At Voting Time

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

IT IS a matter of serious concern when votes at the polls on election day are cast by less than 55 per cent of those who have the right of the franchise. The success of our democratic form of government depends upon the interest manifested in the vote as well as upon those elected to bear the responsibility of public office.

and that the crime be punished. But, in the meantime the public conscience has not only suffered, but the community in which the crime has been committed must bear the ultimate result of the wrong done. Who is to blame? The one who does the wrong? Yes—but the first responsibility rests with those who put him into office, or did not do all in their power to keep him from getting into office. The lethargy of the public mind is appalling in this matter.

"I don't know about the sins of the fathers being visited upon countless generations," says Pondering Ponzette. "but it is easy to see that the shins of the mothers are."

The privileges enjoyed by us are made possible through the enactment and enforcement of laws. Laws are made and enforced by those elected for that purpose. In any representative form of government, in the very nature of the case, the ultimate responsibility for the success of that government lies with the voter; and yet the American people are interested to the extent that only a little over 50 per cent go to the polls to vote.

What is the reason for this condition? If we were denied the privilege of the franchise, we would protest in no mistaken language. But, having all the privileges of this right as citizens, why is it not exercised as it should be? Perhaps the answer is that it is a matter of carelessness rather than indifference or ignorance. A government should be ruled by the majority, and yet in this greatest and most powerful nation in the world of free governments, the minority rules. Such a condition is a menace to all our institutions.

HOW MRS. WEAVER WAS HELPED

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

As Mrs. Weaver herself says, "I was never very strong."

This is a mild statement describing her condition, for, according to her letters, she was subjected to no small amount of ill health. Fortunately, her sister was familiar with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged Mrs. Weaver to try it. "After three or four weeks," writes Mrs. Weaver, "I felt a great difference in myself. I would go to bed and sleep sound, and although I could not do very much work, I seemed stronger. I kept on taking it and now I am well and strong, do my work and take care of three children. I sure do tell my friends about your wonderful medicine, and I will answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. LAWRENCE WEAVER, East Smithfield St., Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

If you knew that thousands of women suffering from troubles similar to those you are enduring had improved their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, wouldn't you think it was worth a trial? In some families, the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

When Snakes Bring Rain

By IRVING KING

IN MRS. FANNY BERGEN'S "Animal and Plant Lore" a superstition, common in some sections, is said to be that to kill a snake and hang it on a fence, or a tree, is a sure way of producing rain. In some sections, according to Mrs. Bergen, hanging the snake with its back up will prevent rain; with its back down bring on rain. This, however, may be considered a local frill—though possibly it may have some mythological basis now undiscoverable and eliminated by time.

It is a curious fact that primitive man from the general form of the superstition, which is a very old German one. The old Germans were accustomed to kill a snake and hang him up in a tree when they wished rain, with the serpent's head pointed in the direction from which they expected the wind to come which would bring with it the desired showers. The use of serpents as rain charms prevails today among various peoples living in a primitive state and is evidently a conception of primitive man and a relic of serpent-worship.

Doing His Best

Whenever I have found out that I have blundered, or that my work has been imperfect, and when I have been contemptuously criticized, and even when I have been overpraised, so that I have felt mortified, it has been my greatest comfort to say hundreds of times to myself that "I have worked as hard and as well as I could, and no man can do more than this."—Darwin.

who has delved deeper into primitive psychology than any other man, has gone far toward solving it. Just how widespread in this country the snake rainmaking superstition is, it is impossible to say; but its habitat extends over a very considerable area.

Well Expressed

When a man has not a good reason for doing a thing, he has one good reason for letting it alone.—Sir Walter Scott.

THE HALLOWEEN PARTY

By MARTHA MARTIN

THERE had been a little girl named Janet who had wondered what the word Halloween meant.

And now it seemed as though another little girl did not know what it meant and was feeling quite sad about it.

It seems to me, too, that it is a word that we've used so often that many of us are not quite sure what it does exactly mean.

And so I am going to tell the story of Miriam and of what her mother

But probably the guests who were coming to the party were just as busy, for the guests would bring some Halloween stunts with them, and would doubtless be dressed up.

Of course, Miriam did not know just what the guests would do, but she knew that two of her brothers were going to dress up as old witches and do all sorts of tricks.

Already they were hanging apples attached firmly by strings from a doorway and as soon as the guests came and the tricks began they would all try to bite these apples, which would swing annoyingly away from them.

And there was going to be a dish of flour in the kitchen after supper and the children were all going to try to find a twenty-five-cent piece hidden there.

They were going to hunt for it with their teeth! And there were apples bobbing in a great tub of water.

And these had to be caught by the teeth, too. Some of these held pennies.

There would be fortune telling, too, and Miriam's mother had promised to be the fortune-telling witch who would sit by her cauldron which was now being made of red cheesecloth.

At the bottom of it, barely hidden, there would be a flashlight which would be kept going all the time, of course!

Oh, the party was going to be splendid, Miriam knew that.

And yet—and yet—she wished she knew why they had a party—not that she didn't want a party! But just why was it for this evening with the strange name.

"Why, Miriam," her mother said that afternoon late as she caught sight of Miriam's little worried face, seemed to be so much yet to be fished her just so every one will be sure to know without having to do anything about looking it up.

They Would All Try to Bite These Apples.

There was going to be a splendid party at Miriam's house. There were all sorts of preparations for it.

Miriam did not know whether they would all be ready on time, for there seemed to be so much yet to be finished.

Vegetable and Fruit Dishes

By NELLIE MAXWELL

A SALAD is at all meals a welcome part of the menu after the breakfast of the day.

Tomato Aspic.

Take two cupsful of stewed tomato to which a slice of onion has been added, with seasoning of salt. Boil 20 minutes and strain. Add two tablespoonfuls of gelatin dissolved in one-half cupful of cold water and add to the tomato. Such seasonings as bay leaf, celery and cayenne may be added to the tomato while cooking if desired. Mold and serve when chilled on leaf lettuce with a highly seasoned salad dressing to which a half cupful of nuts has been added.

Browned Carrots.

Parboil small even-sized carrots and lay them well drained around the roast of mutton; baste often from the fat in the pan. Serve around the roast.

Wisconsin Cherry Duff.

Take two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one-fourth of a cupful of butter, one-half cupful of sweet milk, one egg, one-half cupful of flour, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, and one cupful of sweet canned cherries. Serve with Cherry Sauce.

Take one cupful of the cherry juice, thicken with one teaspoonful of cornstarch, add one-third of a cupful of sugar, a pinch of salt and a tablespoonful of butter just before serving. Flavor with a few drops of almond after the sauce has been well cooked

Peach Betty.

Take the soft crumbs from the center of the loaf of bread. Mix with one-half cupful of butter to three cupfuls of crumbs. Put a layer of the buttered crumbs into a baking dish and lay over them a layer of sliced peaches; sprinkle with sugar, a grating of orange peel and bake one hour. Cover the dish during the first half-hour, then remove and brown. Serve hot with cream and sugar.

Apple Whip.

Take one-fourth of a cupful of steamed, sliced apple, add powdered sugar to sweeten, beat into one egg white, beat until stiff. Serve with cream.

Paint Garden Tools

If you paint the tools and other garden equipment about the place bright red, with a trim of blue, yellow or green, their gay appearance will be a gentle but incessant reminder to all careless ones who borrow or use them to promptly return them to the proper niche in the toolhouse. Incidentally, they are more easily found if mislaid

BLACKSHEEP! By Meredith Nicholson

COPYRIGHT CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS - RELEASED THRU PUBLISHERS AUTOCASTER SERVICE

(Continued from Last Week.) When Archie reached the parlors half an hour later he found the Governor engaged in a lively conversation with a gentleman he introduced immediately as Mr. Seebrook.

"And Mr. Walters, Mr. Comly, and—"

"Mr. Saulsbury and Mr. Comly, my daughter, Miss Seebrook." Seebrook and Walters were undoubtedly enjoying the Governor, proof of which was immediately forthcoming when Seebrook suggested that they should all dine together.

"You do us much honor," said the Governor. "Mr. Comly and I shall be pleased, I am sure."

CHAPTER VI.

Dinner over they continued their talk over coffee served in the garden. When the music began, Seebrook and Walters recalled a bridge engagement and the Governor announced that he must look up an old friend who lived in Cornford.

"I shall be back shortly," he said as they separated in the office. Archie and Miss Seebrook joined the considerable company that were already dancing after several dances Miss Seebrook thought it would be fine to take a breath of air, and gathering up her cloak they went into the garden for an ice.

Miss Seebrook was speaking of music, and reciting the list of operas she loved best when Archie's gaze was caught and held by a shadow that flitted along an iron fire escape that zigzagged down from the fourth to the first store of the long rambling inn.

"You seem very dreamy," she remarked. "I know how that is for I can dream for hours and hours." "Yes; reverie; just floating on clouds, on and on," Archie replied, though the shadow moving on and on along the side of the inn was troubling him not a little.

He had surmised that the Governor's declared purpose to call on an old friend was merely to cover his withdrawal from the party, but that he could have mediated a predatory excursion through the inn had not entered Archie's speculations as to his friend's absence. There was no mistaking the figure that had moved swiftly down the ladder. He was now creeping along the little balcony at the third floor. He paused a moment and then vanished into an open window. The Governor had said that Seebrook's party had rooms just under their own; but—

Archie, in his preoccupation with the Governor's strange performance was so slow to respond that Miss Seebrook, thinking that he was deliberating as to which star he should bestow upon her in return generously broadened the scope of her offer.

"I have chosen a star for you," Miss Seebrook was murmuring. "But something very unlike a star—more like the glimmer of a match in a room on the third floor held his fascinated gaze—" "We must go back, I suppose," said Miss Seebrook with a sigh. They danced again and in the handclapping that followed the first number he turned to find the Governor, calm and with no marks of his escapade upon him.

At midnight Seebrook and Walters came in from their card game, and after a few pleasant works, the party broke up.

In Archie's room the Governor hummed one of his favorite ballads as he slipped out of his coat and picked a speck from his snowy waistcoat. "It is evident," he remarked good humoredly, "that you are perturbed, anxious, and have slight symptoms of paralysis itans. Pray be seated and I will do my best to restore your peace of mind."

But Archie was not to be thwarted in his purpose to learn just what the Governor meant by endangering their security so recklessly. He slammed the transom tight and drew down the shades.

"You needlessly expose yourself to observation by sneaking down the fire escape of this hotel—I know that!"

"My dear boy, I was merely gathering a few blossoms of the crimson rambler from the ancient walls of the inn. You may have noted that I wore a spray of buds in my lapel when I joined you in the ball room. Now sent yourself on the bed and I'll tell you the whole story. When I left you I hastened into the drug store and bought a stick of shaving soap. Then I bought a few cigars in a tobacconist. In each place I conversed with the clerk, thus laying ample ground for an abill. Hurrying back to the inn I avoided observation by entering by the side door, skipped up to our rooms—and there you are! I exchanged our new bank notes for sixty well-worn one thousand dollar gold certificates, negotiable in all parts of the republic. That means a net gain of ten thousand dollars to Red Leary."

"My god," moaned Archie. "You don't think you can get away with this?"

"I think," returned the Governor imperturbably, "that we must and will get away with it." His emphasis on the plural pronoun caused Archie to cringe.

"You're getting me in pretty deep," mumbled Archie dejectedly.

"How about those blood stains on the sidewalk at Bailey Harbor?" asked the Governor in his blandest tones. "When you speak of getting in deep you forget that someone besides Hoky was shot back yonder. You came to me red-handed from a deed of violence and I took you in and became your protector, asking no questions. It's the basest ingratitude for you to whimper over a small larceny when—" you have added assault or murder to the liabilities of our partnership. But don't forget for a moment that we're pals and pledged to see each other through."

The reference to the blood stains reported by the Bailey Harbor police threw Archie back instantly upon the Governor's mercy. Complicity in the robbery of Seebrook was as nothing compared with the haunting fear that the man he had shot in the Congdon house had died from the wound. Unable to determine this question he was floundering in a veritable sea of crime. The Governor was undressing with provoking indifference to his companion's perturbation.

"Sleep, lad, sleep! You may be sure that nothing will harm us tonight, and I have faith that more stirring adventures are ahead of us. I forgive you for your qualms and quavers, the pardonable manifestations of youth and inexperience. We walk in slippery places but we shall not stumble, at least not while the Governor keeps his head!"

Nothing appealed to Archie as of greater importance than the retention by his companion of the head that now lay chastely upon a big snowy pillow. A handsome, well-formed head, a head suggestive of family and the pride of race, though filled with the most complicated mental machinery with which a human being had ever been endowed.

"Put out the lights and get out to your couch!" the Governor muttered drowsily.

CHAPTER VI.

When they reached the dining-room at ten the next morning they found Seebrook and Walters just finishing breakfast. Miss Seebrook was having coffee in her room, her father explained, in response to Archie's polite inquiries. "We're hoping to get away this afternoon," he continued. "It will take only a few minutes to transact our business when the man I'm waiting for appears; but he's an uncertain quantity and there's no telling when he'll show up. But we're having a good time and I shan't mind another day or two. If only you gentlemen would bear us company."

"Ah, you are very kind," said the Governor, "but we must resume our rambles toward the Pacific. We are more or less dated up for little entertainment on the way."

Seebrook and Walters lingered in the office as Archie and the Governor paid their account. As they waited for their car to be sent round from the garage a machine drew up and discharged a short, wiry, elderly man in a motor coat that was much too large for him. He was accompanied by an enormous amount of luggage and from the steps of the inn gave orders in a high piping voice as to the manner of its disposal. As the various pieces were hustled into the office he enumerated them in an audible tone as though inviting the cooperation of all the loungers in making an inventory of his effects. When this had been concluded Seebrook stepped up and accosted the newcomer.

"Mr. Congdon, I am very glad to see you. I hope you are not worn out by your drive."

"Worn out!" snapped the little man. "Do you imagine a run of a hundred miles would fatigue a man of my constitution? I assure you that you are greatly mistaken if you think I am feeling my age. Seventy! And I don't feel a day over fifty, not a day, sir. But I shall rest for a few hours as a precaution, a mere precautionary measure and be able to meet you for our little business at two-thirty sharp."

"That will suit me perfectly," replied Seebrook.

Archie hung about impatiently waiting for the Governor to make his farewells to the old lady and her granddaughters on whom he had expended his social talents at the dance. Mr. Congdon was quarreling with the clerk over the location of the room he had reserved. Having frightened the clerk into readjusting the entire registration to accommodate him, he demanded to know whether his son, Mr. Putney Congdon, was stopping in the house.

Assured that Mr. Putney Congdon was not in the inn and hadn't been there within the recollection of the office staff, the senior Congdon exploded violently upon Seebrook and Walters.

"Things have come to a pretty pass in this topsy-turvy world when a man can't find his own son! For three days I've been wiring his clubs and other places he could possibly be without result. And I have learned that his wife has left Bailey Harbor and the house there is closed. Closed! How dare they close that house when I was about to pay them a visit?"

Seebrook and Walters expressed their sympathy in mild tones that roused the old gentleman to greater fury.

"Can a whole family be obliterated and no trace left behind? Is it possible that they've been murdered in their beds, servants and all, and the police not yet aware of it?"

At the mention of murder Archie began stealthily feeling his way along the cigar counter to a water cooler. There seemed to be no escaping from the Congdons and here was the father of Putney boldly publishing to the whole state of New Hampshire his fear that his son had been murdered.

The concentration of the hotel staff upon the transfer of Mr. Congdon's luggage to his room left the Governor and Archie to manage the removal of their own effects to the waiting car. Seebrook and Walters obligingly assisted, laughing at Congdon's eccentricities.

ties. Seebrook seized the Governor's kit bag containing the sixty thousand dollars and carried it out to the car. The sight of it in Seebrook's hand gave Archie sensations of nausea that were not relieved by the grin he detected on the Governor's face.

Within an hour or two at most the substitution and robbery would be discovered and the country would ring with the demand for their detention. But the Governor was carrying off the departure with his usual gale. It was clear that he had made the most favorable impression upon Seebrook and Walters and in the cordial handshaking and expression of hope for future meetings Archie joined with the best spirit he could muster. A cherry good bye caused him to look up. Miss Seebrook with a red rose in her hand waved to him from her window.

As he lifted his cap she dropped the rose with a graceful sweep of the arm.

"Like the old stage coach days," cried the Governor, applauding Archie's catch.

He jumped into the machine and Archie scrambled after him. Archie's last impression of the inn was the blur of a waving handkerchief in Miss Seebrook's window. (To Be Continued Next Week.)

FRIONA VS. CANYON.

Friday, October 14th, the Chiefs were defeated by the Canyon Eagles 20-13. This was the first defeat the Chiefs have suffered this season. The Chiefs were outweighed quite a bit as few of the Eagles weighed less than Hall, the Friona heavy man.

In the first quarter neither of the teams scored. Canyon repeatedly forced the ball up to the goal line but one of their men kept getting off side.

In the second quarter the Canyon boys forced the ball over the goal line. They then place kicked and gained an extra point. Friona began her aerial attack, as she could make no ground any other way. Hall passed a long right end pass to Curry who ran for a touchdown. Hamlin drop kicked and gained the extra point for Friona. The half ended with a score of 7-7.

In the third quarter Canyon smashed over for another touchdown. The Friona boys fought them hard but the weight of the Canyon boys carried the ball over. Canyon place kicked and gained another point. The score at the end of the quarter was 14-7.

In the last quarter Canyon smashed over another touchdown but failed to gain an extra point by place kicking. When Canyon kicked off to Friona, Curry received another long forward pass and with interference of Springs and Richardson made another touchdown. Hamlin failed to drop kick a goal and the game ended with the score 20-13 in favor of Canyon.

The game was an interesting one from start to finish. Both the teams displayed good sportsmanship. Canyon was penalized several times and Friona only once or twice. It must be admitted that the Chiefs out-fought the Eagles, but they were just out scored. This would probably not have happened if Hall had been in good condition. He was injured in the game with Happy and was not strong as he would have been. The Canyon team also had the advantage in weight. The Friona squad were all stars and did some splendid playing against such odds. Gamble for W. T. S. T. C. refereed and F. W. Reeve of Friona was head line-man.

INTERESTING CHAPEL EXERCISES.

On Thursday, October 13th, an interesting program was given in chapel which consisted of a selection rendered by the Glee Club, the reading of scripture and a prayer by Rev. Beattie, pastor of the Congregational church, the "Fire Imps," given by the pupils in Miss Beasley's room, "Matches," given by a pupil in Miss Ferguson's room, "The Match that Jack Held," given by pupils in Miss Jennings' room, and a very interesting lecture given by Mrs. Warner of Claude, Texas, on the marketing problem of the farmer. A number of parents came to the program. We welcome you to come back on every Thursday morning for our chapel exercises.

On Thursday, October 20, another interesting program was given by the pupils in Miss Haynes' room. The teacher and pupils are to be highly complimented for their splendid entertainment. The Glee Club gave a comic song, which was really good.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

Mrs. Phoebe K. Warner, educational secretary of the Texas Wheat Growers' Association, Judge L. Gough, of Amarillo, president of the same organization, visited in Friona Friday, October 14, and were introduced to the school population of the Friona district at chapel exercises.

Mrs. Warner's theme was a standard of living for Texas farmers equal to that now enjoyed by organized and skilled labor in the larger cities of this country. The means to this end she recommended as co-operative marketing.

At present each man sells his own wheat as soon as threshed for whatever is offered him. She, representing the Growers' Association, proposes that wheat in amount and grade be reported to the association. As agent of the association, having the lump sum, a definite number of bushels, at times amounting to several millions, deals directly with American milling associations, or shippers to foreign ports, and obtains a price equal to the best likely to prevail before the succeeding crop is harvested.

When all the wheat growers associate themselves together they can then be able to ask a price and obtain it in keeping with the reward due rural labor, and thus happily mend the unfairness now existing in rewards of labor. Other farm products should be offered to the world's market in the same way. Then the desired equalization may come speedily, a consummation devoutly to be wished. The benefit, when finally obtained, will not be a partial one. The purchasing power of the farmer depends directly on what he gets on the market for his products.

Were the prices obtained fair to him as a laborer, he and his fellow farmers would quickly empty the floors and shelves of every hardware store in the land. Other businesses would share in greater and more rapid distribution of urban products. The rise in food prices would be more than compensated by the passing of non-employment and the consequently wider distribution of means, independence and happiness.

Farm hands do have little zest for labor when they see labor no harder to learn than theirs, command from three to ten times what they get. No wonder they fret and venture into cities in hope of greater means.

The national and state governments realize the gravity of the situation and gladly print and frank out to the people information that will encourage all to hope and work for better things.

Department Bulletin No. 1296 tells the story of Denmark's emergence from agricultural depression to prosperity and happy satisfaction. Ask your congressman for it.

Mrs. Warner has a real message for the rural and small town people, and she ought to be not only heard, but heeded.

Recalling Medicine Lodge Treaty

LOCALIZING SCENE OF TREATY

SATANTA

LITTLE RAVEN

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE of the most important events in the history of the western plains is being recalled during the week of October 12 to 14, when the sixtieth anniversary of the famous Medicine Lodge Indian peace treaty is being observed at Medicine Lodge, Kan., with appropriate ceremonies. The principal ceremony is a historical pageant, written and directed by Prof. F. L. Gilson, head of the department of speech at the State Teachers' college of Emporia, in which United States troops, Indians from Oklahoma and citizens of Kansas are taking part in portraying the events leading up to and including the peace council and the signing of the treaties more than half a century ago.

A monument marking the spot where the treaty was signed is also being unveiled, and although there has in the past been some dispute as to the actual site, that question was settled last year when I-See-O, a famous Kiowa Indian scout, who, as a young man, had been present at the council, came up from Oklahoma and definitely located the place. This old Kiowa warrior had the distinction of being made a sergeant in the United States army by an act of congress for his services to the government in keeping peace among his tribesmen—an honor which he prized until his death on March 11, 1927. He remembered that the distinguishing feature of the council grounds was a circle of trees and it was by these, although only the stumps (shown in the picture) now remain, that he located place.

The Medicine Lodge council and treaty was one of the high spots in the series of Indian wars which had broken out soon after the close of the Civil war. The red men saw with dismay the threatened extinction of the buffalo and the overrunning of their choicest hunting grounds and they had ever greater cause for alarm at the appearance of the "iron horse" as the westward extension of the railroads began. The unrest among the Sioux and other tribes of the northern plains, which had begun when the first California gold seekers had invaded their lands and which had resulted in the Fort Phil Kearney tragedy, soon spread among the tribes of the southern plains and led to a series of raids which spread terror through Kansas. Military expeditions sent to punish the marauders had comparatively little success. General Hancock's expedition, perhaps the best known of all of them, in four months of campaigning killed a total of four Indians! General Custer's campaign during the summer of 1867 along the Republican and Smoky Hill rivers had proved futile and the Indian raids in Kansas, Nebraska and along the South Platte in Colorado continued unchecked. So the government decided to try peace overtures instead of military force to solve the problem.

One of the best accounts of the Medicine Lodge treaty is that given by George Bird Grinnell in his book, "The Fighting Cheyennes." In it he says:

Colonel Leavenworth, then agent for the Kiowas and Comanches, had been ordered by the commissioner of Indian affairs to try to bring together all the tribes that had been hostile, and to make a peace with them. In order to do this, Colonel Leavenworth wrote to George Bent, asking him to do what he could to persuade some of the head men among the Indians to come in, and meet Leavenworth at the mouth of the Little Arkansas river where the Wichitas were then living.

When Black Kettle, chief of the Cheyennes, was consulted about the matter, he expressed his willingness to go, and he and Bent, with two or three other men and women, started to go to the mouth of the Little Arkansas. There they found Colonel Leavenworth, and camped with him were Ten Bears and Long Hat, chiefs of the Comanches; Wolf Sleeve of the Apaches and Black Eagle, a young chief of the Kiowas, with two or three of his people. Three Arapahoes came in the same day that Bent and Black Kettle reached there. One of these was a subchief named Yellow Horse.

The day after these people got in, Colonel Leavenworth met the chiefs and explained to them that he had been ordered by the commissioner of Indian affairs to meet some of the chiefs of the different tribes and discuss the question of peace, and to ask them to select a place where they would meet commissioners who were to come out from Washington to talk matters over, and make a peace if this could be arranged. . . . Colonel Leavenworth now returned to Fort Larned for further instructions and asked Bent to remain at the mouth of the Little Arkansas until further orders. Leavenworth was gone about a month. . . . On his return he read Bent a letter announcing that Thomas Murphy, the superintendent of Indian affairs for the district, was already at Fort Larned and that great quantities of goods were being shipped in there for distribution to the Indians.

After some negotiations as to where the council was to be held and some more time spent in sending messengers to the Indians to get their promise to attend, the site was finally fixed.

A few days after this, Murphy moved out to Medicine Lodge creek and selected a spot for the council ground. It was a wide, level flat on the north side of the stream, with timber above and below, and good camping places. . . . Murphy was camped there for about a month before the commissioners came and during all this time six-mile teams were busy hauling out goods and presents from Fort Larned. Among the things sent out were a herd of beef cattle, much coffee, sugar and flour and dried fruits and a vast quantity of blankets and clothing, material made up for the use of troops during the Civil war and at its close left over in the hands of the War department. The War department had turned this clothing over to the Interior department for issue to the Indians.

The peace commissioners left Fort Larned October 13, 1867, for the camp on Medicine Lodge. Word had been received from Thomas Murphy that he already had 421 lodges of people on the ground and expected as many more. He believed there would be 5,000 Indians at the council. Besides the commissioners (they were N. G. Taylor, commissioner of Indian affairs; Senator John B. Henderson of Missouri; Gen. W. T. Sherman; Gen. W. L. Harney; Gen. J. B. Sanborn; Gen. A. H. Terry; Gen. C. Augur, and Col. S. F. Tappan) the Indian department was represented by Superintendent Murphy, Colonel Leavenworth, Major Wynkoop, Colonel Rankin and John Smith, interpreter. General Augur reached the camp a little later. He had been ordered to join the commission, to take the place of General Sherman, who had been recalled to Washington.

There were present also Governor Crawford (of Kansas), ex-Lieutenant Governor Root and Senator Ross. The secretary was A. S. H. White. The occasion was one of importance. The commission was escorted to the place of meeting by three troops of the Seventh cavalry (Custer's regiment—Gen. E. S. Godfrey, then lieutenant, and probably the only officer of the Seventh who attended the council now alive, was attached to the escort) and a battery of Gatling guns. A number of newspaper correspondents were present, among them H. M. Stanley, then correspondent of the New York Herald and afterwards famous as an African explorer. (An interesting account of the council is given in Stanley's "Early Travel and Adventures.")

In fact, the Medicine Lodge council would be notable for the galaxy of famous frontier personages connected with it in some capacity or other, if for nothing else. For in addition to these above-mentioned its history contains the names of Col. A. G. Boone, grandson of the famous Kentucky pioneer, and Gen. Kit Carson, who had been active in the preliminary arrangements and of some of the famous Indian chiefs who took part in it. Among these were Lone Wolf, Satanta, Satank and Kicking Bird of the Kiowas, Black Kettle, Medicine Arrow and Bull Bear of the Cheyennes and Little Raven, Spotted Wolf and Yellow Bear of the Arapahoes.

The old files of the newspapers which were represented by correspondents at the council reveal some interesting sidelights on this historic event. For instance, in the New York Tribune for October 23, 1867, an echo of the Indian's resentment against the white man for wasteful slaughter of the buffalo is heard in this paragraph from the Tribune correspondent's dispatch:

On the thirteenth we reached Medicine Lodge creek at a point eight miles from the Indian villages. Satanta, who was with us, was very cross because the young bloods accompanying the expedition had shot the buffalo and left them where they fell. Said he, as the angry blood mounted up to his face, "Has the white man become a child, that he should kill the buffalo for sport? When the red men kill, they do so that they may live." It was a most reckless, extravagant course to pursue undoubtedly, and an unjudged man could not blame him for his language.

The scene which greeted the eyes of the commissioners and other members of the party upon their arrival at the Indian camp is thus described by this same correspondent:

The camp was strewn with the most miscellaneous articles that could be conceived. Dogs, half eaten up, untanned buffalo robes, axes, pots, ket-ties and pans; beadwork and other gaudy finery; old moccasins, chunks of lately killed buffalo, stews cooking in the kettles, dogskins, an antelope and elk hides, pipes, tom-toms and war clubs, horn grubbing hoes, scraping instruments, stone hammers, headless arrows and broken bows; Indian dolls lay promiscuously on the ground near the wigwam and bone saddles in heaps; wicker cradles lay the score, while, howling and barking, were Indian dogs.

In the two pictures above, reproduced from a contemporary magazine, the top panel is labeled "Indian Lodges at Medicine Creek, Kansas—Scene of the Late Indian Peace Treaty," and the bottom, "Council at Medicine Creek Lodge With the Kiowa and Comanche Indians." The portraits of Little Raven and Satanta are from the Bureau of American Ethnology, Smithsonian institution.

Young braves and boys romped in a complete state of nudity, with the exception of an apology for a breech cloth in the shape of a narrow rag. Leapfrog and baseball after their own fashion were the principal games. A few hurled the tomahawk at a target, while others practiced with headless arrows. Girls ten years old and upward wrestled and fought, their light, agile forms performing wild circumgyrations in the air. All these scenes transpired before our eyes, and were very interesting to persons who had never seen such before.

Of some of the important Indian figures at the council, this correspondent gives the following interesting picture:

The following chiefs were at the grand council held today, representing their respective tribes: Comanches—Pavy-Wah-Sah-Mer (Young Bear, head chief); Tip-pah-pen-nov-aly (Painted Lips); Boy-ah-wah-to-yeh-be (Iron Mountain); Par-er-eh-ye (Wise Shield); Za-mah-we-ah; (Without Wealth), the whole consisting of 100 lodges.

Of the Kiowas—Sat-an-ta (White Bear), head sachem; Black Eagle; Sit-son-ee-ah (Stumbling Bear); Sa-tank (Sitting Bear); Ton-a-ew-ko (Kicking Bird), the whole tribe numbering 150 lodges.

Of the Arapahoes, Little Raven, head casque Great Arapahoe nation; Spotted Wolf; Storm; Yellow Bear; Powder Face, and Ice, representing 171 lodges.

The Apaches, numbering in all 85 lodges were represented by the head warrior, Wolf Sleeve, and the chiefs, Poor Bear, Iron Shirt and Crow.

The Cheyenne tribe was represented by Black Kettle, formerly great sachem of the tribe, but who has lately been deposed because of his peaceful activities, and Bull Bear, a most powerful warrior, is substituted instead. Bull Bear, chief of the Dog hand, was also present, present head warrior of the Cheyenne tribe; Big Tall Bull; Heap of Birds; Slim Face; Black White Man, and Grey Head, representing in all 250 lodges.

These chiefs were dressed in the most picturesque manner. Their faces were dyed with red ochre, with curious hieroglyphics drawn in other colors on their cheeks. Their head-dresses were of a very unique cut—eagle feathers in plenty stuck in a circle all standing erect and forming a head-dress resembling a crown. Their ears were hung with brass rings of every size, ranging from one inch to three in diameter. Their scalp locks were plaited and hung down the back adorned by a string of silver plates reaching to the heel. On their breasts were shields of curiously carved shells, enormous silver crosses, and silver medals. Their wrists and fingers were incased in rings of brass. Their feet were covered with moccasins, strung with beads of every color, worked in the shape of flowers, leaves, rings, stars and any other way that their vivid fancy could devise. Black Kettle wore on his head a tall dragoon hat, while flowing over his shoulders and trailing on the ground was a long robe of the finest blue cloth. Other chiefs had gaudy blankets interwoven with fancy colors. Some had Mexican serapes, while the rest wore blue, red, black and green blankets.

The negotiations and distribution of presents dragged on for three weeks and although a treaty was signed, in the long run it came to little. The main point agreed upon by the Indians was that they were to remain south of the Arkansas river and to refrain from molesting the whites. The commissioners made various promises to feed and clothe the red men and give them other presents. As it turned out, the terms of the treaty were lived up to strictly by neither the whites nor the Indians, and the next two years saw continued fighting. For, as Grinnell has pointed out, "the giving of a few presents and the signing of treaties by a few chiefs would not appease the Indians, whose livelihood, the buffalo, was being destroyed and driven away." So the inevitable clash of the two irreconcilable points of view followed. Although Medicine Lodge failed to establish a permanent peace, it is notable for being one of the greatest gatherings of Indians ever held in the West and as a dramatic spectacle its memory has lived and is being perpetuated in the celebration this year.

MOTHER!

A Child Doesn't Laugh and Play if Constipated

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you will have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is oftentimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness. Beware of counterfeit fig syrups.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."
