monday. It may be Tuesday. It may be Wednesday or Thursday or Friday, Saturday or Sunday. The misspelled words will appear only on one day of each week. New prizes will be awarded every week. The three who get correct answers to the paper first will receive the awards. There may be two words or names misspelled. There may be three or even four. Maybe more. No one will know except the business manager and none but him will know what the words are. Watch the Want Page every day.

If you think Sunday is the day, read the ads on the want page very carefully. If it isn't, read Monday's paper carefully. If that is not the lucky day try Tuesday, and so on through the week until the right day turns up. It won't take you long to run over the ads every evening. When the right day comes around write a letter to the Contest Editor and tell him what you think the errors are. Mark the envelope "For The Contest Editor of The Telegram," and either bring or send it to The Telegram office. As each envelope is received it will be immediately numbered. The first three envelopes containing the correct answers will entitle the owners to the three prizes of One Dollar each. Each contest closes Saturday at 6 o'clock p. m. Each contest will begin with the Sunday morning paper and runs through the seven issues of the week. Telegram employees or members of their families not allowed to compete.

KEEP YOUR EYES OPEN. YOU MAY WIN A DOLLAR EASILY.
