POULTRY

The poultry industry in Hamilton County has kept abreast of times and has made progress that is enviable to the best of the poultry producing states.

Successful poultry raising is based upon four fundamental factors—breeding, sanitation, management and feeding. Just which one of these is the most important no one knows. We do know, however, that without a full four-point program, the lack of success will be apparent. The best care and management will not produce results if the breeding is not up to standard. The breeding of the parent stock that produce the eggs from which your chicks are hatched is one very important factor to investigate. Since we are not in a position to personally inspect every flock that produces these eggs, we will have to depend on the reliability and integrity of the hatcheryman. In buying baby chicks we should look for certain things that will have a bearing on the producing hen. Vitality, breed characteristics, uniform color, freedom from disease, are some of the things that are essential in selecting the baby chicks.

If we buy baby chicks that come from hens that lay 100 or 150 eggs you cannot expect the young pullets to develop into a 200 egg producer. It requires the same amount of care, management and practically the same amount of feed to raise the inferior chick to production age. The initial cost of the better chick is usually about one or two cents higher. This additional cost amounts to just one additional egg in the life time of the hen. Then would it not be to our advantage to look behind the scene and make a few investigations of our own? Find out about the record of the pullets that were produced from this flock last year. If the death rate were high, in all probability the chick's mortality rate will be the same.

REMEMBER: The kind of chicks you get is largely determined by the breeding of the parent flock before the eggs ever go into the incubator.

everyday life, surgical cases in the United States, it is conservatively estimated, could easily be reduced 33 per cent.

It is safe to say that fully 20 per cent to 30 per cent of the cases of illness which resulted in sending people to the hospitals could have been prevented by the use of ordinary intelligence.

Take, for example, the problem of the common cold. In an organization employing 3,000 people more than 25 per cent were away from work anywhere from one to fifteen days, due to failure to recognize and properly treat the symptoms, and because they did not call on their doctors earlier. Our annual cold bill is more than $500,000,000.

The average American family spends each year $163.00 for motor cars and their upkeep; $67.00 for tobacco; $37.00 for candy; $34.00 for ice cream, soda fountain drinks and chewing gum; $5.00 for radio repairs, and that same family pays the doctor only $24.00 a year, and that only when they are sick.

It is estimated that $50.00 a year spent with your family doctor would keep you well and reduce the sickness in this country almost 50 per cent. The thing for you to do is to consult your doctor when you feel the least indisposed and not to wait until disease has got a strangle hold on you.

Statistics

It will no doubt surprise my readers to learn that during the year, one person out of every sixteen spends some portion of his or her time in a hospital.

We have in the United States 6,437 hospitals. This of course does not include private hospitals and sanatoriums where only patients who can pay for their attention are taken. In the public hospitals over 7,000,000 patients are treated each year.

The greatest number of cases were brought to these hospitals for surgical treatment, and of these the majority were taken in as the result of accidents, chiefly caused by automobiles. By strict observation of the safety rules and regulations for traffic and by using ordinary common sense in life.

Oil

TEXAS farmers and ranchers received last year from oil men the huge sum of $132,478,000 for leases and royalties as their share in this partnership.

All but seven of Texas' 254 counties now share in this cash return from leases and production on more than 50,000,000 acres of Texas land.

Then, too, the Texas farmers and ranchers sell to oil workers and their families more than $60,000,000 worth of farm and livestock products each year.

Thus the farmers and ranchers of our state receive nearly 200 million dollars a year as their share of oil's total expenditure of 750 million dollars annually in Texas. These 200 million dollars in turn flow into every channel of Texas trade.

The MILKY WAY

is the Way for Youngsters
—and there are various means of getting more milk into their diet

by Dorothy Greig

WHEN we were small, life was simpler for parents. On the milk drinking question, for instance, mother's firm voice just announced "drink your milk without any more nonsense."

Asparagus custard offers one delicious way to get more milk into a child's diet.

please". And we did. Nowadays, a child is oh, so gently maneuvered into doing what he should. It's a great life for the little dears!

However, it is fairly easy to get more milk into a child—with pleasure to all concerned. A child need not drink it all. He can eat some of it.

For example, an equal quantity of milk added to condensed pea soup, asparagus, celery or tomato soup is a highly nourishing and delicious main dish for luncheon, or a first course for supper.

Creamy puddings, milk custards, creamed vegetables, ice cream are also well liked eatables that do their bit to add milk to a meal. This baked custard is a dish you should know about. It tastes good and is no trouble to make. It includes milk, of course. And in addition you can also serve a glass of milk with it for lunch.

Asparagus Custard

- 1 can condensed asparagus soup
- 1 can milk (using soup can as measure)
- 2 eggs

Stir the milk into the condensed asparagus soup. Then add the eggs slightly beaten. Four into a casserole or custard cups and bake in moderately slow oven (325-350 degrees F) until the custard is set. Test for custard—insert a silver knife in the center of the custard and if it comes out clean the custard is cooked.

And here's another delicious luncheon dish with milk incidentally. It's a grand use for left-over vegetables:

Casserole of Vegetables and Cereal with Celery Sauce

- 1 cup milk
- 2 cups cooked potatoes (diced)
- 1 1/2 cups cooked carrots (diced)
- 1 cup cooked green peas
- 1 1/2 cups flaked cereal (cornflakes or similar)
- 2 teaspoons butter

Mix the celery soup and milk. Then add the cooked vegetables. Pour half the "vegetables in celery sauce" in a buttered casserole. Add the remaining vegetables and sauce. Top off with the cornflakes and dot with butter. Heat in a moderate (350°) oven for 40 minutes.

Milkman Always Prepared For Notes On Doorstep

JUST a scribbled note and if you want an extra quart of milk tomorrow it will be there because one of the simplest operations in the household routine is turning the milk on or off at the doorstep. Unexpected company arrives to spend the night. No need to stretch the cream, just leave a note. Husband decides without warning on a weekend jaunt, so there will be nobody home till Monday. Just leave a note for the milkman.

Because this is a part of the accepted service of American milk distribution, most people take it as a matter of course. Whatever the pencilled note, the distributor's route man deposits the specified bottles. It would be a different story in other parts of the world, says the Milk Industry Foundation. Along comes a local holiday or festival and you first know of it because the milk hasn't been delivered. Armed with a container you go foraging for milk. If lucky, you get a quart of doubtful sanitary history. Otherwise, you take your coffee—and the remainder of the holiday—black, with more chicory than cheer. What do you do in this country? When it's time for breakfast, you are not disappointed. Why should a mere blizzard stop the milkman?

The more you think about it, the more you are inclined to accept the daily milk bottle on the doorstep as a symbol of civilized convenience impossible under antiquated methods in countries where dog carts, open cans and other laggard devices are employed.

Widespread daily U. S. milk consumption is probably due to dependability of doorstep distribution. Americans can't resist such efficient services, and who's to blame them?

Chapter 1

"It was the smoothest Formal the Sorority ever gave. I mean it really was," insisted Norma Poole.

"Far be it from me to doubt it," murmured Janet.

"Did I tell you about the favors?" inquired Norma eagerly.

Janet nodded. "Yes, you told me."

She might have added that she heard the sorority dance discussed until she was weary of the subject, but Norma meant to be kind and after all it was not her fault that Janet Phillips had not been away to an exclusive finishing school along with the other girls in her crowd.

"Want to dance, Norma?" asked Dickey Allen, "or are you afraid?"

Norma was wearing Ted Hughes' frat pin, and she adored being teased about it. "Certainly not!" she cried, displaying all her dimples. "Ted and I are terribly broadminded."

Norma's departure left Janet conspicuously stranded on a large pink damask sofa. At the tea table Priscilla Leigh was expatiating in the plans for her debut party in the fall.

"All alone, Janet?" asked Ted Hughes, dropping down beside her.

"Yes," said Janet with a little grimace.

"I was sorry you couldn't come to the June prom," he said. "You are the only girl in the crowd who didn't show up. We missed you."

"I missed being there."

"Gordon was lost without you," Janet carefully made her face expressionless. "Was he?" she asked.

She did not glance toward Gordon Key who was dancing with Priscilla Leigh.

Until nine months before it had not mattered that Janet Phillips did not have a car of her own and a well-to-do father and a large house in which to entertain her friends. Nor until recently had it made any social difference because her mother worked in a department store. Before her marriage Anne Phillips had been a Radcliffe. The Radcliffes were one of the town's old aristocratic families. Janet's grandfather had been governor of the state at one time. When it had become necessary at her husband's death for Mrs. Phillips to go out and make a living for her three children, her friends applauded her courage.

Bay City was a conservative southern town of twenty thousand inhabitants. Everyone of any social pretensions lived on the right side of the town branch and went first to the old frame grade school on Lucas Avenue and later to the new brick High at Dawes and State.

As a matter of course Janet grew up right along with the daughters of her mother's old friends. She had not realized a break was inevitable when she and her girl friends graduated from High School.

The boys in the crowd had been going off to college and universities for several years, but the group remained intact until the girls themselves departed for finishing schools the preceding September. Janet had counted the days until their return for the summer. Yet it was now only the third week in June and she had definitely discovered that she no longer belonged.

It was no one's fault. Nobody, again with the notable exception of Priscilla, wanted Janet to feel left out. Her path had diverged too sharply from the others. She was studying interior decorating in the Normal at home. When she finished her course she was going to work, and she seemed no longer to have a lot in common with her friends.

"I'm for another slice of cake," said Ted when the radio paused for station identification.

He led the way to the tea table toward which Gordon was moving with Priscilla. Janet's cheeks burned.

"Hullo, Janet," he murmured. "How are you?"

"I was never better," said Janet with her most brilliant smile.

Priscilla laughed unpleasantly. "Excuse it, darling. If I seemed to have monopolized your boy friend this afternoon."

"I don't mind," said Janet. "The irritating point was that when she said things like that, nobody believed her. The crowd was convinced that Gordon was breaking Janet's heart."

"Run on and dance with Janet, Gordon," said Priscilla. "Didn't you always used to say that she could dance rings around the rest of us?"

Janet had a surfeit of that sort of insidious since her friends came home. Someone was forever pairing her off with Gordon because that was how it used to be. She and Gordon had never been formally engaged but for several years it had been understood in the crowd that she was exclusively Gordon's girl.

"Sorry," said Janet, and to save her life she could not keep the acid out of her voice. "I don't believe I care to dance just now."

Priscilla gave a thrill of malicious laughter. "Don't tell me love's young dream has curdled!"

Gordon looked miserable and guilty and confused. "I didn't realize I was neglecting you, Janet," he stammered.

"It's quite all right," said Janet stiffly. "It may seem incredible, but there are compensations for being neglected."

Priscilla giggled. "That sounds like the well-known sour grapes, darling."

Janet could see herself in the mirror above the gate, a tall, slender, black-haired girl in a crisp blue linen dress with a white leather belt and glass buttons down the front.

"My teeth are on edge," she told Priscilla, "but believe it or not, it has nothing to do with sour grapes."

Priscilla shrugged her shoulders in a cynical manner and Gordon looked more conscience-stricken than ever.

"I guess you'll carry off the swimming cup as usual tomorrow, Janet," he said.

Janet shook her head. "You forget I have classes in the morning."

"But it's the club opening."

"Country clubs may come and

Janet asked Ted, "Fall down and roll over or kiss his hand?"

Ted did not answer. He and the others were crowding in a body about the great Tony Ryan who at eighteen had been lightweight champion of America and at twenty-two had realized that the big money in the sporting world is in the promotion end, and who at twenty-seven was said to be ready to retire with something over a half million dollars.

"You said if you ever came off down here, you'd look me up," cried Priscilla delightedly, "but I simply didn't believe you'd come. I mean I couldn't imagine that anything so perfectly gorgeous might happen."

"Why shouldn't I drop into Bay City and look the old town over?" he demanded lazily.

"After all," he went on softly, "my mother used to take in washing for all the best families in Bay City. When I delivered clothes at back doors I promised go," said Janet lightly, "but summer school is something you don't cut even once, or you're dropped."

"Whatever made you enroll?" protested Priscilla. "It's dumb enough to go to a poky local college when everybody's away and there's nothing else to do."

Janet shrugged her shoulders. "The Normal has no social standing, Priscilla. You probably can't comprehend it, but people go there because they want to learn. It fits you for a paying job." Janet pointed out. "At least when I get my diploma in August I'm promised a place at Tracy's."

There was another awkward pause. "You're going into the store?" faltered Ted in a second feeble effort to retrieve the conversation.

"The store where your mother works?" Priscilla added with disagreeable emphasis.

"Yes," said Janet, her lips tightening.

Gordon Key was his widowed mother's adored and only child. They were impoverished gentlefolk. By the exercise of every economy and subterfuge Dora Key managed, however, to keep up a front.

"I'm afraid your mother thinks I'm committing social suicide," Janet said to Gordon with a laugh that was like a gauntlet flung down between them.

He flushed. "The matter has certain bred-in-the-bone prejudices."

Priscilla laughed. "You sound as if you inherited them."

"I don't believe any woman can buck the world without coarsening herself," he admitted doggedly.

He's quoting his mother, Janet thought.

It was then she became aware of the man standing in the doorway. She did not know how long he had been there, or how much he had overheard. He had a lean, controlled face and eyes which were not easily read. His heavy black eyebrows nearly met above his nose, which was a little hooked as if it had been broken. His skin was swarthy and he was tall and unusually broad across the shoulders, but his waist and hips were narrow. He had a small white scar at the side of his mouth, and was dark enough to be an Italian, but his eyes were Irish blue.

"You asked me to look you up if I came down this way," he said to Priscilla.

"Tony Ryan?" Priscilla gave a little squeal of delight and ran across the room. She took both his hands in hers and drew him over the threshold.

"It's Tony Ryan, everybody!" exclaimed Priscilla as if she expected the news to overcome them. "What are we supposed to do?"

myself I wouldn't be poor white trash from the wrong side of the branch forever," he said. "Funny, isn't it? As a ragged little tyke in a shanty in Shanty Town I made up my mind that some day I'd walk in at the front door of a house like this and be treated as visiting royalty."

The corners of his wide mouth curled, the mockery in his Irish eyes deepened. As if he were sneering at them, thought Janet.

"Darling," cried Priscilla, giving him a languishing glance, "it's too romantic for rags to riches practically overnight!"

Tony Ryan grinned. "All in the good old American tradition."

Janet turned away abruptly. A great many things she had been taught to believe apparently were not true. She had not known, for instance, how decisive money is in the adult world. For lack of it she was being penalized, but a Tony Ryan could stride roughshod into society because he had the admission price.

"Going so soon, Janet?" asked Priscilla carelessly.

"Yes," said Janet. "I'm using Jim's car and I must pick him up. He's over at the club subbing for Jock McCall, you know."

She was surprised when she reached the battered flivver which her brother Jim had bought of a used car dealer, to find that Gordon had followed her outside.

"I'm awfully sorry," he stammered.

"I told you it's quite all right," said Janet. "I wouldn't have embarrassed you by coming over this afternoon if I had known you had a tea engagement with Priscilla. I didn't mean to come, only I met Norma and she said the whole crowd was here. She wouldn't let me off."

Gordon was perspiring. "It's not that," he said. "It's tonight."

"Tonight?"

"Mother didn't know I was taking you to the dance. She couldn't have known, or she wouldn't have accepted Priscilla's dinner bid."

Janet sat very still for a moment. "You mean you have to take Priscilla to the dance?"

"I'll ask Jim to bring you, Janet."

"Please don't," she requested sharply.

"You're such a peach!"

"Yes?" murmured Janet and drove away.

That same afternoon Jim Phillips lips looked up from the tournament schedule he was making out for the next day to discover Ruth Hetchcote smiling at him from the doorway of the caddy room at the Country Club.

"I haven't a partner, Jim. It looks as if you'll have to go around with me," she said ruefully.

"I'm laughed," "I can't think of any way I'd rather spend a balmy June afternoon than golfing with a Hetchcote."

Ruth smiled. "But then you've always been right partial to Dad and me."
