being visited by the worst weather The committee in charge of sol! we have ever witnessed. And truly it seems that this Winter Rev. J. C. Mann and Rev E. E. has been a booger, when considerage or reported having raised ered from the angle of the num-ber of cold, rainy days that have pitched in seven constant to make the first of the year.

ing the preceding Christmas, the weather man is throwing us a few curves at this season.

For one reason we are indeed thankful for the intensely cold and disagreeable weather during the first part of the year 1930. That gives us something to look back to, like the old-timers recall weather conditions of eighteeneighty-something, and provides an opportunity to tell the youngsters that they "don't know nothing."

All in all, the weather for the past few weeks has been bad, but not entirely unexpected. Texas is still Texas, and extremes can be depended upon, although the time of their arrival and the duration of their stay can not be depended upon in any manner of speaking. It won't be long until Spring will be here in all its glory. And then we will be thankful for an all-wise Providence which has put a good season in the ground, dispensed cold weather to kill the bugs, and kept the balance of weather conditions normal to assure good crops, good health and good spirits when the change

Demonstrating their thankfulness for the privilege of living in a section of the country never visited by disastrous floods, and their sympathy for people unfortunate enough to have their property damaged and destroyed and their lives threatened by high water, cold weather and sickness, Hico people came across in grand style following the appeal for Red Cross funds for storm sufferers in Morris Harelik the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys. It would cut more than 1,000 miles off the navigating distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and so would shortat corresponding reductions in cost. It is also much nearer to United States territory, at each end, and so easier to defend again-

It would take about $700,000,000 and ten ears time to dig the Nicaragua Canal. Ten ears is certainly not too far to look ahead. As money goes in these days, $70,-00,000 a year does not seem like too much to spend on a project as useful as the Nicaragua Canal.

Everyone of the new hats achieve flattery. Each is daringly individual and not a single crea ion is anything but rhythm, inimitable color combination, and the last word in wickedly French accepted smartness. For instance, the silk turbans are noteworthy examples of what undertaking hatmakers have done for a dark day in town. These are brilliantly colored and deftly tied in new headlines to cause appreciative glances from the spectators. Vivid reds with greens and ye from long observation. Some time ago, I sat in a busy hotel in the delightful region of the Missouri Ozark Mountains. The large lobby was artistically dimmed by shaded lamps-daytime, mind you-until the great room gave one the impression of being in moonlight! Outside the light was perfect, scintillating with violet rays. Inside, the guests huddled here and there, trying to read newspapers by dim, ineffectual light by the heavily-shaded lamps. I was one of the guests. I had difficulty finding a spot light enough to enable me to read. It is fashionable to light homes in that manner; floor-lamps with bautiful shades adorn livingrooms. Here children try to search out lessons and news from printed pages. They strain young, growing eyes to decipher the intelligence printed on the page. Daddy may have the best lighted seat, in his favorite rocker; mother next. Children on the outskirts, do their best to read with ease to their eyes, but soon tire, and finally are driven to bed, tired and sleepy from the dim reading light. But is is fashionable-the twi-

Future of Our Boys And Girls on Trial

There are 45,000,000 boys and girls in the United States under eighteen years of age.

It has long been recognized that it is an American heritage for parents to rear their children without any Governmental supervision as is often the case in some foreign countries.

Do you now wish to relinquish this heritage in favor of a bureaueratic Governmental control?

If the Texas Legislature, which convenes on January 12th, ratifies the Child Labor Amendment, it will in effect mean that you relinquish many of your parental prerogatives in favor of inspectors and bureaus appointed by the Govern-

Martinelli Tells Story of Opera To Be Broadcast From Metropolitan

By GIOVANNI MARTINELLI

More operatic careers have begun and ended in single performances of the opera I sing in next Saturday afternoon than in all other operas put together. Many a man who today goes placidly about his businesshe may be lawyer, broker or physician-will, with the least of encouragement, relate his personal experience in grand opera, or to be more exact, in Verdi's "Aida." For here is an opera-which, by the way, will be heard over the National Broadcasting Company under the sponsorship of the Radio Corporation of America-that does not demand that one be singer or dancer. It is enough to be able to carry a spear in the scene where Radames, the role I sing, returns from victory over the Ethiopians, and there must be thousands of heroes still living who in their day have passed in review before the Pharaoh of ancient Egypt.

"Aida," written at the order of the Khedive of Egypt and first produced at Cairo, is really a giorious musical spectacle, built around the rivalry of Amneris, daughter of the Pharachs, and Aida, captive Ethiopian princess, for the love of Radames. It opens at the king's palace, where the priest Ramfls is dropping a hint to Radames about a certain I on the throne beside the King." brave young soldier who will lead rior," breathes Radames, dreaming of victory that will reward him with his beloved Aida. Then we are lifted clear of ourselves shouting the praises of this one who, with seemingly god-like ease, leaps over the barriers that stop so many of us in our daily lives. It is as if we, too, were somehow clearing those same barriers. Possibilities open to us that seemed forever closed, and we are inspired to fresh effort. A new zest for living and doing fills us.

Siegfried, the role I sing at the Metropolitan next Saturday afternoon in Richard Wagner's opera of the same name, is made of hero's stuff. And the opera, which will be heard over the National Broadcasting Company under the sponsorship of the Radio Corporation of America tells the story of his rise. You may say that it is only music and drama, but you cannot deny that the things that Siegfried stands for, really happen in our world. We all know the heroes in the everlasting struggle between gods and men, giants and dwarfs for possession of the Magic Ring of the Niebelungs.

"Siegfried" is the third in a series of four operas that tell the story of ring. The first, "Das Rheingold," relates how the dwarf Alberich came to have the Rhine maidens' gold. how he fashioned the magic ring on ring and helmet, began its work; great Needful. one of the giants killed the other.
