Among the radio bugs the deeper interest is still in the length of distance traveled by the message. It transcends the interest in the message itself.

Man's restlessness and dissatisfaction, his craving to venture into the unknown-these are the forces that have brought all progress, that have evolved the cave-dwelling brute into the comparathely high type of mentality of modern times.

Contentment breeds stagnation. Dissatisfaction generates progress.

Curiosity leads to new discoveries. Accordingly, the fact that so many Americans are dissatisfied is a certain indication that rapid progress lies ahead .- Wichita Beacon.

Medical Missionary Tells of His Experiences in Labrador

Dr. Winfred T. Grenfell's lecture on 'Midst Ice and Snow in Labrador," given in the College Auditorium last Friday night at 8:30 p. m., was heard by more than six hundred students and town people. Dr. Grenfell was introduced by Prof. Gordon Lang, head of the Department of Sociology of the College, who has known the famous medical missionary for a number of

Dr. Grenfell is not an orator, but he most interestingly told of the life in Labrador and the conditions that exist there. He is doing a great work in informing the public and is creating a better feeling for humanity, but he is doing and has done a much greater work in the Labrador field as a doctor and as a missionary. He said:

The bleak and barren coast of Labrador has made life unbelievably hard for its inhabitants. The sturdy desendants of Devon and Dorset, Scotch and Irish fishermen, who came over during the last four centuries, have been practically cut off from contact with civilization. The small resident permanent population is augmented each summer by some twenty thousand deep sea foundland, Nova Scotia, and the Maine at reasonable prices.

Ready for Celebration Into Tools Useful to the of Adobe Walls Fight Home and to the Farm

On June 27, several thousand people fight which decided whether the white without spending money. man or the Indian should be master of portions of four states.

. Fifty years ago next June, twentyeight men and one woman, protected only by a sod building of the old Adobe Walls trading camp, fought all day long against 700 Indians.

"Billy" Dixon, famous scout and buffalo hunter who was in this fight, said that the Indians, the flower of the warriors of the Comanches, Cherokees seen as they approached in the early morning of the memorable June day, wearing their most gergeous war paint and mounted on the finest horses their tribes possessed.

Fight Rages All Day

All day the fight raged. The Indians withdrew, carrying their dead and wounded and leaving the ground strewn with their most prized possessions. Beaded ornaments, silver bridle bits, blankets, fancy quirts and other articles were picked up.

Inside the tiny stockade, one man, Billy Tyler, lay dead. Outside two others, who had been sleeping in a wagon, were shot by the Indians before they could escape.

Nearby the bodies of thirteen Indians were found. These were in such positions that their comrades could not rescue them. Most of the dead and wounded were carried away, for the Indians believed that if an Indian lost his scalplock he could not pass into the happy hunting grounds.

Indians "Bubble In Sun"

In the days after the battle all the horses were buried, the white men were laid to rest in one corner of the stockade, but the Indians were dragged away across the prairies and left to "bubble in the sun," as one of the buffalo hunters expressed it.

The records of this region are being gathered together and preserved by the Panhandle-Plains Historical Society, of which the widow of "Billy" Dixon was one of the first officers.

Mrs. Dixon herself has worked untiringly to keep the record of Adobe Walls and of all the incidents of the pioneer stage of Panhandle life.

Fitting Marker Planned

About two years ago, the people of Hutchinson, Roberts and Ochiltree gan to talk of a monument to mark the place where this significant battle took place. Next June, unless plans miscere, will be placed on the old fighting

The historical societies of Kansas and Oklahoma are being asked to take part in this celebration, and it is probable that some of the Indians whose parents fought in this conflict will be present in their native costumes.

Society Plans Program

The arrangements for the celebration are being worked out by T. P. Ried, mayor of Pampa; Mrs. W. T. Coble and Mrs. Olive K. Dixon. The Historical Society is co-operating and will furnish a program in connection: the band of the West Texas State Teachers College will furnish the music.

This movement, sponsored by the Panhandle-Plains Historical Society of which T. F. Turner, a pioneer lawyer of Amarillo, is president, is one which will grow as time goes on.

It is the plan of the organization to mark all battlefields and other places of historic importance in the Panhandle-Plains region of the state.

This will be done by enlisting the interest of each community in its particular spot of interest and then helping that community to suitably mark it.
