Not really politics, except in their relation to life. I am a lawyer by profession, and dabble a bit in city government. The Robinsons had literature.

Don't misunderstand me. We had no papers, no set programs. On the Robinson evenings we discussed editorials and current periodicals, as well as the new books and plays. We were frequently acrimonious, I fear, but our small wrangles ended with the evening.

Robinson was the literary editor of a paper, and his sister read for a large publishing house.

Mrs. Dane was a free-lance. "Give me that privilege," she begged. "At least, until you find my evenings dull. It gives me, during all the week before you come, a sort of thrilling feeling that the world is mine to choose from." The result was never dull. She led us all the way from moving-pictures to modern dress. She led us even further, as you will see.

On consulting my note-book I find that the first evening which directly concerns the Arthur Wells case was Monday, November the second, of last year.

It was a curious day, to begin with. There came days, now and then, that bring with them a strange sort of mental excitement. I have never analyzed them. With me on this occasion it took the form of nervous irritability, and something of apprehension. My wife I remember, complained of headache, and one of the stenographers had a fainting attack.

I have often wondered for how much of what happened to Arthur Wells the day was responsible. There are days when the world is a place for love and play and laughter. And then there are sinister days, when the earth is a dren, and their English butler made our neat maids look commonplace.

We went on to Mrs. Dane's. We were early, as my wife is a punctual person, and soon after our arrival Sperry came. Mrs. Dane was in her chair as usual, with her companion in attendance and when she heard Sperry's voice outside she excused herself and was wheeled out to him, and together we heard them go into the drawing-room. When the Robinson arrived she and Sperry re-appeared, and we waited for her customary announcement of the evening's program. When none came, even during the meal, I confess that my curiosity was almost painful.

I think, looking back, that it was Sperry who turned the talk to the supernatural, and that to the accompaniment of considerable gibing by the men he told a ghost story that set the women to looking back over their shoulders in the dark corners beyond the zone of candle-light. All of us, I remember, except Sperry and Mrs. Dane, were skeptical as to the supernatural, and Herbert Robinson believed that while there were so-called sensitives who actually went into trance, the controls which took possession of them were buried personalities of their own, released during trance from the sub-conscious mind.

"If not," he said truculently, "if they are really spirits, why can't they tell us what is going on, not in some vague place where they are always happy, but here and now, in the next house? I don't ask for prophecy, but for some evidence of their knowledge. Who are going to be the next candidates for president? Is Horace here the gay dog some of us suspect?"

As I am the Horace in question, I must explain that Herbert was merely being facetious.

"Physical phenomena!" scoffed the cynic. "I've seen it all—objects moving without visible hands, unexplained currents of cold air, voice through a trumpet—I know the whole rotten mess, and I've got a book which tells how to do all the tricks. I'll bring it along some night."

"As a matter of fact, Herbert," Mrs. Dane said, "we intend to put your skepticism to the test tonight. Doctor Sperry has found a medium for us a non-professional and a patient of his, and she has kindly consented to give us a sitting. She is a total stranger to all of us except the doctor, and is a newcomer in town."

The butler wheeled out Mrs. Dane's chair, and led us to the drawing-room doors. There Sperry threw them open, and we saw that the room had been completely metamorphosed.

I think it was Sperry who turned the talk to the supernatural then.

hideous place, when even the thought of immortality is unbearable, and life itself a burden; when all that is riotous and unlawful comes forth and bares itself to the light.

This was such a day.

I am fond of my friends, but I found no pleasure in the thought of meeting them that evening. I remember the odious squeak in the wheels of Mrs. Dane's chair. I resented the way Sperry would clear his throat. I read in the morning paper Herbert Robinson's review of a book I had liked, and disagreed with him. Disagreed violently. I wanted to call him on the telephone and tell him that he was a fool. I felt old, although I am only fifty-three, old and bitter, and tired.

With the fall of twilight, things changed somewhat. I was more passive. Wretchedness encompassed me, but I was not wretched. There was violence in the air, but I was not violent. And with a bath and my dinner clothes I put away the horrors of the day.

My wife was better, but the cook had given notice.

"There has been quarreling among the servants all day," my wife said. "I wish I could go and live on a desert island."

We have no children, and my wife, for lack of other interests, finds her housekeeping an engrossing and serious matter. She is in the habit of bringing her domestic difficulties to me when I reach home in the evenings, a habit which sometimes renders me unjustly indignant. Most unjustly, for she has borne with me for thirty years and is known throughout the entire neighborhood as a perfect housekeeper. I can close my eyes and find any desired article in my bedroom at any time.

We passed the Welles' house on our way to Mrs. Dane's that night, and my wife commented on the dark condition of the lower floor.

"When it they are going out," she said, "they would add to the appearance of the street to leave a light on burning. But some people have no public feeling."

I made no comment, I believe. The Welles were a young couple, with children, and had been known to observe that they considered the neighborhood "stodgy." And we had retaliated. I regret to say in kind, but not with any real bitterness, by regarding them as interlopers. They drove too many cars, and drove them too fast; they kept a poverness and didn't see enough of their children, and their English butler made our neat maids look commonplace.

We went on to Mrs. Dane's. We were early, as my wife is a punctual person, and soon after our arrival Sperry came. Mrs. Dane was in her chair as usual, with her companion in attendance and when she heard Sperry's voice outside she excused herself and was wheeled out to him, and together we heard them go into the drawing-room. When the Robinson arrived she and Sperry re-appeared, and we waited for her customary announcement of the evening's program. IT PAYS TO SEE FOR YOURSELF You will be pleased to know that we are going to give the student the benefit of a part of the money that has been paid to salesmen out in the field.

It is better business on your part, to go to the college office, and talk to the president or principal and make your arrangements, see the school, and thoroughly understand what subjects you are to get and why you should take each of the subjects selected to accomplish your particular purpose.

Get our catalogue, read it, then come in and see for yourself. Or, better still, come prepared to stay if the school, the course of study and terms suit you, with the distinct understanding that if the school is not as represented in the catalogue (that the courses can be had in one-half the time and at half the cost and are more thorough than those given elsewhere) we will pay your return fare home.

WHY I DON'T GO TO CHURCH

By Rev. L. P. Thomas. I guess that most all people who do not go to church have either a reason, or an excuse; however, I met one exception to that rule. Just recently, I heard a church member say, "When I'm not at Church, it's just because I don't want to go."

Really I believe that a good case of "Want to" would eliminate most excuses. I knew of a blind man the other day who lived at least a quarter of a mile from the church, who really wanted to go to church Sunday morning, but had no one to take him, so he decided to get ready, and go anyway, thinking that if he should get lost on the way, that maybe someone would pick him up; and sure enough they did.

But if you are really "up against it," you need some friend who never fails, and there is no other friend like that but the Lord. Don't turn away from Him because you are in trouble, that's when you need Him most. Financial depression may keep us from doing many things which we would like to do but it can never keep us from worshipping, and serving God, if we really have a desire to do so.

In spite of all trials, reverses, and depressions, "IT PAYS TO SERVE JESUS." Come on with such clothes as you have. Come in your car, in your old buggy, in your wagon like you used to. Gather up a whole wagon load and drive up and hitch under the big shade tree just run your hitch rope through the end of your wagon tongue and "Hitch 'em to a tree" then when the services are over, you won't have any flats to fix. I'll give $1 for the first wagon load of ten that comes to our Sunday services.

Room and welcome.

FEAR

Almost everybody is afraid of something at some time or another. Right now the whole world seems to be in a state of fear—not fear of war but fear of poverty. I think these fears have been exaggerated by all of the loose talk about business depression and unemployment. There is a certain justification, of course, for the man who is afraid that if he loses his job he won't be able to get another right away.

The people upon whom fear rests most heavily today are those who in flush times enlarge their scale of living to a point where their reduced incomes do not now cover the expenses they have incurred. The only happy people, after all, are the ones who have got their fixed overhead expenses down to a point below their assured incomes. They are the only people I know who are not afraid.

There is always a market for any kind of a product which is of higher quality than the general run of commodities in the same line. Somebody will always pay a quality price for the test.

I know a woman who makes home-made bread, of such high quality and flavor that she has a market among wealthy families for all that she can bake, at twenty-five cents a loaf. Of course, she can only make a limited number of loaves of bread a day.

I know a farmer who has made more money off five acres every year for the past few years than any of his neighbors have made on a hundred acres. He sells fresh vegetables, but instead of shipping them in bulk to the open market he packs them in fancy baskets and boxes, even wraps some of them individually in cellophane.

Several states have taken off the speed limit on automobiles entirely holding drivers strictly responsible for reckless driving but letting them go as fast as they want to travel in thinly populated districts. There are no more motor accidents in these states than there are in others which try to regulate speed on all highways.

Part of this is due to the greater stability and better control of the modern automobile, especially since four-wheel brakes have become standard equipment on all cars. But a large part of it is due to the fact that we now have a generation of motorists who begin to learn to drive when they were children.

I was forty before I ever sat behind a steering wheel. It is impossible that I shall ever become as good a driver as my daughter, who began to drive when she was fifteen and who has better control, even of a heavy car, more self-confidence and quicker reactions, than anybody who began driving late in life can possibly have. Anything which calls for skill, courage and coordination of mind and muscle must be learned young to be learned well.

I had a visit at my farm a few days ago from a young man of 70 who, with his wife, who is in her sixties, was making a round of visits from one brood of grandchildren to another. This old friend had never tried to drive a car until he was 71, but he had driven on this trip from Florida to Iowa, then to Illinois, Wisconsin and across to Northern Michigan on the Canadian border and thence eastward across Ohio and New York State. He stopped off to see me on his way to visit a family of grandchildren on Cape Cod Bay, and was going to drive back to Florida from there.

I had not seen him for five years, but he and his wife each looked ten years younger. This attributed that to the fact that, even in what most of us call old age, they are not afraid to try new things.

I have never seen a greater contrast between the old and the new than the contrast between the old American fighting frigate Constitution, and the great new German flying ship, the DO-X. Both of them came into New York Harbor about the same time. If the men who manned the Constitution in its famous battle had been told that their grandchildren would live long enough to see a ship actually larger than the Constitution, flying through the air at a speed of a hundred miles an hour and carrying seventy-two passengers, they would have thought it necessary to lock up the person who told them that in a lunatic asylum.

We make equally wild predictions today. Probably a hundred years from now nothing will be as the prophets of today picture it.

PAY YOUR BILLS NOW

The most practical and simple means of starting money into circulation and so stimulating the return of prosperity was put forward the other day by Alvan Macauley, president of the Packard Motor Car Company.

We believe that is true. We know many people, and we have heard of many more, who are not paying their bills because they are afraid to reduce their cash resources.

Nobody of course, has any statistics on the subject, but we think it is a fair guess that if, on a given day or during a given week, everybody in America who holds anybody else would pay all that he owes, or all that he is actually able to pay on account, money would begin circulating so fast that there would be an end almost immediately to all of the talk of depression.

Money lying idle in the bank does nobody any good. It is only the revolving dollar that has any value. We would like to see everybody in this country make a start toward the application of Mr. Macauley's sound advice.

EDUCATION

Schools everywhere are under way and the colleges are opening. There is a larger number of students in all grades, from kindergarten to university, than ever before.

As long as this state of things lasts there is no reason to have any apprehension about the future of America. We are getting more close as a nation, to the point where every person above the age of ten will be able to read and write and have some rudimentary knowledge of simple arithmetic.

Every year sees more young Americans entering high school. In some of our larger numbers are seen on hand upon the facilities of the colleges that those institutions are not able to find money and space in which to carry on their work.

In the time when it is always the parents who have learned how to think and control the affairs of a nation, the young folks are learning to be different from those parents. That is the real reason of education, how being different from their fathers. There are no more the same from the time when men and women who were able to look at it. They will see social and political experiments which the older ones would not see.

It is more useless to try to keep the children from choosing. The intelligent thing to do is to give the children every possible opportunity to train their intelligence so that when they start choosing for themselves they will not be blind and stupid but rather enlightened.

Here's a penny my name is not. Well, how did you become a cent? I was always like you, making money out of vast sums to get my name and penny.

FALL CARE OF BROOD SOWS

The feeding and care of the brood sows from now until the fall litters are weaned will largely determine the cost of the pork produced. The brood sow requires exercise and enough feed of the right sort to have her strong and in good flesh at farrowing.

Substitutes may be found for the cottonseed meal and alfalfa meal. Linseed meal, peanut meal, or soybean meal may be substituted for the cottonseed meal, and green grazing or legume hay for the alfalfa meal.

Worms take a heavy toll in lessened growth, but this may be prevented. A few days before the sow is due to farrow give her a bath, wash and disinfect her udder and teats, legs, and feet, and put her in a clean house, made free from worm eggs by being thoroughly disinfected.

Blueberry Pie A good deep-dish blueberry pie is this: butter a deep baking dish and fill with huckleberries which have been looked over and washed. Sprinkle with a half cup of sugar, a tablespoon of flour and three-quarters of a cup of sugar—or more—to a quart of berries. Cover with a top crust, gash it two or three times, and bake.

Vegetable Omelet Spread an omelet, ready to turn, with hot cooked vegetables. Cooked peas, diced carrots, finely cut string beans, and corn cut from the cob make a good combination. Omelets can be much improved in appearance and somewhat improved in taste by garnishing. Watercress or parsley may be used. A sweet omelet may be garnished with preserved strawberries. A vegetable omelet may be garnished with pickled beets or diced vegetables.

"But," I continued, waxing a little bolder, "any one who looks over the capitalistic countries today must admit that our economic organization leaves a lot to be desired. SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

International Sunday School Lesson for October 4. THE MACEDONIAN CALL. Acts 16:6-15; Romans 15:18-21. Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D. This lesson is larger than the study hour and offers much opportunity for special research. After the Council in Jerusalem, Paul, Barnabas and others reported back to the Church in Antioch. Seen the urge for further work abroad caused Paul to lay plans for what we know as the second missionary journey. Barnabas was ready but insisted that John Mark who left them at Perga, be taken along. Paul refused. These fellow servants of the Master showed common sense in agreeing to disagree, but each went forward with the work of the Kingdom. Barnabas took Mark and went to Cyprus. Paul effected a working agreement with Silas and proceeded into Asia Minor. At Lystra a handy man was found in Timothy and he became an efficient substitute for John Mark. It was at Troas, famous in the writings of Homer, that the future itinerary was clearly indicated. Here we find the word "we" used, which indicates that Dr. Luke, the author of Acts, joined the Paul party. Search out and determine just where Luke was with Paul during the rest of his ministry. It may be that Luke told of the great need for ministry in Philippi. It was in a vision that Paul beheld the messenger who pleaded "Come over into Macedonia and help us." Look up the numerous visions that came to Paul both for direction and encouragement. Obediently the four workers set out for the first Christian impact on the continent of Europe as they came to Philippi. That journey meant much to all of us in the western world. Since there were too few Jews there to have a synagogue, a place of prayer was sought out at the riverside and gospelizing began in earnest. Lydia was the first convert and made her confession of faith in the rite of baptism.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

WITH MY READERS I had quite a few letters from different states, referring to my former article, "Mistaken Folks." You will recall, it dealt with those who have sciatic neuritis and mistake it for "rheumatism." And, remedies and measures for rheumatism did not relieve at all. One man had sciatic neuritis, and also has a fissure, a rectal lesion, for years more. Either of these complaints might be causing the neuritis, and should certainly be attended to before attempting to cure the sciatic. And none of his ailments are of the rheumatism variety—not at all. No use to take out tonsils or teeth in the hope of removing rheumatism germs. It is well known that a pronounced lesion of the bladder, prostate gland or rectum may cause sciatic neuritis a disabling disease.

The Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

PADLOCKED MINDS We were discussing Russia at the dinner table of a banker. None of us knew anything about the subject, but that did not prevent a long and animated conversation. The general opinion, forcibly expressed, was that Stalin and his associates represent the greatest menace to the present-day world. It was even urged that all the capitalistic powers ought to combine to overthrow the Bolshevik regime.

"I said that it seemed to me probable that the Russian experiment will have to be very much modified or it will fail. It appears to run contrary to too many deep-seated human instincts." Man is moved by the ambition to acquire opportunity and security for his children. The Bolsheviks deny him the right of acquisition; Man is "incurably religious;" the Bolsheviks have attempted to abolish God. Sooner or later, man has always revolted against unbridled autocracy under whatever guise or name. "But," I continued, waxing a little bolder, "any one who looks over the capitalistic countries today must admit that our economic organization leaves a lot to be desired. Think of the tragedy of wheat selling below the cost of production at a time when thousands are standing in bread-lines. What a frightful thing it is for

This Week in Washington BY RADFORD MOBLEY AUTOCASTER WASHINGTON BUREAU

Special to Hico News-Review
WASHINGTON D. C.—Senator William E. Borah's name will come before the Republican National Convention next summer as a candidate to succeed President Hoover, judging by recent indications. The latest of these is the announcement that a "Borah-for-President" club has been formed by a group of Virginians, the first of its kind in the impending campaign.

Senator Borah was officially notified of the formation of the club at his home in Boise, Idaho, and greeted the news with a smiling countenance and the remark that "he was glad he had so many good friends in Virginia." His reception of the news was evidence that he is not unwilling to be regarded as an opponent to Mr. Hoover for the nomination. It is expected that many more similar clubs will be formed as a consequence of his attitude. His main reply to the notification was a plea to his friends to support his movement for a five-year naval holiday, which he indicated would form the basis of his appeal for votes if he gets out and campaigns.

Borah feels that a naval holiday program, with all its ramifications covering the World Court, opposition to war and its more immediate financial savings, is a large enough platform on which to corral votes. It is known that Borah has been sounded out by some of the leading Progressives regarding his candidacy and they assert he invariably has expressed pleasure whenever the suggestion has been made that he accept the nomination for President.

These same progressives are known to be opposed to reviving the third party and want their standard bearer to oppose Mr. Hoover for the regular Republican nomination. Borah is too astute a politician to believe he can wrest the nomination away from the President and his office-holding cohorts, a feat that is almost impossible, politically, in the United States. Instead, they feel that if Borah can center enough activity behind him he can make a deal before the convention meets by which his ideas can be incorporated in the Republican platform and his ends achieved.

Many politicians here view Borah's possible election as President in a humorous vein. They say Borah is only himself when he is opposing the government. If he becomes the government himself he would be a ship without a rudder, they say. In this connection, President Coolidge's reputed remark is recalled about Borah's penchant for horseback exercise.

Borah maintains a stable in Washington and knows every bridle path in Rock Creek Park. Anyhow, when Mr. Coolidge is said to have learned about Borah's exercise he is quoted as saying: "I don't see how Borah can reconcile himself to going in the same direction as the horse!"

Whether Borah's candidacy will be taken seriously by the Republican National Committee is a question. After all, a candidate must have the treasurer of the party with him and it is doubtful if the monied men of the country will support a man who has shown such radical tendencies in the past.

There seems to be little question but that additional taxation will be levied by the next Congress. Even with the President firmly committed against the national government's aiding its unemployed citizens with any plan that parallels the British system of doles, the government is going to find itself short by at least another billion of dollars next year. Even by paring down all expenses, the gap cannot be bridged largely because the incomes of the big taxpayers have been cut into so deeply that payments into the national treasury have been heavily reduced.

To tax the farmer any more would be a political crime and result in alienating his vote. As a consequence, Congress is faced with a hard problem in raising more money. It appears certain that a system of luxury taxes will be devised. In addition there is a growing feeling that the larger aggregations of capital will be asked to pay more, even the Wall Street crowd being convinced, it is said, that they should pay heavier taxes.

No party likes to impose taxes on the eve of a national election. It begins to look as though the Democrats will be in a majority in both Houses of the next Congress and, if taxes are raised, that party will have to bear the onus of the action. Those in close touch with the trends of the time, politically, claim that new taxes must be levied and that no blame will attach to either party that has to pose as the sponsor of such an action.

Many industries, like the automobile line, have formed a lobby to work against a proposed sales tax, and threats from them can be expected. Political observers do not feel that these threats will ever be carried out and believe that Congress will go right to work next December to balance the budget, as the British Parliament and other European legislatures have been forced to do in recent months to overcome the depression in general business and lack of employment.

AMOUNT OF COTTON SURPLUS IS EXAGGERATED

The amount of the surplus is generally exaggerated. For instance, the estimated carry-over July 31, 1931 is 8,700,000 bales, and everybody proclaims this as the amount of the surplus. This, of course is bear propaganda, but it is joined in by everyone when bearish facts predominate. It seems natural for everybody to kick the fellow that is down. As a fact, which everyone should realize, we need between three and four million bales of cotton on July 31 to supply actual needs until the new crop gets to the mills. Therefore, our surplus of American cotton on July 31 was about 5,000,000 bales. Of this the cooperatives and Farm Board hold a considerable part and this is financed in such a way that it cannot be forced on the market to still further depress prices. Therefore, it seems to us that if some way can be found to take 5,000,000 bales of a 14,000,000-bale crop or 6,000,000 bales of a 15,000,000-bale crop off the market, until a greatly reduced acreage produces a greatly reduced crop the present price of cotton can be raised at least 2 cents a pound.—The Progressive Farmer-Ruralist.

PLAYGROUNDS

By Laurence Alma-Tadema

In summer I am very glad
We children are so small,
For we can see a thousand things
That men can't see at all.

They don't know much about the moss
And all the stones they pass:
They never lie and play among
The forest in the grass:

They walk about a long way off;
And, when we are at the sea,
Let father stoop as best he can
He can't find things like me.

But, when the snow is on the ground
And all the bubbles freeze,
I wish that I were very tall,
Hup up above the trees.
