TEXAS DEMOCRATS SELECT DELEGATES

Instructed to Vote for Mc-Adoo as Long as His Name Is Before Convention.

Waco, Tex.-Sounding a warning against the "reactionary elements in our own party," and declaring that "we must work hard to win the vicory for a progressive democracy," Marshall Hicks of San Antonio in his keynote speech before the state democratic convention Tuesday, following his election as chairman of the convention, told the group of Texas demperats that William G. McAdoo "Is the outstanding leader of progressive democrats and the only man with whom we can win in November.

Mr. Hicks' reference to Mr. McAdoo was greeted with cheering approval by the convention.

In closing his speech Mr. Hicks read a telegram from Mr. McAdoo addressed to the democrats of Texas assembled in convention. This telegram said: "I wish to convey the heartiest greetings to the democrats of Texas in convention at Waco: also to say to them that what they have aiready done and what they will do at New York will clinch the victory for progressive democracy just as they clinched it at Baltimore in 1912 for progressive democracy and Woodrow

They talked through the ment in this comfortable vein, and then when they began to smoke John leaned back in his chair and asked Henry where he'd been all this while. Between Dorothy's sailing-date and Joe's for his return to Chicago there was a direct relation. Back in August he had received this letter from Violet:

"They don't know," she said. "Nobody knows. He doesn't get drunk, Henry. You wouldn't know, unless you'd always known him, that there and when I did it made me—sick. No,

It didn't say anything to him about it.
What would be the use? It's been going on a long while, I guess. Since before he went North this spring."
Henry remembered the drink he'd seen Joe take after the April meeting.
"Something ought to be done about it," he said. "It's—ghastly, if it's really as bad as it seemed to you."
"It is," she asserted. "I am not mistaken about that. But ne's the only

It did not seem idiotic to Joe. It seemed sensitive, high-minded, thoroughbred. It added a glamorous brush-stroke or two to the romantic portrait of Violet his fancy had been so industriously painting. Also it fed his hopes. He read into its broken sentences admissions which fell but little short of promises.

Within a week of Jennie's return to Chicago, Joe conceived an attractive project. He'd go straight to New York from here, by way of the "Soo," and close his contracts for the year's out-October first. It would be fun to see and solemn enough when he came in. change when he tossed down those papers on his desk before their eyes. That would show them whether he was the old Joe or not!

The other not quite acknowledged half of the picture was an accidental rowed the money that they bought the | meeting with Violet after Dorothy's straw with. It was easy enough to boat had sailed. She had let him know what boat it was. It would be easy enough to manage since he knew the hotel the Williamson's were addicted to in New York; they'd both talked about it. He wouldn't go near her; indeed he'd take pains to avoid a chance meeting, until the child was out of buy, until we've established a market the way, but the possibilities offered for it, isn't anything the banks will' by the subsequent handful of hours were breath-taking especially if by first of August, and had a very jolly A prediction of John Williamson's that time he had his signed contracts

He spent Saturday morning alone in his room. His week's campaign had ended perforce on Friday, when everybody who could be any good to him disappeared, from the haunts of trade at any rate, for the week-end. It had got him nowhere. But-hadn't it? No nearer his goal, certainly. Yet he could not quite ignore an impression he had caught from the last man he had talked to. This man, pleasant enough and not too obviously in a hurry to be rid of him, had once or twice, at some assertion of Joe's, permitted himself to smile faintly and a little impatiently, as if he knew there was nothing to be dreaded from his competitors. Was this bland, noncommittal attitude he had been meeting everywhere a thing agreed upon? It was not a pleasant sort of hunch to get. His expectation of meeting Violet was doomed to be unrealized. Instead he ran into her husband at the little hotel the Williamsons made it a habit to stop at and John told him that they had changed their plans at the last minute and he had come down to see Dorothy off, leaving Violet at home at Lake Forest.

They took dinner together and John asked him what luck he was having in tract to buy as it was delivered during same afternoon, and John invited him marketing his raw lines. He said Henry had told him that he and Miss MacArthur were both worrying a lot about that phase of the business. (TO BE CONTINUED) tion comes from insuring the most rapid growth from the time the pigs are born. In this growth, bone development is of equal importance with the putting on of flesh, says L. A. Maynard of the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca.

LACK OF MINERALS IS CAUSE OF LOSS

"If the feed does not contain the essentials for making the proper bone, one result is a slower growth at a greater feed cost. Another result may be crippled hogs, due to the inability of the poorly nourished bony frame work to support the weight of flesh. Sometimes this trouble occurs in the young growing pigs; sometimes in the sow at farrowing time. At the state college at Cornell university, it is college at Cornell university, it is found that enough of the right minerals is the best way of insuring against cripples.

Pigs that eat a lot of tankage or fish meal do not suffer from a lack of minerals. On the other hand, rations made up largely of grains, garbage, and rations containing only limited amounts of skim milk, do not furnish enough of the bone-building minerals. lime and phosphorus. The following mixture will supply the needed minerals: Thirty parts of steam bone meal, 30 pounds of ground limestone, 20 pounds of salt, and 20 pounds of tankage.

The tankage flavors the mixture so that it is readily eaten in the self-also helps in developing the right kind of bone. Brood sows will eat it loose from a rack, but for young pigs it should be chopped and mixed as 5 per cent of the grain mixture.

Sunshine of Importance

at Hog-Farrowing Time The importance of having windows placed in the hog house so that the sun will shine into the beds at farrowing time is said by swine specialists to be of no small moment. To enable farmers to meet this need, E. R. Gross, professor of rural engineering at the New Jersey college of agriculture, New Brunswick, gives a simple rule based upon the angle of the sun's rays.

"A south window 2 feet above the floor will throw the rays of the sun on the floor 2 feet 2 Inches away from the wall and one in the roof 6 feet above the floor would let them strike 6 feet 6 Inches from a point directly beneath the window. Thus the first window will furnish sunshine to the pen on the south side of the house while the second window will supply it to the north pen. The exact location for the upper window must depend upon the width of the house. The wider the building, the higher must the upper window be placed.

"These figures are taken for noon, farrowing season. There is only a slight variation for north and south Jersey. The height and location of windows for any floor arrangement may easily be figured from the rule just given, which is, of course, applicable to buildings other than hog if Docked and Castrated Ram lambs should be castrated when between one and four weeks of age. All lambs should be docked when they are one or two weeks old. Either docking from or a sharp knife may be used for docking. The tall should be removed about one-half or three-quarters of an inch from the body. When docking irons are used the wound is seared by the hot iron and this prevents bleeding.
