W. B. A. Held Regular Meeting

The W. B. A. of Macabees held their regular meeting last Saturday night in the Masonic Hall. The lodge was successful in securing this place as a nurse center, which means a lot to the Macabees as a nurse will be furnished them in case of sickness. This nurse is to be appointed by the Supreme Review. Cecil Fletcher was appointed Record and Finance Keeper to finish the unexpired term of Rose Ketchum, who is leaving our city.

At the close of the meeting a social hour was held with Mesdames Ketchum and Garrison as hostesses. Delicious refreshment of ice cream and cake was served. All reported a pleasant evening.

THE KERR MERC. COMPANY

Contracted Cold at a Billy Sunday Revival

Developed Into Systemic Catarrh Recommends PE-RU-NA

Mr. A. R. Wilson, LaFollette, Tenn.

The letter written a short time ago by Mr. A. R. Wilson of LaFollette, Tenn., brings some more direct evidence of the value of Pe-ru-na in the treatment of catarrhal diseases. It reads as follows:—"While attending Billy Sunday's great revival at Knoxville, Tenn., last February I contracted a cold which weakened my entire system. I have taken only three bottles of Pe-ru-na and feel like a new man. It is a great system builder as well as a great catarrh remedy. To attempt to even estimate the thousands who, in the last half century, have come to know and appreciate the merits of Pe-ru-na would be worse than useless. The number is astonishing and increasing daily. Your nearest dealer has Pe-ru-na in both tablet and liquid form. Insist upon having Pe-ru-na, the original treatment for catarrh.

Turkey's Lucky Day

Searchers after the curious have made great play with the coincidence that the conqueror entered Constantinople on a Tuesday 471 years ago, and that it was again on a Tuesday that Caliph was expelled from Constantinople and so brought to an end the reign of a dynasty which had led Turkey to great triumphs and had also plunged it into devastating disasters. The Turkish newspapers have now sought to show that Tuesday should henceforth be looked upon as a day of happy augury, and in support of this theory they recall the fact that the treaty of Lausanne was signed on a Tuesday.

In an inability to be fair, rests most wickedness.

NEWS HAPPENINGS

What Has Transpired This Week the World Over.

AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

Short Mentioning of Interesting Happenings From Day to Day Throughout the World.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

In the record-breaking time of 15 minutes the senate Friday passed the annual agriculture appropriation bill carrying a total of $60,000,000.

The senate Friday passed a bill authorizing an appropriation of $7500 to defray the expenses incident to the injury to Senator Greene, republican, Vermont, who was shot down in an exchange between bootleggers and revenue officers several months ago.

The omnibus flood bill for preliminary examinations of streams was adopted by the senate Friday. It includes the Colorado, Guadalupe, Trinity and Brazos rivers in Texas.

A favorable report has been made upon the Sheppard bill by the senate claims committee carrying claims aggregating $235,025 to 1,465 claimants residing in seven Southeast Texas counties and growing out of the pink boll worm non-cotton zone for 1918. The area extends from the Brazos river to Beaumont.

The resignation of Cyrus Woods as ambassador to Japan has been accepted by President Coolidge.

Chairman Butler of the house naval committee says $150,000,000 was needed to make the American navy equal in strength to that of Great Britain.

The senate Monday overrode President Coolidge's veto of the soldier bonus bill. The measure now automatically becomes law, the house having taken similar action. The vote was 59 to 26 to overthrow the veto.

STATE AND DOMESTIC NEWS.

Kidnaped and held for $10,000 ransom, and murdered when the kidnapers believed their plans were about to miscarry, the nude body of Robert Franks, 14-year-old son of Jacob Franks, millionaire Chicago manufacturer, was found in a swamp on the south side of Chicago, Ill., Friday with the head crushed and the body stripped of all means of identification.

Walking with a firm tread while a priest intoned a prayer, Frank Cadena, ex-soldier, took his seat in the electric chair at Huntsville Thursday midnight and was electrocuted. He was the first white man thus to die since the electric chair was installed at the penitentiary. He was accused of murdering his sister-in-law, Pablito Jemeniz, at San Antonio, the crime for which he paid the penalty.

The fourteenth annual convention of the Texas Bankers' Association closed at Austin, Texas, Thursday with the unanimous election of R. L. Thornton, Dallas state banker, as president to succeed A. M. Graves of Clarksville and with the selection of Houston for the 1925 convention.

W. T. Orr of Ferris was elected president and Austin was selected as the 1925 convention city at the final session at Dallas, Texas, Thursday of the thirty-eighth annual meeting of the Texas Funeral Directors and Embalmers' Association.

Coal fields of the United States and Alaska contain 2,155,900,000 tons of bituminous and 16,153,000,000 tons of anthracite.

Texas' electric chair at Huntsville claimed another victim Thursday. Harle Humphrey, 46, Falls county negro, paid the extreme penalty for the slaying of Lee Frazier, a white man at Marlin in 1923.

Twenty-nine directors of the Texas Centennial Exposition were elected by the seventy-two original directors in session at Austin, Texas, Wednesday, completing the board of one hundred members which will have entire charge of the exposition.

Four 55,000-barrel tanks of the Humble Oil and Refining Company at League City, Texas, were struck by lightning and set on fire during a severe electrical and rain storm Wednesday night.

Resignations of the remaining members of the board of regents of the University of Texas were demanded Tuesday by 10 ex-students of Beaumont, who characterized the board as not being the proper one to select a president of the university. The demand was made in a telegram to H. J. Lutzer-Stark of Orange, chairman of the board, who has been assailed by members of the ex-students' association in Houston.

FOREIGN NEWS.

With impressive military and civil ceremonies of solemn splendor, Italy's unknown soldier was laid to his final rest Thursday under the altar in the center of the Victor Emmanuel monument at Rome. The sound of military drums and mournful music resounded as the coffin was removed from the vestibule of the monument, where it had been placed temporarily last December to permit completion of the entire monument.

Three American army airplanes, having flown across the Pacific for the first time in the history of aviation, are nestled on the Japanese naval flying field at Kasumigaura for a week's breathing spell, preparatory to a continuance of their attempt to circumnavigate the globe by air.

Nature's danger signals are flying over the smoky crest of the Kilauea volcano in the Hawaiian Islands and great leas of life may be averted if the warnings are heeded. In the view of Dr. T. A. Jagger, noted volcanologist.

Arbiters Who Boss National League Players on Field

Here are the umpires of the National league, all former stars of the game, and now the keenest students of the national game. Each is identified on the photograph. Emble, in the center, is the dean of the corps, with thirty years of service. Hank O'Day has served twenty-five years. Klein has put in nineteen years. Quigley has served a decade. Moran, who has won fame with his football team of "Praying Colonels" from Kentucky, McCormick played third base for Anson's immortal White Stockings. The other five men are comparatively young in the league, all being in less than five years.

Stribling Plays Golf

Young Stribling, who has developed into a star light-heavyweight boxer, is shown in the photograph taking a turn at golf at the East Lake Country club, Atlanta Ga.

DIAMOND PICK-UPS

Evansville has sent Pitcher Harry Bergman to Bristol of the Appalachian league.

The baseball catcher's mask was the invention of F. W. Thayer of Harvard college.

Ferris has obtained a shortstop named Nelson from the Omaha Western league team.

Babe Adams, the "grand old man" of the Pirates' pitching staff, is still having trouble with his arm.

The first baseball player to use a glove on the left hand was Douglas Allison, of the Cincinnati team, in 1880.

The fellow who thinks the world is against him because he has a ticket for the game and it rains should think of Noah.

Mike Gazolla, former Lafayette college star, has been sent to Minneapolis by the New York Yankees under an optional agreement.

Syl McCauley, Columbia college pitcher, who is to report to the White Sox in June, recently struck out 15 Armour Tech batters.

Outfielder Al Nixon who was recently transferred to the Philadelphia Nationals by the Boston Braves has jumped to the outlaws.

Jack Fournier has given it out in Brooklyn that with the addition of Milt Stock, the Dodgers overnight become championship contenders.

Manager Bancroft, of the Boston Braves, has released Outfielder Bill Bagwell to the Galveston Texas league club.

Tom Sheehan, Cincinnati recruit pitcher, has a chance to lead the National league pitchers this year if he continues to get the breaks during the season.

Bob Bescher, once the speed demon of the big leagues, is still able to circle the bases in fair style for Fort Worth in the Texas league in the daily workouts of the team.

First Baseman Niehaus, of Chattanooga, set a record for chances handled by a player in a nine-inning game when he accepted 21 putouts and three assists, against Little Rock.

Four or five more days until somebody will start discussing whether or not the ball is livelier than last year. What's the difference? The discuss does never amount to anything.

PENNANT CONTEST OF TWO MAJOR LEAGUES

Several Early Problems Have Been Settled.

The opening dash in the pennant races of the two major leagues is over and the teams have settled down to the long job through the summer months, and several things that appeared as problems during the training season have been settled one way or the other. First and foremost of these was the question of Sisler's eyes. Last year the great hitter of the St. Louis Browns was forced out of the game with defective vision, and it was believed that the game had lost one of its brightest performers for all time. When it became known that Sisler would return to the game as a player this season it was generally believed that the success or failure of the Browns depended on his showing. Sisler has clearly demonstrated that his eyesight is not affecting his hitting.

Another question which was much discussed before the championship season opened was whether or not the Giants could go along at top speed with their pitching staff. But McGraw's youngsters have come through in the form, and it is more probable than it was a month ago that the Giants will lead the National league when fall comes around again. Travis Jackson, filling the position left vacant by Bancroft, was another Giant problem, although there was never very much doubt that he would work into the infield in a capable fashion. Jackson has not only plugged up the gap at short acceptably, but his home-run hitting helped the National league champions to get away to a flying start.

Several other experiments in the way of young players have so far lived up to their minor league reputations, namely, Ike Boone, the Red Sox outfielder, who is showing the way to many veteran hitters and is right up among the leaders; Dudley Lee, the Red Sox young shortstop; Glenn Wright, the Pirates' young shortstop; Clarke, filling an outfield position with the Cleveland Indians; Prothro, third baseman with the Senators; Simmons, the Athletics' slugging outfielder, and many others who are traveling at a fast clip during the early going. But the rookies that hit in the spring quite often pop out in the fall, and it is still a bit too early to hail any of the new members of the big leagues as second Wagners, Mathewsons, Cobbs or Speakers.

Sport Notes

Sande has never ridden a winner in the Preackness.

Boxing has become a popular sport among the Brazilians.

If it's for exercise why don't golfers lug their own golf bags?

The National Lacrosse Association of Canada was organized in 1867.

Jem Smith was the last pugilistic champion under the London prize ring rules.

There are more than 500,000 caddies on golf links throughout the United States.

An athletic champion has never been able to repeat for ten years in either the amateur or professional class.

The college record for putting the shot is 48 feet 10 1/2 inches. The world's record—16-pound shot—is 51 feet.

Soccer football is the most popular sport among the college youths in China. Tennis ranks second and track third.

Oxford has twice won the big English boat race nine times in succession. Cambridge's greatest number of successive wins is five.

Between 150 and 200 sanctioned open tournaments are held during the season in the various tennis centers of the British Isles.

In his comparatively short ring career, Young Marullo, the Italian boxer of New Orleans, has fought 28 battles, and scored 15 knockouts.

Considering what he does to the turf, a golfer on the links for the first time in five months might be said to go through a harrowing experience.

G. S. Cramer '25, has been elected captain of the University of California crew for next year. Cramer, who is registered from Fresno, is stroke of the varsity.

Mrs. Laura Lanham, Bloomington (Ill.) champion horsehoe pitcher of the world, has issued a challenge to any member of her sex and will meet all opponents at any place they may select and at any time. Mrs. Lanham is a southpaw, and has a graceful style of pitching that, experts say, has never been surpassed.

Great Running Machine

Clarence De Mar, Melrose sprinter, won the Boston Athletic association, marathon for the fourth time, establishing himself as the greatest running machine of all time. De Mar's time, 2:29:40 1/5, breaks the American record of 2:41:39 2/5. The photographer caught De Mar just as he was breathing the tape at the finish.

Woman Shoe Pitcher

Mrs. Laura Lanham, Bloomington (Ill.) champion horsehoe pitcher of the world, has issued a challenge to any member of her sex and will meet all opponents at any place they may select and at any time. Mrs. Lanham is a southpaw, and has a graceful style of pitching that, experts say, has never been surpassed.

DALLAS CONTRACTOR ADDS HIS TESTIMONY

Stomach Trouble Pulled Him Down 80 Lbs. in Weight—Tanlac Brought Relief.

"Tanlac brought back my health and strength when I was in such a bad way that my folks thought I couldn't live, and the least I can do is speak out in its praise," is the striking statement of E. R. Ballard, well-known electrical contractor, 4311 Deere St., Dallas, Texas. "Stomach trouble had brought me down from 220 pounds to 140 pounds, and I was so run down, weak and nervous that I was simply past going. Things looked pretty gloomy for me in those days, for I couldn't look after my business and was just losing out all around. "Tanlac ended my troubles and restored about 50 pounds of my lost weight, and since that time, 5 years ago now, I have kept myself in good health by taking a course of Tanlac every spring. I sure do bank on Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation. Made and recommended by the manufacturers of TANLAC.

Lost—A Mother!

"I've lost my mother," said Rene. "Do I understand you to mean that your mother is dead?" asked Ludovic. "Oh, nothing so hackneyed," replied Rene. "No, she's simply disappeared." "But aren't you doing anything?" asked Ludovic.

"Oh, yes," returned Rene, "everything that could be done at short notice. We've notified the police and the family solicitors and consulted a crystal gazer, and we've told the dairy to send half a pint less milk every day till further notice. I can't think of anything else to do. It's the first time I've lost a mother, you know."—"From 'The Square Egg,' by H. H. Munro.

Original Water Heater

The first water heater known dates back some two thousand years. This was the "abatur" of the Romans, a crude bronze kettle with a handle for swinging over an open fire. The "foculus," an apparently later device, was a metal container into which hot stones were put to heat the water surrounding them. This seems to have been the best water heater the early Romans were able to devise.

An hour before the time George was expected she was down at the lake front, anxiously looking across the lake for the plane to put in an appearance. It finally came, and when George stepped out and saw her he blissfully folded her in his arms. Hitherto, in public, they had always been careful to give their meetings a casual air, but this embrace was as much as his initiative as at hers.

She told him that she had finally broken with her father.

"I've had an awful row with dad," she told him, when he'd drawn her aside to make way for the activities of the crew. "He says I'm not his daughter any more. He told me to tell you that because it might make a difference. Does it?"

"I should say it did," he cried, pulling her up in his arms again. "Does it mean you're going to marry me, now, Trix?"

She told him, blissfully, that it did. "Today! This minute if we could, I've already got a place for us to live," she added, and she felt him give a sob at that. "I slept there alone last night."

A hurried visit to the city hall reminded them that the day was Thanksgiving and that the public offices were all closed. A visit to the superintendent secured them permission for Trix to make the trip to Cleveland with George the next day, where they could be married, and then suddenly they both remembered that they were ravenously hungry. They jumped into a taxi, their fourth that day.

She directed the chauffeur to one of her father's favorite restaurants and here they spent two unregarded hours, silent and talkative by turns, sometimes frankly holding hands across the board, sometimes, for fun, distantly ceremonious.

When he got out his pocketbook to pay the bill she laughed in a way that made him ask her why. "I thought of something I'd forgotten," she said. "Something I promised dad I'd ask you about. It's that thousand-dollar check he gave you the night you brought me home last summer."

He flushed bright red, and for an answer, drew out of his pocket a sealed envelope, which he turned over to her. Inside was one thousand dollars in new bills. "That's his dirty money," said George. "After I got it I became rattled; thought you had gone back on me, and cashed the check. Then I woke up and have been waiting for a chance ever since to return it to him."

Trix tucked the money away into her coat pocket. "I don't see why it should ever go back. A thousand dollars is a lot of money. I'll just write him and tell him you paid it to me and decide later whether to send it back to him." George laughed at her woman's reasoning.

They both felt silent after this, and presently she asked him what he was thinking about. "About tomorrow's flight," he reluctantly confessed. "I never was scared of a trip before. But when I think what it would mean if anything went wrong—"

"You're tired," she interrupted; "that's all the matter with you. No wonder, doing double work like this. Let's forget it; for tonight, anyway, I'll tell you what let's do. Let's go and have a look at the place I've picked out for us to live. See what you think of it. It looked pretty good to me last night, when I was thinking how we'd fix it up."

"I can't believe that part of it, Trix. That's God's own truth," he told her, and his voice broke over the words.

"I've brought Mr. Burns," she told Mrs. Henderson half an hour later, "to see whether he likes our house. If he does we're going to take it. If he doesn't bother to come up, I guess I can show him around, all right." But Mrs. Henderson, full of sympathetic good-will once more, wouldn't consider it a bother, and there might be some questions Mr. Burns would like to ask; so she heavily led the way upstairs and showed them into the apartment, with ceremony.

George hadn't any questions to ask. It seemed, and his replies to those of Beatrice, whether he liked this, or thought that would do, were almost monosyllabic, but when the tour of inspection was finished, she answered, confidently, for his being satisfied with it. "We'll take it for a month, 'en, anyway. And I guess we might as well pay now. Shall I, George, or have you got it handy?"

"I've got it right here," he said. "Well, I'll be glad to have you here," Mrs. Henderson assured him, "though I expect it'll be a strain on my nerves. Your wife was telling me yesterday the job you had. My heart ached for her, alone last night, what will with the storm and all. I'm glad she'll have you with her tonight."

Trix saw her lover's face go dull red and noted that his hands, busy with his pocketbook, were shaking so that he could hardly extricate the bills he wanted. But he made no disclaimer, and he paid over the first month's rent. Mrs. Henderson, apparently, had seen nothing. She said, as she went away with the money, that she'd bring back the receipt as soon as ever she could make it out.

"Don't bother," Trix called after her. "Leave it on the hall table and we'll get it—some time or other." Then she closed the door, and, leaning back against it, faced her lover.

There was one aspect of her aerial elopement which Beatrice had not counted upon. She had been vaguely aware that their departure in the mail-plane on Friday morning had stimulated a marked interest in the group of spectators. She'd also been conscious, through the haze of enveloping sensations, when they landed in Cleveland, of the click of cameras and the rattle of questions. And there'd been an awfully nice girl, a reporter on one of the local papers, who'd made her a call at the hotel after their marriage in the afternoon and might have stayed longer if George's return hadn't shooed her away. But none of this had prepared her for the next morning's paper. "Millionaire's Daughter Elopes With Mail-Pilot" was the seven-column heading across the front page. She had become a celebrity! She wondered what her father would think of that.

CHAPTER VIII

Romance.

No apparent relapse was suffered by Joe as a result of his quarrel with his daughter. He saw the papers, of course, with the sensational accounts of her elopement, including interviews with Beatrice, herself, but they were able to spare him the reporters who came to get his side of the story. Jennie, who had come back to the apartment in response to Anson's message and stayed a fortnight, dealt with them competently, of course. Two or three days was all that phase of the affair lasted. He surprised her by taking it so quietly, for the papers were making him look like the theatrical purse-proud father who hadn't thought an ex-aviator who had fought in France good enough to marry his daughter. They made it appear, also, that George, already in love with Beatrice, had taken the job of chauffeur in order to be near her.

Joe's defense was to make Jennie read the report of the detective agency, and during the sleepless hours of the night after she had finished it, she was angry and humiliated. She felt the sting of contempt in the girl's duplicity.

"I was wrong about her, all the way through—and never surer in my life that I was right. I wouldn't have believed it, except for what's happened," she admitted.

"It's all right," he told her. "No good crying over spilled milk." He added, "Here's a letter from her; came in this morning. Dispose of it—burn it up. Read it first if you like, of course, but don't tell me what's in it. I don't want to know. I've had enough, Jennie."

She felt, with the report of the detective agency fresh in her mind, that, like Joe, she'd had enough, and she tore the letter to bits, unopened, and dropped them into her waste-paper basket, telling herself as she did so that this was the end of her concern with Beatrice Greer. Of course it was not. The girl had been too vital a factor in her life during the past half-year to be dismissed like that. It would have been easier, she thought during the first of the ensuing days, to stop wondering about her if she'd read that letter. It was curiosity that was nagging her, demanding satisfaction.

A week or thereabout after she'd destroyed the letter Beatrice walked into her office with no more warning than the tap of a knuckle upon her half-open door. Jennie, who had swung round in her chair to see who the visitor was, felt herself go limp at the sight of her. Her face was glowing with the sting of the wind-driven snow; tiny melted drops of it hung in her eyelashes, and it lay in drifts in the folds of her fur coat. She blinked the blur out of her eyes, looked at Jennie fixedly for a moment, then stooped and, brusquely, kissed her.

"What I came for was to make you tell me about my father. I've telephoned two or three times, but Anson won't say a word. Last night I went to your flat to see you, but you weren't there, so I suppose you're still at our house. It was one of George's nights at Cleveland and I was feeling kind of lonesome. He'll be back today, about noon—" (She glanced out the window where a momentary flaw of snow had obliterated the shore-line of the lake.)—"unless he gets lost in that. So I thought, while I was waiting, I'd come here and find out from you or Henry Craven. I want to know if I made him a lot worse, that night I went away, by quarreling with him. I wrote him a letter a while ago that I thought perhaps he'd answer, and he never did."

"He got it, all right," Jennie informed her, "but he wouldn't read it. Gave it to me to tear up for him. I did—without opening it."

Beatrice laughed shortly. "There was a perfectly good check for a thousand dollars in that letter." In response to Jennie's stare of undisguised astonishment, she went on to explain. "It was the thousand dad gave George as a reward. He cashed the check for it, but never touched the money. When he ran away with me he made me send it back. I put it in my account at the bank and sent dad a check for it, telling him, in the letter, what it was. I didn't much want it, but George stood over me until I did. But I guess if you tore it up, that settles that. Only you might tell dad what was in the letter."

"I don't think I will," Jennie said, thoughtfully. "Not for the present, anyhow. When his head gets better, I suppose I will."

"What's the matter with his head?" Beatrice asked.

"It aches," Jennie told her, simply. "All the time. Night and day. Never stops. It isn't a sharp ache, he says; it's just as if his brain was a size too big for his skull. But if he gets excited or makes any exertion it's worse—beats, like hammers. That's why I'm not going to tell him."

"Pretty awful for him, that would be," the girl reflected. "How long will it keep up, do you suppose?"

"Months, perhaps. Doctor Bennett says. He hasn't told Joe that, though."

"Months!" Trix echoed, aghast. "That'll drive him crazy."

"I don't know what it'll drive him to," said Jennie.

"And I suppose," Beatrice said, roughly, "you think it's all my fault." Jennie didn't answer at once. "I wish I did," she said at last. "It's my fault, a good deal of it. That's what's worrying me."

"Because you didn't play detective, yourself, and find out about George before dad came home? What difference would that have made? You came nearer succeeding, the way you tried. You almost made it. If you'd cared about me a little more—enough so you had to ask questions—oh, it would have come to the same thing in the end. I guess, whatever anybody did. Only, Jennie, you told me once—it was the first real talk we ever had together—that you weren't an old maid, exactly. I've thought of that since, and wondered what you meant by it. I don't suppose you'd care to tell me that, now, feeling about me the way you do."

She paused there, tentatively, but Jennie volunteered nothing. She took the girl's two arms for a moment in a tight grip. "I'm glad you said that, Beatrice. I'm on your father's side more than ever. He's going to need all the help he can get. Whatever I do'll be done for him. All the same, I wish you luck, and I hope you're going to be happy. You are, I suppose, now."

"Yes, I am." The words were uninflected, and her laugh acknowledged how dubious they had sounded. "I mean," she explained, "I don't know whether happy's the exact word or not. I'm glad I did it. I'd be glad, even if it was all going to end in a crash, half an hour from now out there on the lake front, when George gets in from Cleveland. Because it's been something, already, that I'd never have been quite—alive without. But—life's kind of funny, isn't it? Funnier than any one ever tells you. You have to go ahead and find it out for yourself."

She wasn't asking for sympathy, though, as she made clear by rising from the corner of the desk and moving away a little. "I'm going to school, again," she added, in a brighter note. "George isn't crazy about having me do it, but I tell him I'd go crazy if I didn't. What I'd really like is to learn to drive a plane and then get a job, myself, in the mail. I'd get the Omaha run, you see, and then we could come sailing in from opposite directions at the same time, and have our two days off, together here. It gives George fits to have me talk like that, but it's all of him because I could learn to do it just as well as he could. Anyhow, there isn't a chance of it, so he needn't worry."

She scribbled a line or two on Jennie's scratch-pad. "There's where we fix now," she concluded. "I don't know how long we'll stay. George is talking about moving to Cleveland, but I don't want to, much. Anyhow, they'll forward it, if anything happens you want to tell me about."

Jennie said good-by and had to resist an impulse to say a good deal more than that. All her resentment against the girl had been sponged out and the underlying affection made legible again.

Before Christmas Jennie packed all the clothes and trinkets she found in the blue room and dispatched them to Beatrice. It was, she had no doubt, what Joe wanted her to do with them, as soon as he was able to get about again.

When winter settled down upon the five country there came a lull in the activities of the Greer company. Joe nursed his headache like a wounded bear until he discovered that by drinking enough whisky he could get relief from it. After that he appeared to the world at large to be himself again. It was not an appearance that for long deceived Jennie, however. She noted that he let his drawing-board alone and that he could not be driven to put any constructive work into the problem of finding a market for their raw linen when they had made it. It was going to be a question of supply, not demand, he insisted.

John Suggested a Trip to the Riviera.

Poor Henry Craven, what with a bad bronchial cold and his chronic worry as to his duty between John Williamson, whom he was grateful to, and Joe Greer, who had become his friend, declined to such an extent that both John and Joe insisted he take a vacation. John suggested a fortnight on the Riviera, along with the voyage over and back, as the sort of thing he needed to set him up, and Henry, though overwhelmed by the idea at first, dutifully and rapturously went. Violet and Margaret had been spending most of the winter over there. He had to be back for the April meeting of the company, of course.

Violet, who had struck him as restless and not very well, decided at the last minute to come home with him, leaving Margaret to carry out some commissions in Italy for P. via Novelli. Also, she surprised and alarmed him one evening on deck by beginning to talk about Joe. They'd had a sort of quarrel, she said, the nature of which John had altogether misunderstood. She didn't want Joe to think that she was responsible for John's misunderstanding, and she adumbrated an idea that Henry was the man to make this clear to him. The thought of it ruined Henry's sleep for the rest of the voyage. He came straight through to Chicago, leaving Violet to spend a day or two with Dorothy at Thornycroft, and reported at once to John.

"I'm glad you turned up today," John said. "I was afraid Violet might have persuaded you to wait and come on with her—and I wanted a talk with you as soon as I could get it. Greer's put one over on us, Henry. A smooth first-class job, right under our noses. He'll go into Saturday's meeting with an absolute voting control of the stock."

"I hope," Henry said blankly, "I hope it isn't due to something that I have overlooked."

"Lord, no," John assured him. "It isn't your fault. You voted with us on it. No, we saved ourselves off with the limb, while he stood by and told us he wished we wouldn't. Greer's got the stock we issued to that fake inventor."

"The only protection we've got for the present is that he doesn't know that we know he's got that stock—at least I don't believe he knows. That dummy inventor of his will be afraid to tell him. As long as Greer thinks we are unsuspecting, he may let things rise for a while. You'll treat him as if nothing had happened, of course. Keep your eyes open, and tell me if he lets anything slip. Have you seen him since you got home?"

"No," Henry said blankly. "I thought I would come straight to you first."

"Glad you did," said John, getting up by way of ending the audience. "But you had better go over and look up with him as soon as you can. We are depending on you from now on, you know." This was genially, almost humorously, said, but it rattled Henry worse than ever.

"I don't think you ought to rely on me," he began, miserably.

But John, with a laugh and a thump on the back, cut him short. "Don't you worry about it," he said. "Did you have a good trip? How's Violet looking?" She wired me from New York that she was feeling a whole lot better. She's coming home Friday, I believe."

Evidently she did, for she telephoned Henry Friday night, apparently for the mere cousinly purpose of saying "Hello," and of telling him she meant to fulfill tomorrow a promise she had made Margaret to look over his flat and see what condition it was in, after having stood housekeeperess so long.

The meeting went off with an appearance of unanimity and good-will which Henry found almost farcical in the light of the bitter antagonisms he knew were bristling about the board. Prosperity of course is a wonderful unguent, and Joe's report was so eloquent of the prospect of it that the development of any friction upon the surface of things would have been impossible. Nothing short of a volcanic eruption could have broken through—and this didn't happen.

Joe was able to report the organization of forty-two subsidiary companies, with a normal capacity of four thousand tons of straw each, which meant that nearly ten per cent of the entire straw crop of the flax-growing country would be processed next year under their patents. It wasn't possible, of course, to compute the profit in advance, but with market conditions as they were today, it would be very large indeed.

The formal routine of winding up the business of the meeting was clicked off under Jennie's practiced hand as rapidly as possible. As soon as the adjournment was taken, John with Gregory and Frank Crawford went away. There was no disposition on their part to linger for an informal discussion of affairs, or for the bottle of ancient Scotch which Joe offered to produce. They would be having a confab of their own, Henry supposed, and was glad they hadn't invited him to take part in it. There was momentarily a thoughtful look in Joe's eye as he watched their broad top-coated backs receding down the corridor.

He produced his bottle, Jennie, though invited, declined to join them over it. She wanted to get her minutes in shape, she said. Henry exclaimed in frank astonishment at the enormous size of the drink Joe poured for himself—an ordinary tumbler it was, and he had filled it more than two-thirds full. He got up as soon as Henry had done sipping his drink, saying, "If you're going home I'll drive you up."

It occurred to Henry that Violet had spoken of running in for a few minutes after lunch, but it was now well after four. Assuming that she'd carried out her intention at all, which was not any too likely, she'd almost certainly have gone by now. He'd have to chance it.

Oddly enough, after the first horrified moment when he saw the two coming face to face, he was enormously relieved that it had happened. Joe happened to be standing where Violet couldn't see him as she came down the corridor to the sitting room, and she called gayly to Henry that she had him in her power now. She could blackmail him with Margaret to any tune she liked, after this look about the flat.

She flushed like a schoolgirl at the sight of Joe, threw him a rather cavalier nod of greeting, and then, seeming to change her mind about it, went deliberately up to him and held out her hand.

"I wonder if you ever got a message from me," she said, composedly enough but without trying to make the words sound completely casual. "I left one with your butler one day last winter when you were hurt. I hope you're quite all right again. I've known, the last two or three months, how miserable it is to be ill."

Joe remarked, without answering her question, that he'd heard she hadn't been well, but that, apparently, her trip had done her good.

"I don't know whether it was going away or coming back that did it," she said, so lightly and swiftly that Henry was not quite sure whether he'd heard her aright or not. She went straight on, with a good deal more emphasis, to mention tea. She thought she could manage to produce some if they'd like it.

Another odd thing happened then. Violet offered to go and make it, naturally enough, since she had been the one who had suggested having it; and Henry, equally of course, insisted on doing it himself. This was his house, and tea-making was his specialty. He took a hesitating step toward the door, saying, "But, of course, if you would rather make it, Violet—"

She shipped around, and in so doing turned her back squarely on Joe. Her face ablaze with an uncontrollable exasperation. Her voice had a perceptible edge on it, too, though luckily it was not as expressive as her face, as she said, "I've no passion for making tea, Henry, nor even for drinking it if it's any better."

SPRITLY FLANNELS POPULAR; SCARFS APPEAR EVERYWHERE

IN THE spring youthful fancies lightly turn to all sorts of things—none of them (except affairs of the heart) quite so engrossing as where-with youthful bodies shall be clothed. Stylists are sure of appreciation when they adapt the modes to younger women, for everyone likes youthful clothes and no one is quite so quick to perceive and adopt innovations as the debutantes.

They have given the glad hand of welcome to those sprightly suits, made of barred or striped flannels, which vary the tailored mode this season, and adroitly introduce lively colors in clothes for the street. Light tan, beige, brown and khudred tones provide the dominant colors in these flannels, with tan and beige in the favorite and in striped patterns, white with blue, green or yellow.

Scarfs have a place of their own—and it is every place—in the world of fashion. After much heralding they came to our hospitable shores and found a royal welcome, for we never do anything by halves, and now we have out-scarfed Paris. We have scarfs for morning, afternoon and evening—for sports and for street wear; scarfs conveyed by millinery that is like them, and scarfs that sail independently.

There is every reason for the success of this smart accessory. In some types it is within the reach of everybody; it is becoming and comfortable and adds color and vivacity to our plain, workaday clothes and a bit of lead. In the bars or stripes, black, brown, blue, green, orange or coral provide the vivacious color contrasts that spice them up just enough.

One of these trim and practical and seasonable suits is pictured here, made up with a popular box coat and plain skirt. Bars and stripes tempt the designers to do without any sort of trimming and confine themselves to decorations made of the material used in the suit—as bias bands, collar, cuffs and pockets, cut on the bias of the goods. In the model pictured there is no other adornment except a single bone button on the cuffs and at the neck fastening.

Brads are used in bindings on suits in the quieter color combinations, as splendor to our dressy raiment. Every woman may have a wrap of delicate chiffon about her throat, with indoor frocks, a snappy silk scarf with tailored silts, and as many more as her purse allows, or occasions call for. Those for sports wear often match sweaters and those for afternoon and evening have reached dimensions that almost entitle them to a place among wraps. Two new examples of the dressier scarfs, with hats to match, are shown here. The wide and airy affair at the left is made of plain and printed georgette and bordered with wide ribbon which is hemstitched on. Shirtings of georgette, in two colors, join the and printed fabrics.

bars or stripes in black or brown, against tan or beige backgrounds, the brads match the darker colors. All flannel suits are at their best when their designers hold to simplicity, and it is possible for them to do this and still achieve piquancy—a consummation devoutly to be wished and always successful. These barred and striped flannels and those in some plain colors are an inspiration to makers of semi-sports suits and summer day dresses. In the plain flannels Lanvin green is a

THIS WOMAN'S MARVELLOUS RECOVERY

All Due to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Truman, Minn.—"I was badly run-down, had pains in my side and back; sometimes I could hardly move around in bed. My husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking it was so much better I could do my work again. I do my housework, have a garden, raise chickens, and in harvest time I worked in the field and helped pick corn. Sometimes I do chores and milk. I took the Vegetable Compound before and after my four-month-old baby was born, and it has always helped me wonderfully. I believe there is no better medicine made for women, and I hope every woman will give it a fair trial."

Women suffering from troubles so common to their sex should give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

The Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has relieved women of such troubles for the past fifty years. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Antique Dealer Got Rubens for Trifle

A Rubens valued at more than 1,000,000 francs has been discovered among 15 old canvases purchased for a few hundred francs by an antiquary at Roubaix, says the Petit Parisien correspondent there, according to the New York World.

The pictures were inherited by a Roubaix man from his great uncle, Henri Robelin, auctioneer for the famous Drouet salesroom in Paris in the reign of Napoleon III. He thought them virtually valueless and stowed them away. Recently they were found in the attic and sold to M. Agre, antique dealer, for a trifle.

One picture, ten inches by seven, looked like a Rubens. Agre cleaned it and was surprised to find the signature of Rubens.

Agre sent the picture, which represents sleeping Venus and a fawn, to Professor Tugnyne of the Brussels Art school, an authority on Rubens, who pronounced it genuine beyond doubt.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MR. LEOPARD FROG

Mr. Leopard Frog sang really with quite good deal of sweetness. Mrs. Leopard Frog tried to join in the song too. But her voice was much lower than his and she did not care to sing as he did.

His little pouch filled up as he made his notes and as he sent forth the sounds the pouch seemed to fall in again.

He was very handsome, dressed in brown with beautiful spots. Some of his family dressed in green, but either costume was considered good form in Leopard Frog circles.

He was very happy these days. One day, he was hopping along an orchard, a good deal later on, and he managed to escape some one who was trying to catch him.

He gave a number of low jumps but later he was caught.

Now Mr. Leopard Frog does not mind becoming a pet, but the one who caught him was rough and unkind to him at first and poor Mr. Leopard Frog was very sad.

His little frog heart was beating nervously. His eyes looked worried and he did not know what was going to happen to him.

Perhaps he would sing a little! Maybe that would make the person who had caught him feel different.

So Mr. Frog sang.

He sang sweetly, too, and there was something about his song, something sweet and something pleading which made the one who had caught him look down at him with a new feeling.

"Why little frog, you're a good sport," said the one who had captured him.

And somehow the Leopard Frog's eyes looked brighter and he felt that it would be well.

What a nice pet he was. He was given a big play garden of his own. He had insects and grasshoppers and other delicious things to eat.

For you know the Leopard Frog does a great deal of good and those who catch leopard frogs do not appreciate the good they do are being very unfair to the little leopard frogs.

And, too, the leopard frogs are such dear frogs!

Well, Mr. Leopard Frog made himself quite at home, and he was as happy as could be.

But the thing that made him happiest of all was when he was given a special treat and when some water was poured gently over his back.

Oh, how he loved that. He almost purred and at any rate he sang.

That was delicious! It was soothing and cooling and restful and refreshing.

And he used to hum this little song: "Water down my back Gives me great delight, And when it's done just right, Goo-g-a-room, goo-g-a-room, Goo-g-a-room, I say!"

"Water down my back Is something I adore, And singing ask for more, Goo-g-a-room, goo-g-a-room, Goo-g-a-room, I say!"

"Water down my back Is pleasant, yes indeed, And after it I feed, Goo-g-a-room, goo-g-a-room, Goo-g-a-room, I say!"

A True Economist "Auntie, won't you please wash my face?"

"Why, Robert, can't you do that yourself?" said his aunt.

"Oh, yes, I can," was the reply. "But I'll have to wet my hands, and they don't need it."

Would Be an Orphan "Why, Edward, what is the matter?" asked the woman of her small nephew, who was crying bitterly.

"Mamma whipped me," sobbed the little fellow, "an' I'm cryin' 'cause I wasn't b-born an orphan."

Red Frog Valued

Emitting a croak of great volume, a bright red frog has been found in the jungles of British Guiana by scientists from the New York Zoological society. The scarlet animal, it is reported, is regarded as a charm by some tropical natives. When one is caught, it is cut into as many pieces as there are warriors in the village. Each man then rubs his part over the points of his arrows in the belief that this practice will assure his weapon perfect aim—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

LIVE STOCK FOUNDATION STOCK IS BIG ESSENTIAL

The good breeder of live stock may be said to be the one that has been successful in the selection of the parents of his stock. Care and feed are essential, but they can develop an animal no further than the inheritance that animal has received from its parents will permit.

A man was seen one time upon the Denver market trying to buy a boar to take home to his herd. When engaged in conversation he showed that type, ancestry or health did not enter his mind. A boar was a boar and nothing more to him.

Selection is just as important to that man who was a producer of market hogs as it is to the producer of animals from which others breed. Satisfactory results cannot be obtained by taking anything as foundation stock and then save the best from their increase. There is quite likely not to be any best among the increase. The live stock man must decide upon his ideal before he starts in the business and selects his foundation animals with his ideal always before his mind's eye.

It is impossible very frequently to obtain our ideal or even approach it, but to have a goal toward which to work and never reach it, is better than not to have any goal at all.

Selection is important, as has been suggested, and it may now be said that selection to a type is important. Diversity of types seen in a breeder's flock or herd is generally indicative of haphazard breeding operations. What is the value of uniformity of type? No one will question its financial advantages in feeding or selling. Many worry about which breed to raise, but the selection of and adherence to a type is even more important than the selection of a breed.

The breeder of live stock must be a student of animal form and a judge to insure success in his endeavor.—B. W. Fairbanks, Colorado Agricultural College.

Winter Swine Slaughter Shows Decided Increase

During the winter months of December, January and February, 16,821,291 hogs were slaughtered in establishments operating under federal meat inspection. This number exceeds the previous record for three months, made December, 1918, and January and February, 1919, by more than one million.

Those who have studied the reasons for this enormous increase say that many factors are involved. Increased breeding, due to the successful corn crop for the last two years and a satisfactory public purchasing power, have contributed to the record-breaking slaughter. The hogs have been somewhat lighter in weight, however, than in former years and the large number does not mean such a record-breaking quantity of pork as the hog slaughter might indicate.

Roughage for Fattening Lams in Feeding Test

Very little difference between alfalfa and soy-bean hay as roughages for fattening lambs was noted in a feeding test at the Illinois experiment station. The two hays were fed to lots of 25 lambs fed shelled corn in addition, with no supplement. Gains made by the two groups of lambs were almost exactly the same. The lambs given soy-bean hay ate somewhat more hay than those fed alfalfa, but the soy-bean hay group ate slightly less corn to compensate for the increased hay consumption. Somewhat more of the soy-bean hay was wasted than of alfalfa. At the end of the test the alfalfa lambs were valued ten cents higher than those fed soy-bean hay, but both lots brought the same price when sold at Chicago.

Tetanus in Lambs Often Follows Spring Docking

Tetanus is quite common among lambs at this time of the year, since it frequently follows docking if the operation is not properly performed. Tetanus is often spoken of as "lock jaw," though that is really not the correct name because the locking of the jaws does not always occur.

Little can be done for animals that have formed over the stump of the tail after docking should be removed and the stump painted with tincture of iodine two or three times daily. When docking lambs again the stump should be painted immediately after the operation. Some stockmen make a practice of searing the stump with a hot iron. The latter sterilizes the wound and also controls the bleeding.

Sunlight for Little Pigs

Sunlight is indispensable to the health and vigor of newly born pigs. This is true in all except extremely hot weather. The sooner they get it the better it is for them, and farrowing houses fitted to let in the sunshine are decidedly advantageous. As soon as the little fellows are strong enough to run around and follow after the sow they may be let outdoors into the sunshine. They ought to be strong enough to do this within from three days to a week.

SWAMP-ROOT FOR KIDNEY AILMENTS

There is only one medicine that really stands out pre-eminent as a medicine for curable ailments of the kidneys, liver and bladder.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root stands the highest for the reason that it has proven to be just the remedy needed in thousands upon thousands of distressing cases. Swamp-Root makes friends quickly because its mild and immediate effect is soon realized in most cases. It is a gentle, healing vegetable compound.

Start treatment at once. Sold at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Ideas Seldom Evolved by "Pencil Thinkers"

"Look at the boy."

"What is the boy doing?" "He is trying to think."

"How do you know he is trying to think?" "I know he is trying to think because he is sucking his pencil."

"Does he think he can get ideas out of it in that way?" "No. He probably doesn't think about it at all. It is just a nasty and dangerous habit."

"Why is it a dangerous habit?" "Because somebody with a disease may also have been trying to suck ideas out of the same pencil."

"I never thought of that."

"Yes. It's not thinking which causes many accidents, much suffering and many deaths. Whenever you see a pencil with toothmarks on the end you will know that it has been used by somebody who doesn't think."

The Ladies Auxiliary to the Presbyterian Church will meet with Mrs. S. S. Daggett June 9 for Bible study. All welcome.

Presbyterian Sunday school opened with 83 last Sunday quite a good showing following the close of schools. The memory work excellent.

Ladies Auxiliary to Presbyterian church met with Mrs. Daggett last Monday with 17 members and 3 visitors present. Several contests were enjoyed. 1st "A musical contest", Mrs. Savage won first prize and Mrs. Carter won booby prize; 2nd "a personal contest" a name of member being written and folded in on the papers passed around each member not knowing of whom they were writing about, answered a question as to height, weight, color of eyes and then each paper passed around the circle, much fun when they were read. Last contest of "abbreviated states," Mrs. John Stovell won first prize and Mrs. Julia McKee won booby prize. Delicious refreshments of veal and ham sandwiches, potato sandwiches, iced tea, lemon and pineapple cake, brick ice cream and candy was served by Mesdames Daggett and des Landes. Everyone thoroughly enjoyed themselves and thanked the hostess for a lovely evening.

Bridge Party
Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Savage entertained with Bridge Wednesday evening complimenting Mr. and Mrs. Harry Perner of Rosita, Coah., Mexico. Various cut flowers were placed throughout the living room.

Mr. Fred P. Holt received the gentleman's prize, a set of link cuff buttons; while the lady's prize went to Mrs. P. R. Burns, a box of stationery.

Refreshments of sherbert and cake were served. Those present that enjoyed Mr. and Mrs. Savage's hospitality were: Mr. and Mrs. Fred P. Holt, Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Burns, Mr. and Mrs. Max Bogusch, Mr. and Mrs. John Stovel, Mesdames F. B. Carter, Pres Nichols, Ed Downie, Jack McKee and the honorees, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Perner.

America's Marvels NATURAL AND OTHERWISE

By T. T. Maxey

CRATER LAKE

Agos ago a great, tall, volcanic peak, which has been called Mount Masama, occupied "a piece in the sun" in the southwestern part of Oregon, about half way between Portland and San Francisco. The volcanic action within this mountain produced heat of such intensity and in such quantity that the entire top melted, fell in and disappeared.

Naturally, utter desolation trailed such a tremendous convulsion. Nature, in her mysterious workings, aided by time, changed this condition of affairs and produced a striking geological spectacle which is one of the scenic masterpieces of this earth. The opening or crater in the top of this topless peak gradually filled with water which formed a beautiful, deep blue lake—hence the name, Crater Lake.

This lake, almost circular in shape and about five miles across, is perhaps the deepest body of fresh water on earth. The surface of this lake is more than 6000 feet above sea level. No inlet or outlet has been discovered. Its waters escape through underground channels which doubtless reappear elsewhere in the form of springs. New waters come from other springs and heavy snows. A belt or girdle of cliffs towers grotesquely above the lake and slope down sharply to the edge of the water.

The lake is invisible until one has climbed to the rim. The look down into it is indescribable. One is stupor-stricken. "The said that this world holds not another sight like it. The heart of this mountain is filled with a sea of sulphur-colored water. First the size and the precipitousness of the surrounding cliffs astonish you; then the unexpected beauty and brilliancy of Nature's coloring strikes you. The great walls of rock are spotted with yellow and pink. The tips of the cliffs carry moss or less snow. The trees are a dark green. Below, the placid surface of this bluest of blue lakes reflects the surroundings with astonishing clearness.

Within the lake an island or cinder cone rises several hundred feet above the surface of the water. Geologists conclude this to be the result of eruptive volcanic forces. This island contains a crater. This crater contains a pool. So here we have the unduplicated spectacle of a crater within a crater and a pool within a lake.

Another small island pops up out of this lake. As its formation cradly resembles a ship, it is called Phantom Ship. The fitness of the name is appreciated when it is understood that, viewed in certain lights, it disappears, to reappear again as the rays of light or your position changes.

Crater Lake has been created a national park by Uncle Sam, in order that his people might come and enjoy the grandeur of this unspoiled sight.

A 50c Investment

A young lady recently advertised for a husband in a local paper. A man in a neighboring community answered the advertisement, and the correspondence culminated in a happy marriage. About 2 weeks after the wedding the young husband took sick and died, leaving the bride a big farm and $5,000 life insurance. If that little 50 cent ad didn't bring her results, we give it up.—H. L. Fryback in Colby Tribune.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Perner and daughter, Carolin, after spending several days here as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jack McKee, left Thursday for their home in Rosita, Coah., Mexico.

Mrs. Fannie Duncan came in Wednesday from San Diego, California on a visit to her nephews, Robert and Donald Duncan.

Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Waldroup and children of Oakdale, Tenn., visited Mrs. Waldroup's sister, Mrs. E. B. Litton.

Misses Ester and Gertrude Litton left the first of the week for Oakdale, Tenn., to visit relatives.

Mrs. P. E. Dishman and sons left Thursday evening for their home in Bryan Texas after a pleasant visit with friends and relatives.

Your clothes will always look neat and clean if you have them pressed and cleaned at the Royal Tailor Shop. Phone No. 6, and we will call for your package and deliver when you need.

Mrs. Lee Grigsby left Thursday for Del Rio to receive medical attention.

-INCONSISTENCY-

If you discovered a dead cat in your front yard, would you sprinkle it with perfume and leave it there?—The answer is evident. Yet what do you do with headaches, and other pains, which are Nature's danger signals and indicate some serious derangement within the body? Why try to smother the pain with dope, aspirin, and allow the causative condition to become worse and worse? Have the cause removed, and see how quick Nature will do away with pains and aches.
