WE HAVE IMPROVED OUR SWINE

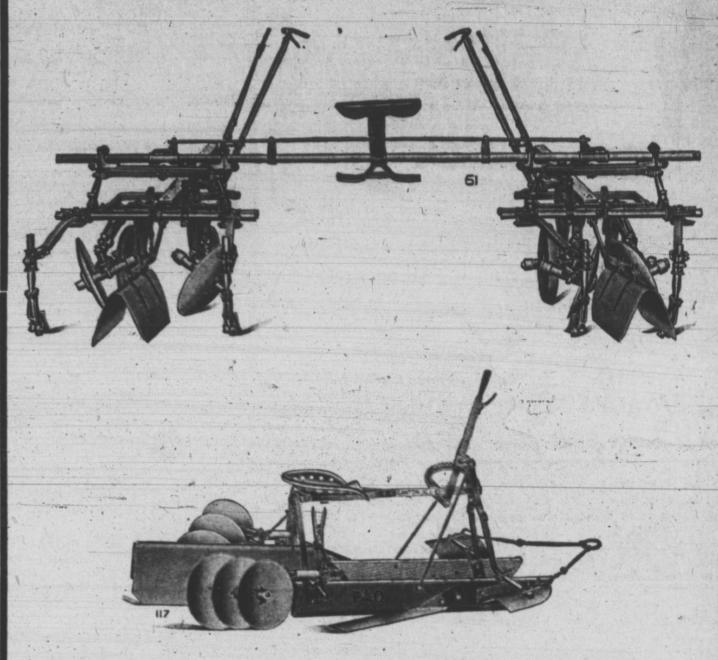

(By W. J. Carmichael in The Swine W orld)

The present day hog is of ancient lineage and has a heterogeneous collection of relatives, none of which have been domesticated and improved to the extent shown in modern swine. The wild boar, the immediate ancestor of the hog of today, has his characteristics shown to a remarkable extent in the so-called razor-back hog which is found growing wild in the Ozarks and other sections of continental United States and in some of our insular possessions. This type is a poor meat animal. The pigs usually come in small litters, have longitudinal stripes on their back and sides and show many of the characteristics of other "wild" animals. Mature specimens of both sexes are undersized as compared with those in domesticated herds, are thin in flesh, and agile and fleet of foot.

There are numerous relatives of the American hog which can be found in various sections of the world today. Among them are the Collared peccary, frequently spoken of as "Javelina" in southwestern United States; the White-Lipped peccary, found in British Honduras and Paraguay; the "Cuino," which is very popular in some sections of Mexico; the pigmy hog of the Himalayan foothials, a dwarf which seldom attains a height of over twelve inches; the Bakong hog of Austria-Hungary; the masked pig of Japan, which is characterized by the immense folds or wrinkels of skin about the face and neck; the Jthorny pig of the mountain," which is a small, ferocious, heavy-tusked hog found in Carpathia and Transylvania; the gray bush pig, and the red bush pig or river hog of the continent of Africa, also found in Oceania and Madagascar; and the wart hog, of Abyssini, with its three waarty protuberances just below the eyes. A few of these types are of considerable local importance, but none are of very great consequence in general commerce.

Doubtless nearly everyone has read or heard of the story of the first eating of pork, as related by Charles and Mary Lamb, in one of the essays of Elia, entitled "Dissertation on Roast From this it seems that the Pig." "home fire burning" was of greater importance to the growth and development of the swine industry than the famous lantern episode with Mrs. O'Leary's cow was to the reconstrucion in Chicago.

less, they exist. Not a few, of the most outstanding hogs of the past have been reared in ramshackle buildings and under apparently unsanitary conditions. As one man has said, "Show me the man and not his premises and I will show you his pig" Another revised an old adage to read "Spare the feed and spoil the pig." The converse is not necessarily true however.

Hog men are born, not raised. Certain groups of individuals hate pigs and as a consequence are unsuccessful in raising them, while others always feed and care for their pigs before looking after personal needs or pleasures.

On the whole the men who have been responsible for the improvement of swine have been artosts. They are not artists in the ordinary sense of the word, but thrice great artists as the late Wm. Warfield has expressed it in his tribute to the stockman in his lines which follow: "He who moulds the counterfeit of life may indeed be an artist of no mean art, but surely thrice greater is he who manipulates the complex nature of the living being, producing an animal in conformity with the ideal of his mind "

It is years back since smokers have heard of any NEW quality in a cigarette.

But here, at last, is a cigarette that does what smokers would never have believed a cigarette could do.

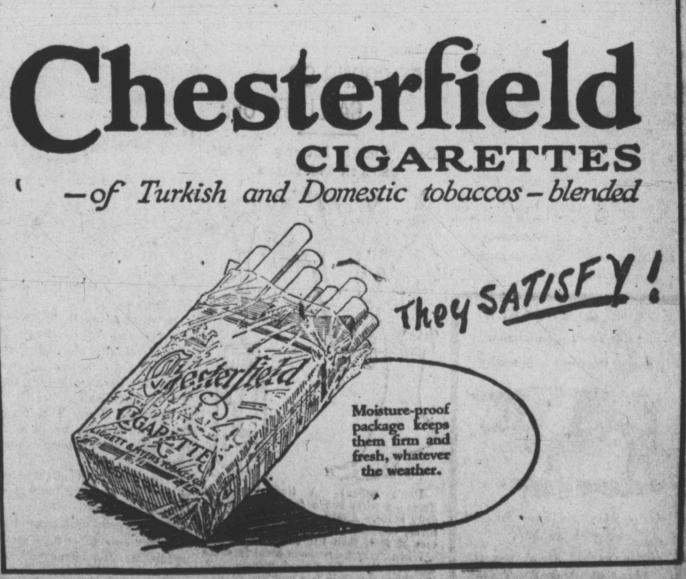

Here's a cigarette that satisfies-Chesterfields.

Chesterfields touch the "smoke-spot." Chesterfields let you know you're smoking. Chesterfields -and Chesterfields only-SATISFY!

It's all in the blend-a blend of the finest selections of Turkish and Domestic tobaccos. And the formula for this blend is the manufacturer's secret. Unlike a patent, it cannot be copied or even closely imitated.

Light up a Chesterfield, some time today, and see how promptly your smoke-sense will put the O.K. on "satisfy."
